IN publishing a FIFTH EDITION of the TOPOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF ENGLAND, embracing a description of each county, city, town, parish, and township in the kingdom, together with notices of the islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, &c., the Proprietors consider it necessary to make a few brief remarks for the information of those Subscribers who may not have seen the more explanatory Preface to the First edition.

With a view to secure a well-condensed and accurate account of every place possessing either civil or ecclesiastical jurisdiction, several gentlemen of competent talents and industry were originally engaged to make a general survey of the kingdom, and procure, by personal examination, the fullest information upon the different subjects contemplated in the plan of the work; their inquiries being facilitated by printed questions, including every particular to which their attention was to be directed. And the Proprietors beg to return their unfeigned thanks for the courtesy uniformly extended to their agents, during the time they were employed in their pursuit; and gratefully to acknowledge the prompt assistance received from the resident nobility, gentry, and clergy, and persons holding official situations, many of whom transmitted original manuscripts, containing much highly valuable matter never before published.

It was at first intended that the work should be confined simply to a topographical and statistical account of the various districts; but considering that a summary of the history of such places as either are, or have been, of importance, would render it more comprehensive and interesting, it was determined to introduce a concise narrative of the principal events which mark their progress from their origin to the present time; and to effect this, other gentlemen were entrusted with the task of selecting from general and local histories, authentic records, and manuscripts at the British Museum, and other public libraries, notices of the most remarkable occurrences connected with each spot.

Since the publication of the last edition of the Dictionary, the Proprietors have received from the gentry and clergy resident in different parts of the country, several thousands of communications, enabling them to embody much additional information, and to correct many statements which had become erroneous in consequence of the lapse of time, or from changes that had subsequently occurred; and to the parochial clergy, especially, they are deeply indebted for the contribution, in detail, of those facts with which they are necessarily best acquainted. In addition to these sources, the Proprietors have availed themselves of the opportunity of noticing in the present edition, where needful, the multifarious alterations caused by recent legislative enactments, whereof the principal are, the Act of the 2nd and 3rd William IV., c. 45, by which the system of parliamentary representation was remodelled, and new electoral divisions were formed; the Poor Law Act, by which the country was divided into unions; the Act relating to Episcopal Dioceses and Patronage; the Municipal Corporations' Act, which rendered the constitution and mode of government of the corporate bodies connected with about one hundred and seventy of the most distinguished places in England, totally different; and the Tithes' Commutation Act. And diligent use has also been made of some of the Reports that have been printed under the authority of Parliament, or of Commissions, including the last-published volumes of the Reports of the Charities' Commissioners, whose labours have been recently completed in 37 folio volumes; and the Report of the Commissioners appointed by his late Majesty to inquire into the Ecclesiastical Revenues. Another feature in this new Edition is, the introduction of the acreage of nearly every parish, given on the authority of statements forwarded by resident persons with whom the Proprietors have communicated; which information is rendered more important, as the returns of government, in consequence of the nature of the sources from which they are derived, are for the most part exceedingly inaccurate, and form but an approximation to the real facts.

The arrangement of the different places is strictly alphabetical, each being given under its proper name, and the epithet, if any, by which it is distinguished from another locality of the same designation, following after the chief heading: and the ensuing order of subjects, when the topics are noticed in the work, has been generally adopted:—1. Name of the place, and of the saint to whom the church is dedicated; situation; population, according to the census of 1841; origin, and etymology of name; summary of historical events, whether of a national or particular kind.—2. Local description; distinguishing features of surface; soil; number of acres, &c.; mines and quarries; scientific and literary institutions; sources of amusement; commerce, trade, and manufactures; facilities afforded by rivers, railroads, canals, &c.; markets and fairs.—3. Municipal government; privileges and immunities; courts of justice, prisons, &c.; parliamentary representation.—4. Ecclesiastical and religious establishments; particulars respecting livings, tithes, glebe, patronage; description of churches; dissenters' places of worship.—5. Scholastic and charitable foundations and endowments; benevolent institutions; hospitals; almshouses.—6. Monastic institutions; antiquities; mineral springs; natural phenomena; eminent natives and residents; title which the place confers.

The Maps accompanying the work are derived from the best authorities, corrected up to the present time, and are printed from steel plates. The Arms and Seals of the several cities, boroughs, corporate towns, bishoprics, universities, colleges, &c., have been drawn and engraved from impressions in wax, furnished by the respective corporate bodies; and although they have generally been either enlarged, or reduced, to one size, for the sake of uniformity, yet great care has been taken to preserve, in each instance, an exact fac-simile of the original; the difficulty of effecting which, from the mutilated state of many of the seals, was kindly removed by Sir George Nayler, and other gentlemen at the Heralds' College, who also furnished the Arms of some of the towns.

The Proprietors cannot entertain the hope that, in a work compiled from such a variety of sources, and containing notices so numerous and diversified, errors have not occurred; indeed, the information, even when collected upon the spot, from the most intelligent persons, has frequently been so contradictory as to require much labour and perseverance to reconcile and verify it. They have, however, regardless of expense, used the most indefatigable exertions to attain correctness, and to render the work as complete as possible; and they, therefore, trust that any occasional inaccuracy will receive the indulgence of the Subscribers.

The Proprietors had flattered themselves that this publication, the first edition of which exclusively occupied them nearly six years, at an outlay of more than FORTY-EIGHT THOUSAND POUNDS, would have escaped the depredation of piracy; but the result has been otherwise, and they have been compelled, in more than one instance, to seek the protection of the Court of Chancery: in the case relating to Messrs. Fullarton, of Glasgow, and King Square, London, the following Judgment was given by the Master of the Rolls:—

LEWIS versus FULLARTON.

 JUDGMENT DELIVERED BY THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, JULY 16, 1839.

IN this case the plaintiffs moved for an injunction to restrain the defendant, his agents, servants, and workmen, from further printing, publishing, selling, or delivering, or otherwise disposing of any copies of a book called "A NEW and COMPREHENSIVE GAZETTEER of ENGLAND and WALES," published by the defendant, or any part thereof. The plaintiffs are the publishers of a work called "LEWIS'S TOPOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY of ENGLAND:" it was prepared for publication at a very great expense, and with great literary assistance, and, according to the evidence, I think, consists partly of compilations and selections of former works, and partly of original compositions, obtained at their own cost; and the plaintiffs allege, as to such parts of their work as consisted of compilations and selections, those parts have been subjected to investigation and inquiry in the localities to which they relate. There is no doubt but that a work of this nature may be the subject of copyright, and on consideration of the evidence adduced in this case, I am clearly of opinion that for the purposes of this motion I must consider the plaintiffs as entitled to the copyright which they claim. The first edition of the plaintiffs' work was published in the month of May, 1831. It seems that some of the copies were corrected or varied in passing through the press, so that there are some differences between the copies of the plaintiffs' work which constituted their first edition. A second edition was published in December, 1833, and a third in June, 1835. The printing of the defendant's work commenced in the month of June, 1832, and it was completed in May, 1834. The plaintiffs having obtained a considerable sale for their work, were informed, about the end of the year 1837, that the sale was interfered with by a Scotch work; in February, 1838, they were informed that this Scotch work was the defendant's Gazetteer; and on an examination of the work about June, 1838, the plaintiffs, as they allege, first discovered the piracy of which they now complain, and against which they seek to be protected. It has been endeavoured to be shown, on the part of the defendant, that the plaintiffs must have been aware of the publication, contents, and nature of the defendant's work at a much earlier period, and ought to be now precluded from asking for an injunction by their own laches in not asking for relief sooner; but on reading the evidence as to this point, I think it appears, although they had previously been informed of the title of the defendant's publication, they did not know the character and contents of it till June, 1838, and as the bill was filed in the following month, there does not appear to have been any improper or unnecessary delay.

On a comparison of the two works it appears, and has necessarily been admitted, that a considerable portion of the matter which is contained in the plaintiffs' work has found its way into the work of defendant, for the defendant insists that, with respect to such parts of the plaintiffs' work as are not original, he had a right to go to the sources to which the plaintiffs had previously resorted; that with respect to such parts of the plaintiffs' work as are original, a lawful use only has been made of them: the compiler, it is said, has taken nothing animo furandi, but made only a fair use of a former publication on the subject of his own subsequent work. It is said the defendant's work was undertaken by his late father, who employed Mr. James Bell to prepare it for the press; that Mr. Bell was supplied with a great number of topographical and other works, and amongst others with the plaintiffs' Topographical Dictionary; that a fair use was made of all, and the plaintiffs have no right to complain of what has been done. Any man is entitled, no doubt, to write and publish a Topographical Dictionary, and to avail himself of the labours of all other writers whose works are not protected by copyright, and of all public sources of information; but whilst all are entitled to the common sources of information, none are entitled to save themselves trouble and expense by availing themselves, for their own profit, of other men's works, still entitled to the protection of copyright; and the question is, whether Mr. Bell did or did not, for the compilation of the work in which he was engaged, avail himself of the plaintiffs' work unlawfully and in violation of the plaintiffs' copyright; for the purpose of ascertaining which, I have read over a very considerable number of articles in both works (the trouble of comparing them has been greatly diminished by the exhibits prepared on both sides), and in the result, the examination appears to me to show that Mr. Bell, in the compilation of his Gazetteer, has extensively, and as far as my examination has gone it would not be too much to say habitually, made use of all that suited his purpose in the plaintiffs' work. It is evident that in a large proportion of the defendant's work no other labour has been employed than in copying the plaintiffs' work, and arranging the matter in a form which best suited the purpose of the compiler. Mr. Bell evidently did not think himself under any restraint, and probably did not think that the plaintiffs were entitled to copyright; and if that which he did could be considered as lawfully done, it is plain no protection whatever could be given to any work in the nature of a Gazetteer, Dictionary, Road Book, Calendar, or Map, or any other work the subject-matter of which is open to common observation and inquiry; and every man who had bestowed any amount of labour or expense in collecting and arranging information necessary and requisite for the production of such a work, might immediately on its publication be deprived of the fruit of his industry and ability.

Having gone carefully through all the articles commented on in the argument, and several others, I am of opinion the defendant's work is to a very considerable extent a piracy of the plaintiffs' copyright; to what extent, it is not fully or accurately ascertained; and it appears to me there are parts of the defendant's work, which, as a publication of this nature, may justly be considered as original; certainly there are parts which are not taken from the plaintiffs' work, and as to which, if they stood alone, the plaintiffs could have no right to an injunction; and under these circumstances, the difficulty which pressed on the mind of Lord Eldon, in the case of Mawman v. Tegg, arises in the present case. What was true in that case cannot be altogether denied in the present case; that notwithstanding all the pains which have been used, the inquiry as to how much has been pirated has left us in a great degree to conjecture, or rather we are left to conclude, from passages shown to have been copied from the original work, how much may have been so copied; and if this Court is to say, as Lord Eldon appears to have intimated, that the Court ought not to grant an injunction against the whole or the pirated parts of a work without first ascertaining, either by its own inspection, or otherwise, what was the quantity of matter pirated, then, undoubtedly, it would follow an injunction ought not now to be granted; for this reason only, that though a considerable part of the work appears to have been copied, yet as the two have not been compared in every part, it does not appear on the whole how much has been copied, or on the whole what parts of the defendant's work may, with regard to the plaintiffs' work at least, be considered as original. In the case I have mentioned, Lord Eldon made a very special order. I cannot help entertaining some doubt whether that order could have been acted on with advantage; the parties, however, did not prosecute it, and the report adds, the suit was compromised by the payment of a considerable sum of money from the defendant to the plaintiff. I conceive when it has been once ascertained that the defendant has in any degree violated the right of the plaintiff, the nature and extent of the order to be made must depend on the circumstances of the case, and the amount and extent of the evidence adduced. The piracy proved may be so inconsiderable, and so little likely to injure the plaintiff, that the Court may decline to interfere at all, and leave the plaintiff to his remedy at law: or the piracy proved may be so extensive, in a greater or less degree, as to leave it extremely doubtful whether the parts not examined are in any degree piratical, or to make it more or less probable they have been composed in the same manner, and collected from the like sources, as the parts which have been examined, and are in an equal degree liable to the charge of piracy. The hardship of restraining the publication of the whole of a work, when part of it consists of original matter, has always been urged in cases of this nature, and the answer which is given by Lord Eldon in the case to which I have referred, seems conclusive. He expresses himself thus:—"As to the hard consequences which would follow from granting an injunction when a very large proportion of the work is unquestionably original, I can only say, that if the parts which have been copied cannot be separated from those which are original without destroying the use and value of the original matter, he who has made an improper use of that which did not belong to him must suffer the consequences of so doing. If a man mixes what belongs to him with what belongs to me, and the mixture be forbidden by the law, he must again separate them, and he must bear all the mischief and loss which the separation may occasion. If an individual chooses, in any work, to mix my literary matter with his own, he must be restrained from publishing the literary matter which belongs to me; and if the parts of the work cannot be separated, and if by that means the injunction which restrained the publication of my literary matter prevents also the publication of his own literary matter, he has only himself to blame." It must be observed, also, that in cases of this nature nothing but an injunction can sufficiently or effectually protect the injured party; and in the same case Lord Eldon observes, "that though keeping an account of the profits may prevent the defendant from deriving any profit, as he may be ultimately obliged to account to the plaintiff for all his gains, yet if the work which the defendant is publishing in the mean time really affects the sale of the work which the plaintiff seeks to protect, the consequence is that the rendering the profits of the former work to the complaining party may not be a satisfaction to him for what he might have been enabled to have made of his own work, if it had been the only one published; for he would argue, that the profits of the defendant, as compared with the profits which he, the plaintiff, has been improperly prevented from making, could only be in the proportion of the price of a copy of the one book to the price of a copy of the other;” and on the whole, for the reasons I have stated, it appears to me that an injunction ought to be granted whenever it appears by sufficient evidence that a copyright exists, and that piracy has been committed to an extent which is likely to be seriously prejudicial to the plaintiff; and that the extent of the injunction must depend on the amount of proof and the nature of the proof.

The plaintiffs, in the present case, ask for an injunction to restrain the defendant from publishing the whole or any part of the defendant's Gazetteer. As it appears by the evidence that there are parts of the defendant's Gazetteer which are not borrowed from the plaintiffs' work, I cannot grant an injunction on those terms, and it becomes a question whether an injunction should be granted in general terms against such parts as have been pirated, or whether means should be taken to ascertain what particular parts have been pirated, in order that the publication of those particular parts may be especially restrained. Now it appears to me, not that it must be admitted by absolute proof and demonstration, for the two works have not been compared in every part, but upon the proof and demonstration of what has been examined, and as to the rest by strong inference and presumption, arising from the proof given as to those parts to which it applies, and from the nature of the work itself, and the circumstances under which it is proved to be composed, that if the parts pirated were taken away, though some articles would remain in them entire, yet the greater number would remain in so imperfect and incomplete a state that the defendant's work would lose its distinctive and useful character as a Gazetteer. If the defendant were desirous to avail himself, as he has an undoubted right to do, of any original matter of his own, or any matter which he has fairly taken from other sources, he would, I think, be under the necessity of re-composing his work for the purpose of separating that which appears to me to have been improperly taken from the plaintiffs' work. Lord Eldon says, with reference to former cases, his language has been, that there must be an injunction against such part as has been pirated; but in that case the part of the work which was affected with the character of piracy, was so very considerable, that if it were taken away there would have been nothing left to publish except a few broken sentences; and it was because the evidence before him did not enable him to ascertain the result, that he made the special order to which I have referred. But in this case, having availed myself of the evidence which has been so industriously collected during the long time this motion was pending, and having read with great care all the affidavits laid before me, and more particularly the affidavits of Mr. Holliday and Mr. Cunningham, I think I have reason on which I ought judicially to act; for, considering that the parts of the work which have been examined and compared afford a fair indication of the nature and character of those parts of the work which have not yet been examined and compared; and it appearing to me, under these circumstances, that if the parts affected with the character of piracy were taken away, there would be left, I do not say nothing but a few broken sentences, but an imperfect work, which could not to any useful extent serve the purposes of a Gazetteer, I think I ought to grant an injunction to restrain the publication of the parts which are pirated, without waiting till all the parts pirated can be ascertained; and therefore THE ORDER WHICH I SHALL MAKE WILL BE, THAT THE DEFENDANT, HIS AGENTS, SERVANTS, AND WORKMEN, BE RESTRAINED FROM FURTHER PRINTING, PUBLISHING, SELLING, OR DISPOSING OF ANY COPY OR COPIES OF A BOOK CALLED “THE NEW AND COMPREHENSIVE GAZETTEER, AND SO ON,” CONTAINING ANY ARTICLE OR ARTICLES, PASSAGE OR PASSAGES, COPIED, TAKEN, OR COLOURABLY ALTERED, FROM A BOOK CALLED “LEWIS'S TOPOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF ENGLAND,” PUBLISHED BY THE PLAINTIFFS.

TOPOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

A B B E

ABBAS-COMBE, or TEMPLE-COMBE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of HORETHORNE, E. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Wincanton, on the road to Blandford; containing 461 inhabitants. It derived the name of Temple-Combe from the military order of Knights Templars, who had an establishment here, which at the dissolution possessed a revenue of £128. 7. 9. The parish comprises by measurement 1884 acres of land, and contains good building stone of the granite species, and limestone, both of which are quarried. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$, and in the gift of the Rev. Thomas Fox: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £370, and the glebe consists of 38 acres. The church exhibits the unusual spectacle of a tower on the south side of the nave. There is a place of worship for Independents; and two schools are supported chiefly by subscription. Some remains of the chapel attached to the old priory-house are still to be seen.

ABBERBURY, county SALOP.—See ALBERBURY.

ABBERLEY (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Stourport; containing 559 inhabitants. There are 2564 acres in the parish, the surface of which is well watered by numerous brooks, and the soil is rather above the average in fertility. The village is situated to the right of the road leading from Worcester to Ludlow, in a valley surrounded by hills whose summits afford delightful prospects; the declivities are laid out in sheep-walks, and enriched with thriving plantations. Coal of excellent quality is worked to a considerable extent; and some limestone is found in the neighbourhood. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$, and in the gift of H. Bromley, Esq.: the incumbent's tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £333. 8. 6., and those of the improPRIATORS for one of £100. A school was founded under grants by Elizabeth and Victoria Walsh, in 1717, and has an income of £15 per annum, in addition to a house and garden; and there is also an infants' school. William Walsh, the poet, and a correspondent of Pope and Addison, was born here, in 1663.

ABBERLOFT, a hamlet, in the parish of WILLOUGHBY, union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 23 inhabitants.

ABBERTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, hundred of WINSTREE, N. division of Essex, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Colchester; containing 248 inhabitants. It is situated about a mile and a half to the east of the river Colne, and comprises by measurement 1067 acres. There are some gravel-pits, which afford good materials for repairing the roads; and chalk can be obtained at a distance of three miles, being brought by vessels into the Strode of Mersea island. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 7. $8\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £300, and there are 50 acres of glebe. The church is a small neat building, on an elevated site, with a square tower of brick. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a day school for girls is supported by subscription.

ABBERTON, a parish, in the union, and Upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Pershore; containing 81 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the south by a branch of the river Piddle, comprises 990 acres, of which nearly one-half is fine pasture land, much esteemed for its dairy produce. The hall is a large structure, commanding a beautiful panoramic view of the eastern part of the county. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 8. 1½., and in the patronage of the Sheldon family; net income, £161. Here is a mineral spring, the water of which is bitter and cathartic, being somewhat similar to that at Cheltenham.

ABBERWICK, a township, in the parish of EDLINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (W.) from Alnwick; containing 170 inhabitants. It includes the north-eastern part of the parish, adjoining Alnwick moor; and near it runs the river Aln, which is here joined by the Lemmington brook.

ABBEY, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of AXMINSTER, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON; containing 76 inhabitants.

ABBEY-LANDS, a township, in the parish and union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 295 inhabitants. Heckley House belongs to Josh. Hewitson, Esq.

ABBOT'S-ANN (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ANDOVER, partly in the hundred of WHERWELL, but chiefly in that of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of HANTS, 2¼ miles (S. W. by W.) from Andover; containing 619 inhabitants. This place anciently belonged to Hyde abbey, Winchester, in the earliest rolls of which it is noticed as the manor of Anna, and in later ones as Abbottes Anne. In a field, about a mile to the south-east of the church, were discovered a few years since the remains of what is believed to have been a Roman villa, from the pavement found there, and from its vicinity to Dunbury Hill. Some, however, have imagined them to be the ruins of a monastery, as the field is still called Monaster Field, and the opinion is favoured by the names of this and the neighbouring village of Monkston. At the beginning of the eighteenth century, the property passed by purchase into the Pitt family, by one of whom, Governor Pitt (who brought the Pitt diamond into Europe), the church was rebuilt. The parish comprises about 3000 acres, and is intersected by the Salisbury and great western road; a canal from Andover to Southampton passes within a mile. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £42. 17. 6., and in the patronage of Miss Burrough: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £790, and there are about 50 acres of glebe, and a good glebe-house. The church is a substantial brick edifice relieved with stone, with a handsome tower. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a school is supported by the rector.

ABBOT'S-ASTLEY.—See ASTLEY, ABBOT'S.—All places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

ABBOTSBURY (St. NICHOLAS), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of WEYMOUTH, hundred of UGGSCOMBE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 8¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Dorchester, and 129 (S. W. by W.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of Rodden and Elworth, 1005 inhabitants. The name of this place is evidently derived from its ancient possessors, the abbots of the monastery of St. Peter, which is supposed to have been founded in 1044, by Orcus, or Orking, steward of the household of Canute the Great, and Tola his wife, for monks of the Benedictine order. According to the register of the abbey it appears that a church was erected here at a very early period, by Bertulphus, a priest, and dedicated to St. Peter. This having afterwards become a place of retreat for the West Saxon kings, and the territory having come into the possession of Canute, lands to a considerable extent were given by him to Orcus, by whom and Tola, or Thole, dying without issue, they were subsequently granted to the church of St. Peter, built a long time previously, and then forsaken and in decay, on account of its having been frequently infested by pirates. Orcus erected the monastery, which occupied a large extent of ground, and, in progress of time, was endowed with rich grants and divers immunities, and was frequently rebuilt: the remains consist of a gateway and portions of the walls. Its revenue, at the dissolution, was estimated at £485. 3. 5.: it was granted to Sir Giles Strangeways, and on its site was erected a mansion, which, having been garrisoned for the king, in 1644, was attacked by Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, and burnt to the ground. The church was also occupied by a party of royalists, who surrendered before it sustained any damage.

The TOWN, situated in a valley surrounded by lofty hills, near the sea-shore, consists of three streets, partially paved, and is well supplied with water: the western part of it was consumed by fire in 1706. Fishing is the chief occupation of the inhabitants, great quantities of mackerel being taken on the coast. The weaving of cotton was introduced here about thirty years since, but has of late much declined. The market, which has fallen into disuse, was held on Thursday, and was granted, together with two fairs, to Sir John Strangeways in the 8th of James I., a former market, granted to one of the abbots, and held on Friday, having been long discontinued. One of the fairs has also been discontinued; the other, which is for sheep and toys, is held on the 10th of July. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £140; patron and impropiator, the Earl of Ilchester, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £127. 10. The church is a large handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, and is thought to have contained the remains of the founder of the abbey and his wife, which were removed hither from the conventual church at the dissolution. A school, originally founded for twenty boys, was further endowed in 1754, by Mrs. Horner, with £21 per annum, for instructing ten additional boys; and a charity school, for clothing and educating twenty girls, is supported by the Countess of Ilchester, who has also established an infants' school. St. Catherine's chapel, supposed to have been erected in the reign of Edward IV., stands on an eminence southwest of the town, and serves only as a land-mark: it is built wholly of freestone dug out of the hill on which it is situated; the roof is finely groined, and on each side is a handsome porch. About a mile and a half to the west of Abbotsbury is an ancient trenchment occupying an area of nearly 20 acres; and near the town is a cromlech.

ABBOTSHAM (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of BIDEFORD, hundred of SHEBBEAR, Great Torrington and N. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (W.) from Bideford; containing, with the hamlets of Shepperton and Littleham, 414 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the shore of Barnstaple Bay, is distinguished for a memorable victory over the Danes, who besieged the fortress, called Kenwith or Kenwic Castle, towards the close of the ninth century, on which occasion their main western army was routed, and 1200 of them, including their leader, slain, and their consecrated standard captured. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 4. 7.; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the owners and occupiers of land are the impropiators. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £32. 10., and the vicarial for £120; and there are nearly 34 acres of glebe. A school is partly supported by the principal proprietor of land, the vicar, and the curate.

ABBOT-SIDE, HIGH, a township, in the parish of AYSGARTH, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 1½ mile (N. W. by W.) from Hawes; containing, with the chapelries of Hardraw and Helbeck-Lunds, and the hamlets of Cotterdale, Fosdale, Litherskew, Sedbusk, Shaw, and Simonstone, 574 inhabitants. The two townships of Abbot-Side received their names from the monks of Jervaulx abbey, who had a settlement and considerable property in the district. This township, which comprises by computation 13,000 acres, is altogether wild and mountainous, and consists of moors, dales, and ravines; it is rich in springs, waterfalls, rocks, and caves, and a variety of interesting natural curiosities; and the magnificent cataract called Hardraw Scarr, 102 feet in height, with its stupendous rocks and romantic caverns, and the elevation of Shunner Fell, 2329 feet above the level of the sea, and commanding extensive views of several counties, are both situated in the township. The river Ure, on which are several beautiful waterfalls, rises at the head of the valley. A rent-charge of £163 has been awarded to Trinity College, Cambridge, as a commutation in lieu of the impropriate tithes.

ABBOT-SIDE, LOW, a township, in the parish of AYSGARTH, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the hamlets of Grange, Bow-bridge, Helme, and Shawcote, 166 inhabitants. This place is on the north side of the river Ure, and comprises by computation about 5000 acres of land: Whitfield Gill, in which is the picturesque waterfall called Whitfield Force, separates the township from that of Askrigg. Here the monks of Jervaulx abbey were first seated, and afterwards maintained a cell. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £42, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge. Two poor widows of the place, and four others from Askrigg, are eligible to the almshouses at Grange, founded and endowed by Christopher Alderson, in 1807.

ABBOTSLEY (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of ST. NEOT'S, hundred of TOSELAND, county of HUNTINGDON, 4½ miles (S. E.) from St. Neot's; containing 443 inhabitants. It comprises about 1700 acres, and is bounded by a brook formed by the draining of the adjacent lands, and which, passing onward between three and four miles, discharges itself into the river Ouse at St. Neot's. The pillow-lace manufacture affords employment to the female population. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 17.; net income, £85; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The glebe consists of 185 acres, of which 125 were allotted to the vicar in lieu of the small tithes on the inclosure of the waste lands in 1837; the glebe-house has been rebuilt. The church is an ancient edifice, consisting of a nave, chancel, two aisles, and a tower at the west end, with a north and south porch, a west entrance through the tower, and a chancel door; it is supposed to have been erected between the accessions of William Rufus and Edward III., and was thoroughly repaired in 1837. A Roman road once passed along the western boundary of the parish, and in its track coins of the Roman emperors are occasionally found. Dr. Abbott, father of the Rt. Hon. Charles Abbott, speaker of the house of commons, subsequently created Lord Colchester, was vicar here in the reign of George II.

ABBOTSTON (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of ALRESFORD, hundred of BOUNTISBOROUGH, Winchester and N. divisions of HANTS, 2¾ miles (N. W.) from New Alresford. The living is a rectory, united to the vicarage of Itchin-Stoke, and valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.: the church is in ruins. Here are the remains of some religious house, of which there is no authentic account.

ABDASTON (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Eccleshall; comprising the townships of Abdaston, Bishop's Offlow, Flashbrook and Tunstall, and the hamlet of Knighton, and containing 610 inhabitants, of which number 39 are in the township of Abdaston. It consists of about 4000 acres, divided into nearly equal portions of arable and pasture, with a small quantity of woodland. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean of Lichfield, the appropriator; net income, £100. The tithes have been commuted for £562. 10. per annum, and the incumbent receives a rent-charge of £2. 10. In 1724, John Wright bequeathed a small portion of land for the support and education of the poor; and, in 1764, Richard Whitworth gave a house and land for similar purposes.

ABDON (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 12 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bridgenorth; containing 155 inhabitants. It comprises upwards of 1100 acres, of which about 190 are arable, 664 meadow and pasture, and 260 waste land; the surface is very irregular, and the soil strong red clay in the higher grounds, with a sheep-walk, having much gorse and fern; the lower grounds are more favourable to agriculture. A few pits on the hill yield an inferior coal, much of which is used in lime-works; formerly there were several iron forges in the neighbourhood. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8.; patron, Hon. S. Herbert; net income, £147, arising from tithes and a small estate, with 49 acres of glebe, of which 22 are in the parish of Stoke St. Milborough. The church is a rude structure, with walls of great thickness, and much of it appears to have been rebuilt about 150 or 200 years ago; in the chancel is a window in the decorated style. Abdon Burf, on the summit of Brown Clee hill, is a remarkable oval inclosure of basalt stones, evidently British; the area measures from north to south 1317 feet, and at its widest point from east to west it is 660 feet; and huge blocks of stone are scattered within it, of which several are arranged in circles.

ABERFORD (ST. RICHARD), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. by E.) from Wetherby, and 186 $\frac{1}{2}$ (N. N. W.) from London, on the road to Carlisle; comprising the townships of Aberford, Parlington, and Sturton-Grange, and containing 1071 inhabitants, of whom 782 are in the townships of Aberford. The town, which is situated in the parishes of Aberford and Sherburn, is built on the gentle acclivity of a rock of limestone, near the small river Cock, a stream abounding with trout and eels, over which is an excellent stone-bridge. It consists principally of one long street: the houses are in general of stone, and many of them are handsome; the air is pure and salubrious, and the environs are thickly studded with elegant villas. The parish comprises 3820 acres of fertile land; there are extensive strata of limestone, and a productive coal-mine, from which a railway has been laid down to a depôt in the town, and an extensive trade is carried on in that article. The Leeds and Selby railway passes within three miles. The market, which was on Wednesday, has been discontinued; but a customary market is held on Friday, and fairs take place on the last Monday in April and May, the first Monday in October, the first Monday after the 18th of that month, and the first Monday after the 2nd of November. The magistrates hold a petty-session for the division every Thursday, and a court of requests for the recovery of small debts was established by act of parliament in 1839; the town has also lately been made a polling-place for the West Riding. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 1. 8., and in the patronage of Oriel College, Oxford, to which establishment, and the Misses Gascoigne, the impropriation belongs; net income, £305. The church is an ancient structure, in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school has been built on the site of one formerly endowed, by Lady Elizabeth Hastings, with £10 per annum. At the distance of a mile north of Aberford are vestiges of Castle-Cary, an ancient Norman fortification. The battle of Towton, which decided the long continued war between the Houses of York and Lancaster, took place within two miles of the town. The Roman road is the parish boundary south of the bridge, and cuts off a small district on the north, called Greystone Field. The Rev. Mr. Waters, a former incumbent, died at the advanced age of 114 years.

ABERGAVENNY (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the division and hundred of ABERGAVENNY, county of MONMOUTH, 16 miles (W. by N.) from Monmouth, and 145 (W. by N.) from London, on the road to Brecon; comprising the hamlets of Hardwick and Llwyndù, and containing 4953 inhabitants, of whom 2720 are in the town. This was the Gobannium of Antoninus, a Roman station so called from the river Gobannius, now Gavenny, from which the present name of the town is formed, by prefixing the Welsh word Aber, denoting its situation near the mouth of that river. Soon after the Conquest, a castle was erected here, on an eminence overlooking the Usk, by Hameline de Balun, or Baladun, one of William's followers, which was besieged and taken in 1215, by Llewelyn, Prince of Wales: the only remains are the exterior walls, which appear to have been erected in the time of Henry II., and within which a neat modern house has been built. De Balun also founded a priory for Benedictine monks, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £59. 4.: it stood in Monk-street, and the site is now occupied by a modern dwelling, called the Priory House. The town, which is lighted with gas and well supplied with water, is beautifully situated at the extremity of a pass, where the mountains abruptly terminate, and is watered by the rivers Usk, Gavenny, and Kibby, over the first of which is an ancient bridge of fifteen arches, including several dry arches on each side. The streets are narrow, and the houses irregularly built; but considerable improvements have been made by the enlargement of the market-place, and the removal of numerous projections in front of the buildings; and the salubrity of the air, and the picturesque beauty of the surrounding scenery, attract numerous visitors during the summer months. Assemblies are occasionally held. The trade is principally in wool, a considerable quantity of which is sold on the market-days during the months of June and July: the mountains in the neighbourhood abound with coal and iron-stone, and in the surrounding districts numerous iron-works have been established. The Monmouthshire and Brecon canal, which passes within a mile of the town, affords great facility in distributing to every part of the kingdom the produce of the mines; and there is also a tram-road to Hereford. The market-days are Tuesday and Saturday, the former chiefly for corn: the fairs are held on the third Tuesday in March, May 14th (which is the principal), June 24th, the Tuesday before July 20th (at which two last a great quantity of wool is sold), Sept. 25th, and Nov. 19th. The charter of incorporation, by which the government of the town was vested in a bailiff, recorder, and twenty-seven burgesses, was forfeited in the reign of William III., and the town is now within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty-session every Wednesday.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 0. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £451; patron, C. Bailey, Esq.; impropiator, Mrs. Bagot. The church is a spacious structure, the body and side-aisles of which were taken down in 1828, and rebuilt, and galleries erected; there are several very ancient monuments, principally of the Herberts, some of whom were killed at the battle of Agincourt. A neat pile of building in the Tudor style, consisting of an oblong square, with a handsome church dedicated to the Holy Trinity in the centre, was erected in 1840, at the sole expense of Miss Rachel Herbert, of The Hill, near the town: the south side of the square consists of a residence for the minister, and four cottages, the north side having the same number of cottages, and a schoolroom for fifty girls, with apartments for the mistress; Miss Herbert, who has endowed the cottages, which are for aged women, is patroness for life, and the bishop of the diocese will afterwards appoint to the living, which Miss Herbert has endowed with £3000. There are two places of worship for Baptists, and one each for Independents, English and Welsh Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school, founded by Henry VIII. in 1543, and formerly under the management of the corporation, was, on the forfeiture of their charter, placed under the control of the Master and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford, who appoint the master, with preference to a fellow of that college; a writing-master also is appointed. The school-house was formerly the parochial church of St. John, which was converted to this purpose at the dissolution: about the middle of the last century it was rebuilt; but still, from its embattled tower, presents the appearance of an ecclesiastical structure. William Prichard, in 1623, founded a scholarship in Jesus' College, to which boys educated at this school are eligible. A national school is supported partly by voluntary contributions, and partly from the grammar school fund; and another school, for 50 girls, is maintained wholly by subscription. The poor law union of Abergavenny comprises 26 parishes or places in the county of Monmouth, and 2 in the county of Hereford, and contains a population of 50,834. A variety of Roman coins, among which were a gold Otho, some bricks inscribed "Leg. II. Aug.," and a sudatory, have been discovered in the town; and within half a mile of it are the remains of a Roman camp, near which was a chapel of ease, now converted into a farm-house. Abergavenny confers the title of Earl on the family of Neville; the earldom, like those of Arundel and Berkeley, is a local dignity, attached to the possession of the castle, and the only one now subsisting of those baronies with which the Norman warriors, who assisted in the subjugation of Wales, were rewarded.

ABERYSTWITH (St. Peter), a parish, in the union, division, and hundred, of ABERGAVENTNY, county of MONMOUTH, 9 miles (S. W. by W.) from Abergavenny; containing 11,272 inhabitants. This parish, which is sometimes called "Blaenau," comprises about 11,000 acres by computation, and abounds with valuable mines of iron, which are worked on a very extensive scale: it is intersected by numerous tram-roads, communicating with the Brecon and Monmouth canals, leading to Newport, where the produce of the various works is shipped. A quarry of stone used for roofing and paving, is also partially worked. There are villages in the parish, connected with the iron-works of Ebbw-vale, Nanty-Glo, Coalbrook-vale, Blaina, and Cwmelyn. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with nearly the whole of the rectorial tithes, and in the gift of the Earl of Abergavenny: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £5. 10., and those of the incumbent for £300. The church is a plain structure, erected in 1827. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, Calvinists, and Ranters; and a national schoolroom, which is licensed as a chapel.

ABINGDON, a borough and market-town, having exclusive jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, of which it is the county town, 6 miles (S.) from Oxford, 26 (N. W. by N.) from Reading, and 56 (W. N. W.) from London; containing, exclusively of that part of the parish of St. Helen which is in the hundred of Hormer, 5585 inhabitants; of which number 4947 are in the parish of St. Helen, and 638 in that of St. Nicholas. This place, according to a manuscript in the Cottonian library, quoted by Dugdale, was, in the time of the Britons, a city of considerable importance, and distinguished as a royal residence, to which the people resorted to assist at the great councils of the nation. By the Saxons it was called Scovechesham, or Sewsham, but acquired the name of Abendon, "the town of the abbey," on the removal hither, in 680, of a monastic institution previously founded at Bagley Wood, now an extra-parochial liberty in the vicinity, by Cissa, viceroy of Centwine, ninth king of Wessex, on which Ceadwalla, his son and successor, bestowed the town and its appendages. After the establishment of the monastery, Offa, King of Mercia, on a visit to Abingdon, was so much pleased with the situation, that he erected a palace here, in which he and his immediate successors, Egferth and Cenwulf, occasionally resided. The monastery continued to flourish till 871, when it was destroyed by the Danes; in consequence of which, Edred, grandson of Alfred, in 955, laid the first stone of a new monastery, which was completed after his death by the abbot Ethelwold, and his successor Ordgar, and which, from the extent of its endowments and privileges, subsequently augmented by Edgar and Canute the Great, was raised to the dignity of a mitred abbey. William the Conqueror celebrated the festival of Easter at Abingdon, in 1084, where he was sumptuously entertained by Robert D'Oilly, one of the most powerful barons of the time, under whose care he left his son Henry to be educated in this convent, where the prince imbibed those acquirements which afterwards procured for him the surname of Beauclerc. At the dissolution, the revenue of the abbey was £1876. 10. 9. A nunnery was also founded here by Cilla, niece of Cissa, over which she presided till her death, when it was removed to Witham: its site was afterwards given, by Edward VI., to Christ's hospital in this town. The Guild of the Holy Cross was instituted in St. Helen's church prior to the reign of Richard II., and appears to have been refounded in that of Henry V., when the brethren erected bridges at Burford and Culhamford, where the ferry across the river was so dangerous that passengers and cattle were frequently lost: it was dissolved in 1547, at which period its revenue amounted to £85. 15. 6., and, in 1553, was appropriated to the endowment of Christ's hospital. In the early part of the civil war of the seventeenth century, Charles I. garrisoned Abingdon, where he established the head-quarters of his cavalry; but on the retreat of the royal forces to Oxford, in 1644, the Earl of Essex took possession of it, and garrisoned it for the parliament; and, a few days afterwards, Waller's army, which had been stationed near Wantage, entered this town, and among other excesses destroyed the cross in the market-place, at which, in 1641, the accommodation with the Scots was celebrated by 2000 choristers: this cross is particularly noticed by Camden for its beauty, and was the model of one afterwards erected at Coventry. Sir Stephen Hawkins, in 1645, and Prince Rupert, in the following year, attacked the garrison unsuccessfully: on these occasions the defenders put every Irish prisoner to death, without trial, whence the expression "Abingdon law."

The town, which is pleasantly situated at the influx of the small river Ock into the Thames, is handsomely built, and consists of several spacious streets diverging from the market-place; it is also well paved and lighted, under a local act of the 6th of George IV., and is amply supplied with water. The several bridges near the town have been widened and improved by voluntary contributions, and the causeway connected with Culham bridge forms a pleasant promenade. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1841. Races take place here in September, at which time assemblies are held in the council-chamber. The manufacture of woollen goods was formerly carried on to a great extent, but has quite declined; and during the late war it had a good trade in sail-cloth, sacking, and coarse manufactures of a similar description; but, owing to the competition of the establishments in the north of England and in Scotland, this source of employment has also declined. The trade now consists in corn and in malt, and is carried on to a considerable extent. Several wharfs and warehouses have been constructed, where the Wilts and Berks canal joins the Thames, near its confluence with the Ock. The market-days are Monday, chiefly for corn (of which a large quantity is sold), and Friday, for provision only: fairs for horses and horned cattle are held on the first Monday in Lent, May 6th, June 20th, Aug. 5th, Sept. 19th, the Monday before Old Michaelmas day (a statute fair), Monday after Oct. 12th (a great market), and Dec. 11th; and there is also a fair for wool.

The BOROUGH was incorporated by Philip and Mary in 1555-6, and subsequent charters were granted by Elizabeth, James I., and George III., chiefly confirmatory of the original, by which the corporation was styled the "Mayor, Bailiffs, and Burgesses of the borough of Abingdon;" but the corporation is now, under the Municipal Act of 1836, styled the "Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses," which has been adopted as the motto of their new seal; and consists of a mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors: the burgesses are about 300 in number, and the mayor, late mayor, and recorder, with four others, are justices for the borough, of which the municipal and parliamentary boundaries are the same. A court of sessions is held quarterly, with jurisdiction over felonies and misdemeanors; a court of record for the recovery of debts not exceeding £10 takes place every Tuesday, on which day the magistrates hold also a petty-session; and courts leet and view of frankpledge are held by the mayor within a month after Easter and Michaelmas. The old borough gaol has been converted into a police station-house and other uses, and the borough justices have the privilege of committing prisoners to the county bridewell; the prisoners, however, being supported out of the borough rate. The town returns a member to parliament: the elective franchise is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot and not receiving alms; and the mayor is the returning officer. The members for the county are elected at Abingdon; and the county magistrates hold a petty-session on alternate Mondays for the Abingdon division. The market-house is a spacious and elegant building of freestone, erected by the corporation in 1678, having a commodious hall in which the county court and the Nisi Prius court at the assizes are held, and public business connected with the borough or county is transacted. The county bridewell, a handsome stone edifice, erected in 1811, at an expense of £26,000, comprises a neat court-house, in which the crown court at the summer assizes and the July county sessions are held; the October sessions take place here and at Reading alternately.

Abingdon comprises the parishes of ST. HELEN and ST. NICHOLAS; the former including, in the out-parish, part of the townships of Shippon and Northcourt and the whole of Sandford, Barton, and Pumney; and the latter, the remainder of Shippon and Northcourt, also some lands in Sunningwell and Bayworth, which are all without the limits of the borough. The living of St. Helen's is a vicarage, with that of St. Nicholas and the chapelry of Drayton annexed, valued in the king's books at £29. 11. 3., and having a net income of £225; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the impropriation belongs to the Crown and others. The church is a handsome structure, in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a lofty spire: In addition to the annexed vicarage, there is also a discharged sinecure rectory belonging to the parish of St. Nicholas, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income £30. The church of St. Nicholas, built about the close of the thirteenth, or commencement of the fourteenth, century, has some remains of Norman architecture. Mr. Wrigglesworth left lands and tenements, in Abingdon, for the support of a lecture in St. Helen's church, to be delivered every Saturday evening from Michaelmas to Lady-day, and at the church at Marcham (a village two miles and a half distant) on every Sunday morning from Lady-day till Michaelmas. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. The Free Grammar school, for the education of "Threescore and thirteen" boys was founded in 1563, by John Royle, and endowed with two messuages in Birch-in-lane, London, now occupied by part of the premises belonging to the London Assurance Company. In 1608, William Bennett, of "Marlborowe," left lands in "Brodeblundon" for the maintenance of six poor scholars in Royle's school, who are elected by the master and governors of Christ's hospital in this town, and, from the increase of the funds, are clothed, and instructed also in writing and arithmetic; and in 1609, Thomas Tesdale gave certain lands in the county of Warwick, to maintain an usher, whose salary is £120. 6. per annum. The school is entitled to six scholarships at Pembroke College, Oxford, established by Thomas Tesdale, two to be filled by the founder's kin, and the others from Abingdon school; and to four more scholarships at the same college, instituted by Richard Wightwick, two for the founder's kin. Preference is given to boys on Bennett's foundation, and the master's private pupils are eligible. Several bequests have also been left for the education of poor boys and girls in other schools; and a national and a British school are carried on.

Christ's Hospital, on the west side of St. Helen's church, erected in 1446, originally belonged to the fraternity of the Holy Cross, on the dissolution of which establishment, in 1547, the inhabitants applied, through Sir John Mason, to King Edward VI., for the restoration of their lost estates, and the foundation of an hospital for the relief of the poor of the town; in compliance with which application that monarch, by letters patent in 1553, founded the hospital under its present name, and incorporated twelve persons for its government, by the name of "The Master and Governors of the Hospital of Christ." It consists of almshouses for six poor men and six women and a nurse, with cloisters, and a handsome hall, where prayers are read morning and evening to the inmates. An almshouse was built in 1718, for eighteen men or women; and there is another, near the river Isis, for six men or women, to which Mr. Beasley, in 1826, bequeathed £600 stock, the interest to be paid weekly, and the late Thomas Knight, Esq., in 1836, left £600 three and a half per cents. St. John's hospital, in the Vineyard, was endowed before the Reformation, for six poor men, and rebuilt by the corporation, in 1801: B. Bedwell, Esq., was a liberal contributor to it, and Mr. Beasley added £600 stock to the endowment. An almshouse near St. Helen's church was erected in 1707, by Charles Twitty, for the maintenance of three men and three women; bequests of £200 each, by John Bedwell, in 1799, and Samuel Cripps, in 1819, and of £600 three per cent. stock by Mr. Beasley, in 1826, have been added to the original endowment. There are also houses for four men and four women, endowed in 1733, by Benjamin Tomkins; and various charitable bequests have been made to the poor of the town. The union of Abingdon comprises 27 parishes or places, in the county of Berks, and 11 in that of Oxford, and contains a population of 18,789. The remains of the abbey consist chiefly of the gateway entrance, which, though greatly mutilated, displays some beautiful details of the later style of English architecture. St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury; Sir John Mason, British ambassador at the court of France, and chancellor of the University of Oxford; and the late Lord Colchester, were natives of this place; which confers the title of Earl on the family of Bertie.

ABINGER (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of DORKING, First division of the hundred of WOTTON, W. division of SURREY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Dorking; containing 920 inhabitants. This parish is noticed in the Domesday survey, under the appellation of Abinebourne; it comprises a small hamlet called Hammer, from an iron hammer mill formerly erected here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Evelyn family: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £584, and there are 85 acres of glebe. The church, which occupies an elevated site, is an ancient edifice, with a low wooden tower and pyramidal spire. A school was commenced in 1829, and is supported by subscription. Lady Evelyn, in 1817, left £500 to the poor of this and the adjoining parish of Wotton; and the parish enjoys benefit from Henry Smith's charity. Oakham Grove was the seat of the celebrated Sir John Evelyn, and Parkhurst, of Lord Macartney. Sir James Scarlett was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Abinger in 1835, having just previously been created chief baron of the exchequer.

ABINGHALL (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WESTBURY, hundred of ST. BRIAVELLS, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Newnham; containing 239 inhabitants. This place, formerly called Abbenhall, derived its name from having been the residence of the abbots of Flaxley. It contains 691 acres, of which 306 are arable, 238 pasture, and 121 woodland; the surface is hilly, and the soil in general sandy, but towards the east it is rich and fertile, and the scenery rurally picturesque. There are mines of coal and iron ore, and stone is quarried; and facilities of conveyance are afforded by tram-roads and the Severn. The manufacture of paper is carried on to a considerable extent at Gun's mills, formerly an iron furnace; the machinery is worked by a stream issuing from St. Anthony's well, the water of which is reputed to be efficacious in cutaneous diseases. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Dean of Llandaff: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £136. 17., and there are 26 acres of glebe. The church is an old edifice, in the early English style.

ABINGTON (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the hundred of SPELHOE, union, and S. division of the county, of NORTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Northampton; containing 143 inhabitants. This was the residence and burial-place of Elizabeth Hall, granddaughter of the immortal Shakspeare, and widow of Thomas Nash, Esq.: she married Sir John Bernard, lord of the manor of Abington, and resided here till her death. The parish, which is bounded on the south and south-east by the river Nene, comprises 1140 acres; and the roads to Kettering and Wellingborough pass through it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20; net income, £200; patron, J. H. Thursby, Esq. The church exhibits various styles of English architecture.

ABINGTON, GREAT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LINTON, hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Linton; containing 358 inhabitants. This place was formerly in the possession of the Veres, Earls of Oxford, to one of whom a market on Friday, to be held here, was granted about 1256, with a fair on the festival of St. Lawrence, both of which have been long discontinued. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 16. 3.; net income, £62; patron and impropiator, T. Mortlock, Esq. The tithes, with some exceptions, were commuted for land under an inclosure act in 1801. A school for girls is supported by subscription.

ABINGTON-IN-THE-CLAY, or ABINGTON-PIGOTS (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ROYSTON, hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Royston; containing 232 inhabitants. It had formerly the privilege of holding a market on Friday, granted about the year 1335 to the Bassingbourns. The parish comprises 1239a. 8p., of which 885 acres are arable, 268 meadow, 64 wood, and 19 occupied by cottages. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 2. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of M. G. F. Pigott, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £354, and there are 28 acres of glebe. A school is supported by subscription.

ABINGTON, LITTLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LINTON, hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Linton; containing 277 inhabitants. This place appears to be of some antiquity, its church having been given by Stephen, Earl of Brittany, to the monastery of St. Mary in York, subsequently to which, the prior of Pentney, in Norfolk, possessed it. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. $5\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £87; patron, T. Mortlock, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment by an inclosure act in 1801.

AB-KETTLEBY (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Melton-Mowbray, on the road to Nottingham; containing, with the hamlet of Holwell, 380 inhabitants. This parish, situated near the border of Nottinghamshire, comprises 2127 acres, of which 660 are arable, and 1467 pasture. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Bingham: the tithes for the waste grounds inclosed in the parish were commuted for land by an inclosure act in 1761. At Holwell is a chapel of ease. There is a school for children of both sexes, supported by the incumbent.

ABLINGTON, a tything, in the parish of BIBURY, union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S-BARROW, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Fairford; containing 96 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £364. 5.

ABLINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of FIGHEL-DEAN, union and hundred of AMESBURY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 137 inhabitants.

ABNEY, a hamlet, in the parish of HOPE, union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Tideswell; containing 102 inhabitants.

ABRAM, a township, in the parish and union of WIGAN, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Newton-in-Mackerfield; containing 901 inhabitants, including 35 in barges. It comprises 1769 acres, of which 442 are arable, and 1327 pasture. A district church, dedicated to St. John, has lately been built, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society granted £200; and a school-house was erected, in 1824, at the cost of Mrs. Bevan, of Lowton house. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £242.

ABRIDGE, a hamlet, in the parish of LAMBOURN, union and hundred of ONGAR, S. division of ESSEX, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Romford. This place, which is on the high road to Chipping-Ongar, and is bounded on the north by the river Roding, was formerly called Afebrugge, or Afebridge; it has within the last few years been rapidly increasing, and contains several handsome houses. A chapel of ease was erected in 1833; a national school has been established; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ABSON.—See WICK and ABSON.

ABTHORPE (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of TOWCESTER, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Towcester; containing, with the hamlets of Charlock and Foscot, 449 inhabitants. This place was formerly a chapelry dependent upon the vicarage of Towcester, from which it was separated by act of parliament in 1737, and constituted a distinct parish. It is situated on the right bank of the river Tow, which bounds it on the north-west; and consists of 1895*a.* 3*r.* 17*p.* Limestone is quarried. The living is a vicarage not in charge; net income, £184; patrons, alternately, the Bishop of Lichfield, and Samuel Blencowe, Esq., and others, to whom the impropriation also belongs. The tithes were partially commuted for land under an inclosure act in 1822; and those of the Bishop have been recently commuted for a rent-charge of £220; there are about 50 acres of appropriate glebe. Mrs. Jane Leeson, by will dated in 1646, bequeathed certain property to the poor in this and other villages, and also for the instruction of children in a school-house here, previously erected at her expense: the estate at Abthorpe comprises a dwelling-house and about 60 acres of land, together with an allotment of nearly 57 acres under the act of inclosure.

ABY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Alford; containing, with the hamlet of Greenfield, 312 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united, in 1732, to the rectory of Belleau, and valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 6.

ACASTER-MALBIS (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of YORK, partly in the AINSTY wapentake and W. riding, but chiefly in the wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, E. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from York; containing 748 inhabitants, of which number 322 are in the township of Acaster-Malbis. This place partly derives its name from the family of Malby, who flourished here for some centuries after the Conquest, until at length a daughter and heiress was married to Fairfax, of Walton, created Viscount Emley. It comprises by computation 1839 acres, and is intersected by the navigable river Ouse. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £56; patron and impropiator, Sir F. Lawley, Bart. A school is endowed with land given by John Knowles in 1603, which produces £29. 4. 7. per annum, and is vested in feoffees, who appoint fourteen poor children on the foundation.

ACASTER-SELBY, a township, in the parish of STILLINGFLEET, E. division of AINSTY wapentake, and W. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from York; containing 188 inhabitants. This place, which anciently belonged to the abbot of Selby, is pleasantly situated on the banks of the navigable river Ouse. A college for a provost and two or three fellows, one of whom was to instruct children, was founded here by Robert Stillington, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £33. 10. 4. A school is aided by a small endowment.

ACCONBURY, or ACORNBURY (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the Upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, union and county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (S.) from Hereford; containing 158 inhabitants. This parish comprises 1590 acres by computation, and is intersected by the old road from Ross to Hereford, and on its western side by that between Hereford and Monmouth. A nunnery of the order of St. Augustine was founded here, in the reign of John, by Margery, wife of Walter de Lacy, to the honour of the Holy Cross, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £75. 7. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$.; the remains have been converted into a farm-house, and some stone coffins are still preserved. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £53; patrons, the Governors of Guy's Hospital, London. The vaults of the church contain the ashes of many illustrious persons, among whom are the first Duke of Chandos, and an Earl of Carnarvon. On the summit of Acconbury hill, celebrated for its fine plantations and drives, and its beautiful views, are traces of a large Roman encampment, the rampart of which, on the east side, is plainly discernible.

ACCRINGTON, a post-town, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of HASLINGDEN, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of LANCASHIRE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Blackburn; comprising the chapelry of Old, and the township of New, Accrington; and containing 8719 inhabitants, of whom 1811 are in Old, and 6908 in New, Accrington. Within the last few years this place has acquired considerable importance, from its situation in the calico-printing district; and some large establishments for spinning cotton thread, and weaving and printing calico, have been formed. An act for lighting the township with gas, and supplying the inhabitants with water, was passed in 1841. Old Accrington contains about 739 acres, and New Accrington, 2450. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £158; patron, Vicar of Whalley; appropriator, Archbishop of Canterbury. The chapel was taken down and rebuilt upon a larger scale, in 1826; and an additional church was erected in 1840, in the form of a cross, at an expense of above £7000, defrayed by Messrs. Hargreaves and Co., and other inhabitants. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, and Swedenborgians; also a national school, erected by subscription in 1806, and towards the support of which Jonathan Peel, Esq., in 1824, gave £1000.

ACHURCH.—See THORPE-ACHURCH.

ACKLAM (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of MALTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK; containing the townships of Acklam-with-Barthorpe and Leavening, and 845 inhabitants, of whom 411 are in Acklam-with-Barthorpe, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from New Malton. The parish comprises about 4000 acres; the surface is elevated, including a portion of the wolds, from which a most extensive view of the surrounding country is obtained; and the scenery is in many parts beautifully romantic. The soil in the valley is a strong clay, and in other parts of lighter quality; and stone of a good kind for building is largely quarried. The village is situated in a narrow valley, on the west of the wolds. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5; net income, £108; patron and appropriator, Chancellor of the Cathedral of York. The church, rebuilt in 1790, is a neat structure, with a square tower, and contains 250 sittings, all of which are free. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans. The parochial school is endowed with one acre of land, and is further supported by subscription.

ACKLAM-IN-CLEVELAND, a parish, in the union of STOCKTON-UPON-TEES, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Stockton; containing 97 inhabitants. This parish, which is on the road from Stokesley to Stockton, and bounded on the west by the river Tees, includes parts of the townships of Linthorpe and Ayresome, and comprises an area of about 1050 acres, chiefly the property of Thomas Hustler, Esq., lord of the manor; the surface is varied, but generally flat. The soil in the eastern portion is clay, and in the western sandy, and the scenery of pleasing character; the lands, which are nearly all arable, and in good cultivation, are divided into several farms of moderate extent. The Stockton and Middlesborough railway passes through the parish. Acklam Hall, the seat of Mr. Hustler, has been recently re-fronted, and is a spacious and handsome mansion of brick, pleasantly situated in grounds well laid out, and ornamented with plantations. The village is on the road side. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Archbishop of York, the appropriator, and has a net income of £44: the church, which had become dilapidated, was rebuilt in 1772, and is a neat structure, covered with Westmorland blue slates. At Linthorpe is a school endowed with a house and garden and £5 per annum, bequeathed by Miss Everald Hustler, in 1770. The parish was formerly noted for a fine breed of Durham short-horned cattle.

ACKLINGTON, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from ALNWICK; containing 301 inhabitants. The manor formed a part of the barony of Warkworth, and at a very early period belonged to the Percys, earls of Northumberland, in whose family it still remains. The village, which is pretty large, is situated a little to the south of the river Coquet, and about midway between the sea and the road from Alnwick to Morpeth; and is chiefly inhabited by mechanics and labourers. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge amounting to £283. 7. 6., of which £232. 18. are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, and £50. 9. 6. to the vicar. Coal is obtained in the township.

ACKLINGTON-PARK, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9 miles (S. S. E.) from Alnwick; containing 133 inhabitants. This place lies on the south side of the river Coquet, not very far distant from the North sea, and in a fine secluded situation: it belongs to the Duke of Northumberland. There is a coarse woollen manufactory. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £56. 14. 9., of which £55. 11. 6. are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, and £1. 3. 3. to the vicar.

ACKTON, a township, in the parish of FEATHERSTONE, Lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Pontefract; containing 76 inhabitants. This place, called also Aikton, a probable corruption of Oak Town, from the number of oak trees growing in its vicinity, comprises by computation 1090 acres of land. Aikton Hall was purchased by Langdale Sunderland, Esq., of Halifax, one of the worthies who followed the fortunes of Charles I., and who raised a troop of horse for his Majesty's service, and was at the battle of Marston Moor: Oliver Cromwell fined him £878.

ACKWORTH (St. Cuthbert), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Pontefract; containing 1828 inhabitants. This parish, which occupies an elevated situation, comprises 2537*a. 3r. 27p.* of profitable land, and 36 acres of roads and waste; the soil is fertile; the surface is boldly undulated, and the surrounding scenery is richly embellished with wood. Freestone of excellent quality is abundant, and there are some extensive quarries at Moor Top in the parish. Ackworth Park is the beautiful seat of John Gully, Esq., and Ackworth House, that of Major Goldsworthy. The village, which is divided into High and Low Ackworth, is situated on rising ground near the source of the river Went, and contains numerous neat and well-built houses with several pleasant villas in the immediate neighbourhood. Handloom weaving is carried on to a limited extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 1. 0½., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the Duchy of Lancaster; net income, £403. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an act of inclosure, in 1774, and the glebe comprises 152 acres. The church, an ancient structure situated in Upper Ackworth, has at various times undergone much alteration and repair, and contains 500 sittings, of which 100 are free. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

The school belonging to the SOCIETY OF FRIENDS was originally and for some years an appendage to the Foundling Hospital of London, for which purpose it was originally built, at an expense of £13,000, defrayed by subscription, aided by a grant from parliament: upon its separation from that institution, the house, with 84 acres of land attached to it, was purchased in 1777 by Dr. Fothergill and two or three other gentlemen of the Society of Friends for £7000, and was afterwards appropriated as a school for the education of the children of the less wealthy members of that community. The buildings, which are situated between Higher and Lower Ackworth, consist of a centre and two wings connected by corridors, and comprise arrangements for the reception of 180 boys and 120 girls, who are instructed by four masters and four mistresses, respectively, in the general rudiments of an English education; and of the boys, 20 of the more advanced are taught Latin. During the intervals of study the boys are frequently employed in farming and gardening, and the girls in the various domestic duties; and when of proper age, the former are placed out as apprentices to various trades, and the latter as servants in respectable families. The school is under the superintendence of a committee of 28 friends resident in Ackworth and its vicinity, and of a committee of 21 resident in London. The buildings, to which various additions have been made, together with the land, which has been extended to 274 acres, are estimated at £30,000; and a fund of £500, vested in the three per cents, is appropriated to the apprenticing of the boys, and to the distribution of premiums to the girls, as an encouragement to remain for three years at least in one family. A school for girls was established in 1833 by Miss Howard, and one for boys in 1840 by subscription; and the hospital and school at High Ackworth were built by Mrs. Mary Lowther, who in 1741 endowed them with 17 acres of land, now producing £30 per annum, and with £700 invested at 5 per cent interest. From this endowment a schoolmaster receives £16 per annum for teaching 20 children; and six almshouses were endowed by Mrs. Mary Lowther, in 1741, for six aged women, who have an annuity of £7. 12. each. There also several benefactions for distribution among the poor of the parish.

ACLE (St. EDMUND), a parish, in the union of BLOFIELD, hundred of WALSHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 11 miles (E.) from Norwich; containing 864 inhabitants. This place, at the time of the Norman Conquest, became a fief of the crown, and was granted by William to Roger Bigod, who obtained for it the privilege of a market and a fair; and in the reign of Richard II. the inhabitants were exempted from all tolls and suits of shire and hundred, and invested with several valuable immunities. The parish comprises 3164*a.* 2*r.* 8*p.*, a large portion of which is grazing land reclaimed from marshy ground; the uplands consist of a fine loamy soil, and are exceedingly fertile. The village is situated on the road from Norwich to Yarmouth, and on a gentle eminence rising from the banks of the navigable river Bure, over which is a stone bridge of three arches, and of great elevation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the gift of Lord Calthorpe: the tithes have been commuted for £720, and there are about twenty acres of glebe, and a good rectory-house. The church, which is chiefly in the decorated style, consists of a nave and chancel, with a circular tower, the upper part of which is octagon: the edifice was thoroughly repaired and beautified in 1834. A school for boys and girls is chiefly supported by Lord Calthorpe, and by subscription. At Weybridge a small priory for Augustine canons was founded in the reign of Edward I., by Roger Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, the revenue of which at the dissolution was £7. 13. 4.

ACOMB (St. STEPHEN), a parish, in the AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK; containing 880 inhabitants, of whom 774 are in the township of Acomb, 2¼ miles (W.) from York, on the road to Leeds via Wetherby. This parish, anciently Ascham, comprises by measurement 1920 acres, and is bounded on the north by the river Ouse, on which is a small wharf for coal, lime, &c. adjacent to the Darlington railway; the soil is of a sandy and gravelly nature, and the air remarkably salubrious; and several mansions and villas are occupied by families of the first respectability. Acomb House is an establishment for the insane in the higher grades of society, conducted by Mr. Hodgson, late surgeon and superintendent to the York Lunatic Asylum, and who, on retiring from that institution in 1828, received the thanks of a special court of governors, consisting of 52 members, through the Archbishop of York. The village has a neat appearance; and the York and North-Midland railway passes near it at Hob Moor. Part of Knapton and also Dringhouses are in the parish, and churchwardens are elected for these places along with those for Acomb.

The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 9. 2.; net income, £109; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Isaac Spencer, M.A., of "The Plantation," near York. The peculiar of Acomb formerly belonged to the Treasurer in the Cathedral of York, but was surrendered, with the rectory, to the Crown in 1547; and in 1609 it was granted by James I. to Thomas Newark and his heir. The tithes of the townships of Acomb and Holgate were commuted for land and a money payment, by an inclosure act in 1774. The church, rebuilt in 1831-2, by subscription, and a grant from the Church Building Society, is an elegant structure, with a graceful spire, and, standing on the highest ground in the vicinity of York, has a very picturesque appearance: it contains 609 sittings, of which 212 are free. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists; and a national school is supported by subscription. Four annuities for the poor, left by William Wharton, in 1829, and three other donors, produce £16. 17. per annum. Half a mile from the village is a hill, supposed to be the tumulus of Septimius Severus, the Roman emperor, who died at York, and which is now called Severus' Hill.—See the article on DRINGHOUSES.

ACOMB, EAST, a township, in the parish of BYWELL-ST. PETER, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E.) from Hexham; containing 37 inhabitants. It is situated about a mile north from Bywell, and consists of two farms; and Peepee, a pleasant hamlet, lies at a little distance to the westward. This, and many other parts of the Bywell estate, are covered with trees of a remarkably fine growth, which impart to the landscape a rich and luxuriant aspect. The township is the property of T. W. Beaumont, Esq.

ACOMB, WEST, a township, in the parish of ST. JOHN-LEE, union of HEXHAM, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N.) from Hexham; containing 571 inhabitants. This place, anciently Hameshaly, belonged to the prior of Hexham, and is supposed to have been the favourite retreat of St. John of Beverley: on the dissolution of the priory it came to the crown, and in 1724 was the property of the Coatsworth family, and subsequently of the Jurins and Hunters. The township is bounded on the south by the river Tyne: coal is obtained within its limits; and the Newcastle and Carlisle railway passes through it. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £65.

ACORNBURY.—See ACCONBURY.

ACRISE (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of ELHAM, partly in the hundred of FOLKESTONE, but chiefly in that of LONINGBOROUGH, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Folkestone, near the road to Canterbury; containing 207 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £217, and there are nearly 44 acres of glebe.

ACTON, a township, in the parish of WEAVERHAM, union of NORTHWICH, Second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of CHESHIRE, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Northwich; containing 382 inhabitants. The Grand Junction railway and the Nantwich branch of the Chester canal pass through the township; and on the former a station of the second class has been formed. A school is chiefly supported by subscription.

ACTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of CHESHIRE, comprising the townships of Acton, Aston-juxta-Mondrum, Austerson, Baddington, Brindley, Burland, Cholmondstone, Cool-Pilate, Edleston, Faddiley, Henhull, Hurleston, Newhall, Poole, Stoke, and Worleston; and containing 4134 inhabitants, of whom 328 are in the township of Acton, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Nantwich. This place was the scene of some hostilities during the parliamentary war; and in October 1643, the church and Dorford Hall were occupied by the royalists, on whose retreat both were garrisoned by the parliament. They were afterwards captured by the king's troops under Lord Byron, but, on the raising of the siege of Nantwich, Sir Thomas Fairfax compelled the garrisons to surrender, and among the prisoners were sixty officers, including Col. Monk, afterwards Duke of Albemarle. The Chester and Crewe railway passes close by Acton Hall, and crosses the Middlewich and Wardle canal at the Cholmondstone lock in this parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 9. 7.; net income, £324; patron and impropiator Admiral Tolle-mache. The church exhibits some curiously ornamented windows, and the tower is partly in the early style of English architecture. There is an endowed school; and a school in connexion with the National Society has also been established. Sir Roger Wilbraham founded and endowed two almshouses here in 1613.

ACTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRENTFORD, Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 5 miles (W.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of East Acton and Steyne, 2665 inhabitants. The name is supposed to be derived from the Saxon word Ac, signifying oak, and tun, a town; the neighbourhood having, in former times, abounded with timber of that description, and some land in the parish, from time immemorial, having been called Old Oak common. Previously to the battle of Brentford, in 1642, the Earls of Essex and Warwick had their head-quarters here; and, on Cromwell's return to London, after the battle of Worcester, the lord president and council of state, the members of the house of commons, and the lord mayor, aldermen, and citizens of London, met him at this place, when the recorder of London delivered a congratulatory address, after which they attended him to the metropolis, forming altogether a train of more than three hundred carriages. The village consists chiefly of one long street, and is plentifully supplied with water; and the Paddington canal and the Great Western railway run through the parish. A pleasure fair is held on Holy Thursday. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14; net income, £968; patron, Bishop of London. The church, which exhibits portions in the later style of English architecture, with modern insertions, was enlarged and repaired, at the expense of the inhabitants, in 1825. There is a place of worship for Independents, and the detached buildings of a private mansion have been fitted up as a Roman Catholic chapel. A Lancasterian school has been erected near the church; and there is also a school in union with the National Society. At East Acton are handsome almshouses, built and endowed by the Goldsmiths' Company, for twelve men and twelve women. In a garden, on Old Oak common, is a mineral spring, formerly held in general repute, but now disused.

ACTON, with OLD FELTON, a township, in the parish of FELTON, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Alnwick; containing 111 inhabitants. This place extends between one and two miles north of the village of Felton. Acton House, the seat of J. H. Hinde, Esq., M.P., is a handsome mansion; and North Acton Hall is also a fine structure, beautifully situated: the adjoining lands are fertile and picturesque. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £40. 6.

ACTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Sudbury; comprising 2811a. 21p.; and containing 555 inhabitants. There are several small hamlets in the parish, that which is called "the village" being the principal. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 6. 8.; patron and impropiator, Earl Howe. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £375, and the vicarial for the same amount. The church is very neat, and contains some ancient and very handsome brasses.

ACTON, ANGAR, a tything, in the parish of IRON-ACTON, Lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER.

ACTON-BEAUCHAMP (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 4 miles (S. E.) from Bromyard; containing 217 inhabitants. There are by measurement 1524 acres, of which 717 are arable, 570 pasture, 150 woodland, and 82 hop ground, &c.; the surface is very hilly, and the soil strong clay, occasionally degenerating into sterile sand. The parish is surrounded on all sides except the east by the county of Hereford. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of Mrs. Cowpland: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £270, and the glebe consists of 42 acres. There are some mineral springs in the parish.

ACTON-BURNELL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, hundred of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP, 7 miles (S.) from Shrewsbury; containing, with Ruckley and Langley, 394 inhabitants. This place, which is of considerable antiquity, is on a branch of the Roman Watling-street, which passes through it; it takes the adjunct to its name from the family of Burnell, of whom Robert, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and Lord High Chancellor in the reign of Edward I., had a castle here, of which there are still some remains. In 1283, a great council or parliament was held here, at which was enacted the law of "statute merchant:" the king and his court were accommodated in the castle, the lords assembled in a great hall erected for them in the park, and the commons met in a very large barn belonging to Shrewsbury Abbey, of which the gable ends have been preserved to the present time. Besides the Watling-street, a causeway passes through the parish; and there is a Roman bridge, and an early specimen of Saxon antiquity called the Moat. The parish comprises by computation 2400 acres. The living is a rectory, with the chapelry of Langley, valued in the king's books at £6. 10., and in the gift of Sir E. J. Smythe, Bart., with a net income of £350; the glebe consists of about 70 acres, with a good house. The church, which is cruciform, was built in 1264, and is a splendid specimen of ecclesiastical architecture; its internal decorations are of a highly ornamental character. There are a Roman Catholic chapel, a national school, and a school for the children of Roman Catholics. Nicholas Burnell, a distinguished warrior in the reign of Edward III., was born and buried here; and Langley Hall was the birth-place of Sir Humphrey Lee, the first baronet created in the county, in 1629.

ACTON-GRANGE, a township, in the parish and union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 2½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Warrington; containing 175 inhabitants. The Grand Junction railway crosses the township, which is on the borders of Lancashire.

ACTON, IRON.—See IRON-ACTON.

ACTON-PIGOT, a hamlet, in the parish of ACTON-BURNELL, union of CHURCH-STRETTON, hundred of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP, 6¾ miles (W. N. W.) from Much-Wenlock; comprising 391 acres, and containing 40 persons. There was formerly a chapel, the remains of which still exist.

ACTON-REYNALD, a township, in the parish of SHAWBURY, union of WEM, liberty of the borough of SHREWSBURY, N. division of SALOP, 7½ miles (N. N. E.) from Shrewsbury; containing 159 inhabitants.

ACTON-ROUND, a parish, in the union of BRIDGEMOUTH, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 3¾ miles (S. S. E.) from Much-Wenlock, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Bridgenorth; containing 180 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected by the road from Much-Wenlock to Bridgenorth, comprises by computation 2126*a.* 2*r.* 26*p.* The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £74; patron and impropiator, Sir John Acton, Bart. Certain tithes were commuted for land under an inclosure act in 1773: there are about 25 acres of glebe, of which 14 are near Bromsgrove in Worcestershire, and 11 in the parish of Stottesden. The church is a neat edifice, of which the walls are ornamented with monuments to the memory of the Actons, by one of whom, Sir Richard, the chancel was built in 1761.

ACTON-SCOTT (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of CHURCH-STRETTON, hundred of MUNSLow, S. division of SALOP, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Church-Stretton; containing 204 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the new road from Wenlock to Bishop's Castle, abounds with bold, and, in some parts, romantic scenery, and contains by measurement 1600 acres, all cultivated, excepting about 200 under plantation and coppice: the surface is hilly; the soil comprises several varieties, and stone is quarried for building and the repair of roads. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 10., and in the gift of E. W. W. Pendarves, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £230, and there are 61 acres of glebe. A school is supported.

ACTON-TRUSSELL (St. JAMES), a parochial chapelry, in the union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3½ miles (N. N. E.) from Penkridge; containing, with Bednall, 574 inhabitants. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal passes through the chapelry, which comprises 2551 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Bednall united; net income, £234; patron and incumbent, Rev. G. F. Molineaux; appropriator, Prebendary of Whittington and Baswick in the Cathedral of Lichfield. There are churches at Acton and Bednall, both ancient edifices, the former in the early English style, and the latter of varied architecture.

ACTON-TURVILLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-SODBURY, Lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5¾ miles (E.) from Chipping-Sodbury; containing 311 inhabitants. This place, which lies on the border of Wiltshire, is exceedingly well situated with respect to means of communication, roads branching off from the village to the towns of Malmsbury, Chippenham, Bath, and Chipping-Sodbury, respectively. The living is a vicarage not in charge, united to the rectory of Tormarton in 1344.

ADBASTON.—See ABDASTON.

ADBEER, a hamlet, in the parish of TRENT, union of SHERBORNE, hundred of HORETHORNE, E. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Yeovil. A chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary was demolished during the civil war.

ADBOLTON, formerly a parish, now a hamlet in the parish of HOLME-PIERREPOINT, union of BINGHAM, S. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Nottingham; containing 25 inhabitants. The living, a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 13. 9., was, in 1707, consolidated with the rectory of Holme-Pierrepoint: the church is in ruins.

ADDERBURY, EAST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Deddington; containing, with the township of West Adderbury, and the hamlets of Barford St. John, Bodicott, and Milton, 2525 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book called Edburgheric, probably derived that name from St. Edburgh, to whom many religious establishments in this part of the country were dedicated: in the court rolls of New College, to which the lordship belongs, it is written "Eberbury;" and Henry de Knyghton relates that, by a council of bishops held at Oxford, a blasphemous impostor, condemned for assuming the name and pretending to the wounds of Christ, was crucified at "Abberbury," now Adderbury. The parish comprises about 5900 acres, of which 1120 are in West Adderbury, 1240 in Bodicott, 800 in Milton, and 700 in Barford St. John. In the eastern part of the village stood a magnificent ancient mansion, belonging to the Duke of Argyle, afterwards the residence of the Earl of Rochester, and of which the remains are now incorporated with a modern seat. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £21. 4. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £818; patrons and appropriators, Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church, situated on elevated ground, is a handsome cruciform structure, in the early and decorated English styles, with a massive square tower strengthened by angular buttresses, and crowned with a pierced parapet, from within which rises an octagonal spire, having at the base four octagonal pyramids surmounted with vanes: between the north transept and the east end of the chancel is an octagonal turret, crowned with battlements. The chancel, which is of beautiful proportions, and built by William of Wykeham, is lighted by windows of elegant design, though much defaced by the insertion of mullions: part of the ancient rood-loft, of exquisite workmanship, is remaining; also some fine tracery at the east end; and the whole of the interior is replete with rich details, interspersed with grotesque ornaments. In each of the hamlets of Bodicott and Barford St. John is a church, both ancient structures, supposed to have been erected in the fourteenth century; and the old parsonage, now a farm-house, retains much of its original character. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and some endowments have been left for the instruction of children.

ADDERBURY, WEST, a township, in the parish of EAST ADDERBURY, union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (N.) from Deddington; comprising about 1120 acres, and containing 442 inhabitants.

ADDERLEY, county of SALOP.—See ATHERLEY.

ADDERSTONE, a township, in the parish of BAMBROUGH, union of BELFORD, N. division of BAMBROUGH ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Belford; containing 302 inhabitants. The manor was possessed by the ancient family of Forster, from whom it came, in 1763, to John William Bacon, Esq., by whom the present handsome mansion, which stands near the site of the old hall, on the west bank of the Warn, was erected, and whose successor sold the estate to J. Pratt, Esq. Twizell House is also situated in the township.

ADDINGHAM (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Kirk-Oswald; containing, with the townships of Gamblesby, Glassonby, Hunsonby, and Winkel, and Little Salkeld, 735 inhabitants. The river Eden forms the western boundary of the parish, through which the Roman road called Maiden-way may be traced in many parts of its course: there are some quarries of red freestone. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 7.; net income, £253; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church is situated in the township of Glassonby: at Gamblesby are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; also one for the latter at Hunsonby; and there are well-endowed free schools at Hunsonby and Maughamby. At Little Salkeld is a remarkable monument, supposed to be Druidical, commonly called "Long Meg and her Daughters," consisting of 67 stones, varying in shape and height, which form a circle about 350 feet in diameter; and in the same township was anciently a chapel, the site of which, according to tradition, was at a village called Addingham, on the eastern bank of the Eden, where human bones, crosses, and other remains, have been dug up. Dr. Paley, the celebrated theological writer, formerly held the living.

ADDINGHAM (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of SKIPTON, partly in the E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, and partly in the Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Skipton; containing 1753 inhabitants, of whom 1527 are in the township of Addingham. It is situated on the western side of the river Wharfe, and within the liberty of Clifford's Fee, and comprises about 4000 acres, of which 900 are open common: the soil is fertile, and the surface varied and pleasing; and freestone of good quality is abundant, and extensively quarried. Farfield Hall, the seat of E. C. Lister Kaye, Esq., is a handsome mansion in the Italian style, originally built by the Earl of Burlington, and is finely situated, commanding beautiful views of the river and of the picturesque valley through which it flows. High House, the residence of John Ellis, Esq., is also in the parish. The village, which consists of irregularly detached houses, extends for nearly a mile in length: a portion of the inhabitants are employed in the cotton and worsted mills, and in handloom weaving. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; income, about £400, with a glebe-house beautifully situated; patron, Rev. William Thompson. The church, which was rebuilt in 1757, is a neat structure with a square tower, and is seated on an eminence overlooking the river; it contains 450 sittings. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. On an eminence called Counter Hill, about a mile from the village, are the remains of a Roman encampment, and some traces of a Roman road. A massive and antique ring of gold was found in the churchyard some years since.

ADDINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Winslow; containing 84 inhabitants. It comprises about 1500 acres; the surface is in general level, and the soil good pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 7.; net income, £200; patron, John Poulett, Esq.: the glebe consists of 100 acres. On the border of the parish is a place called "Gallows Gap," where, in the reign of Edward III., a gallows was erected by one of the family of Molines, who, as lords of the barony, possessed the power of trying and executing capital offenders.

ADDINGTON (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of MALLING, hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 8 miles (N. W. by W.) from Maidstone; containing 208 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 830 acres, of which 100 are woodland; and contains one of those land springs very common in the eastern part of Kent, called the Ailbourn, which breaks out with great impetuosity once in seven or eight years, directing its course into a trench dug for its reception, till it arrives at the Leybourn rivulet, the trout in which, at other times white, it turns to a red colour. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 8.; net income, £160; patron, Hon. J. W. Stratford: the glebe consists of 26 acres. The church is pleasantly situated in the midst of foliage on rising ground within a valley, near which are remains, supposed to be Druidical.

ADDINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CROYDON, First division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, E. division of SURREY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Croydon; containing 580 inhabitants. The manor is held by the singular tenure of making and presenting to the king, at his coronation, a mess of pottage called newpergymon, subject to the performance of which a carucate of land here was granted to Tezelin, cook to William the Conqueror. The parish comprises by admeasurement 3635 acres, 500 of which are underwood or uncultivated. The village is situated at the foot of a range of hills to which it gives its name; and adjacent to these hills is Addington Place, which, in 1807, was purchased by Dr. Sutton, Archbishop of Canterbury, with the funds arising from the sale of the archiepiscopal palace at Croydon. The mansion was originally erected by Alderman Trecothick, on the site of an ancient edifice said to have been a hunting seat of Henry VIII.; it was improved by Dr. Sutton, and has lately been rebuilt with the addition of wings, and the grounds much extended by Dr. Howley. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 16. $5\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury; improprators, the landowners. The great and small tithes have been commuted for rent-charges, the former for £559. 18. 6., and the latter for £208. 4., and there are two acres of glebe. The church, a small structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with a low, square, embattled tower, appears to have been partly rebuilt in the reign of Edward III.: in the chancel lie the remains of the late Archbishop Sutton. Near the church is an eminence called Castle hill, on which it is said that a castle anciently stood; and on the brow of the hill adjoining Addington common, and now in the park, are several low tumuli, in which urns have been found.

ADDINGTON, GREAT (All Saints), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Thrapston; containing 266 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the left bank of the navigable river Nene, which bounds it on the east, comprises 1233a. 3r. 31p.; the surface is pleasantly diversified with hill and dale, and the soil runs through many varieties. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 12. $8\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £315; patron and incumbent, Rev. James Tyley. The tithes were commuted for 327 acres of land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1803.

ADDINGTON, LITTLE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Higham Ferrers; containing 299 inhabitants. On the east the parish is bounded by the river Nene, and it consists of 1104a. 3r. 29p. of a moderately productive soil. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the great tithes, and valued in the king's books at £7. 12.; net income, £245; patron, T. Saunderson, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1830.

ADDLE, or ADEL (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK; containing 1121 inhabitants, of whom 785 are in the township of Addle-cum-Eccup, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Leeds. This place, anciently called Adhill, from the Ada of the Saxons, and in some documents Adel, was the site of the Roman station Burgodunum, of which some traces, with many inscribed stones, fragments of urns, and the remains of an aqueduct, were discovered, in 1702, on an adjacent moor, near which are vestiges of a camp about 120 yards in length and 90 yards in breadth, in which several Roman altars, numerous coins, and various other relics, have been found. The parish, which is bounded on the north by the river Wharfe, comprises by computation 8000 acres; and the surface is varied, and the scenery generally of pleasing character. The hamlet of Eccup, which is near the site of the Roman camp, abounds with springs of excellent water, from which the Leeds new water-works are supplied.

The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 3. 4.; net income, £623; patron, W. T. Carruthers, Esq.: the glebe comprises 164 acres, with a good house. The church is a handsome and venerable structure of Norman design, and one of the most perfect specimens of that style in the kingdom; the south doorway is highly enriched, and many of its details are of great elegance. A school, in which are about 70 children, is partly supported by annual donations from Mr. Carruthers, John Wormald, Esq., of Cookridge Hall, and the Rev. George Lewthwaite, the rector, who also supports a Sunday school. Thos. Kirk, Esq., in 1701, bequeathed £800 to the poor, which sum has been laid out in the purchase of two houses and 82 acres of land, producing an income of £75 per annum, which, with a trifling deduction, is distributed in bread every Sunday, pursuant to the will of the donor.

ADDLESTONE, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish and union of CHERTSEY, Second division of the hundred of GODLEY, W. division of SURREY; containing about 2000 inhabitants. A church in the early English style, affording accommodation for 800 persons, has been lately erected, at an expense of about £4000, raised by subscription; it has been endowed with £2000 by Miss Wightwick, whose family has long resided in the parish; and the patronage is vested in the Bishop of Winchester. The consecration took place in Jan. 1838; and the benefice was augmented in 1841 by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, with £48 per annum.

ADDLETHORPE (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Marsh division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Alford; containing 238 inhabitants. It contains about 2000 acres of land, situated on the coast, and is subject to encroachments of the sea, against which it is necessary to maintain an embankment at a considerable expense. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £72; patron, the Crown: the glebe consists of about 7 acres. The church is a fine specimen of the perpendicular style, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and a tower. There is a place of worship for Methodists; and a national school has been established. Mr. Mottram in 1710 bequeathed money for two almshouses for widows, with half an acre of land to each, and a yearly allowance of coals.

ADFORTON, with STANWAY, PAYTON, and GRANGE, a township, in the parish of LEINTWARDINE, union of KNIGHTON, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Ludlow; containing 288 inhabitants, and comprising 1565 acres. The surface is boldly undulated, and the southern portion well wooded. On an eminence at the northern extremity are the remains of a Roman encampment called Brandon camp; and the road from Leintwardine to Wigmore passes through the village of Adforton. A school is endowed with £4 per annum.

ADGARLEY, a township, in the parish of URSWICK, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Dalton; containing 45 inhabitants.

ADISHAM (Holy Innocents), a parish, in the union of BRIDGE, hundred of DOWNHAMFORD, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Wingham; containing 372 inhabitants. It lies a little to the east of the high road from Canterbury to Dover. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Staple annexed, valued in the king's books at £28. 3. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £747, and there are about 13 acres of glebe, with a house. The church is a large cruciform edifice, with a low tower, in the early style of English architecture, except the large window of the transept, which is in the decorated style: the altar-piece is embellished with curious paintings on wood of the Four Evangelists. There is a school, partly supported by subscription.

ADLESTROP (St. Mary Magdalene), a parish, in the union of STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, Upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Stow; containing 200 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south-east by the road from Stow to Chipping-Norton, and on the south-west by the river Evenlode, and is situated on the borders of Oxfordshire, not far distant from the southern extremity of the county of Warwick. The living is a rectory not in charge, annexed to that of Broadwell: the tithes were partially commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1775. The church, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt in 1764. A school for boys is supported at the expense of the rector, and one for girls has a small endowment.

ADLINGFLEET (All Saints), a parish, in the union of GOOLE, Lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Eastoft, Fockerby, and Haldenby; and containing 448 inhabitants, of whom 199 are in the township of Adlingfleet, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Howden. This parish is situated on the borders of Lincolnshire, between the rivers Ouse and Trent, and contains 4580 acres, forming a continuation of the great level of Hatfield Chase; the soil is chiefly clay, and, though the surface is flat, the scenery is pleasing. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 12. 11., and has a net income of £280: it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the impropriation belongs to Catharine Hall, Cambridge. The tithes for the townships of Adlingfleet, Fockerby, and Haldenby, were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1767. The church, which is a small edifice, was repaired in 1828 at an expense of £500. There are two places of worship for Methodists. In 1743 Mary Ramsden bequeathed the sum of £200 for apprenticing boys and educating girls in Fockerby, Norton, Linton, and Adlingfleet: a parochial school is carried on; and at Fockerby is a free grammar school.

ADLINGTON, a township, in the parish of PRESTBURY, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Macclesfield; containing 1159 inhabitants. Adlington Hall, a very ancient and curious structure, with a garden of cut yew hedges, which has long been the residence of the family of Legh, was garrisoned for Charles I. in the civil war, and taken by the parliamentary forces, on the 14th of Feb. 1645, after a fortnight's siege: in the south-east angle is a small domestic chapel, handsomely fitted up, licensed by the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry in the 25th of Henry VI. There are some valuable mines of coal, and quarries of flagstone. A manorial court is held in May and December, at which debts under 40s. are recoverable.

ADLINGTON, a township, in the parish of STANDISH, union of CHORLEY, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (N.) from Wigan; containing 1130 inhabitants. A district church was erected in 1838, by Her Majesty's Commissioners, containing 629 sittings, of which 331 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy, of which the incumbent has a grant of £71 per annum, from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £120. 14. 9.

ADMARSH, a chapelry, in the parish of LANCASTER, union of GARSTANG, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Garstang, on the river Brock. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £44; patron, Vicar of Lancaster. There are about 22 acres of glebe, and a small glebe-house. The church, a neat edifice, was rebuilt in 1835. There is a small grammar school; and a national school for 50 children has been erected.

ADMASTON, a hamlet, in the parish of BLITHFIELD, union of UTTOXETER, hundred of SOUTH PIREHILL, N. division of STAFFORDSHIRE; containing 59 inhabitants.

ADMINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of QUINTON, union of SHIPSTON, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Chipping-Campden; containing 197 inhabitants.

ADMISTON, or ATHELHAMPTON, a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of PIDDLETOWN, Dorchester division of DORSET, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Dorchester; containing 74 inhabitants. This place is said to have been the principal residence of the Saxon kings of Wessex, but there is no satisfactory evidence of the truth of that opinion. The living is a rectory, with that of Burleston annexed, valued in the king's books at £2; net income, £200; patron, Hon. W. T. L. P. Wellesley. The church is a small edifice, repaired by Sir Robert Long in 1740, before which it contained an apartment, supposed to have been anciently inhabited by a rector or custos.

ADSTOCK (St. CECILIA), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (N. W.) from Winslow, on the road to the town of Buckingham; containing 419 inhabitants. This parish consists of 1128 acres of cultivated arable and pasture land, inclosed under an act of parliament passed in 1797, when an allotment was awarded to the incumbent in lieu of tithes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 3.; patron, the Bishop of Lincoln; net income £235, arising from 300 acres of land. In the time of the plague, in 1665, the contagion having extended to Buckingham and Winslow, a market was held at this place.

ADSTONE, a chapelry, in the parish of CANONS-ASHBY, union of TOWCESTER, hundred of GREENS-NORTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Towcester; containing 196 inhabitants. This chapelry comprises 1355 acres of land by computation, partially undulated, and watered by a stream which falls into the river Tow: stone is quarried for building. The living is a donative; patrons, the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, is remarkable for the simplicity and dignity of its architecture, and is supposed to have been formerly dependent on Canons-Ashby, at which place the inhabitants still continue to bury.

ADVENT, or St. ADVEN, a parish, in the union of CAMELFORD, hundred of LESNEWTH, E. division of CORNWALL, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S.) from Camelford; containing 291 inhabitants. It comprises 3844 acres, of which the surface is hilly, and nearly half uncultivated; the soil is slaty, and interspersed with large granite stones: the river Camel flows on the northern boundary. There are some moorlands in the parish, on which peat and turf are procured for fuel. The living is a rectory, not in charge, annexed to that of Lanteglos cum Camelford.

ADWALTON.—See DRIGHLINGTON.

ADWELL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. by E.) from Tetsworth; containing 46 inhabitants. It comprises about 500 acres of land, bounded on the north-east by the road between Oxford and High Wycombe. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 9., and in the patronage of Mrs. F. Webb: the rectorial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £111, and £9 are payable to the Dean and Canons of Windsor; there are about 15 acres of glebe. Here is an ancient intrenchment, called Adwell Cop, supposed by Dr. Plot to have been constructed by the Danes, about the year 1010.

ADWICK-LE-STREET (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH, and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK; containing 554 inhabitants, of whom 120 are in the township of Hampole, and 434 in that of Adwick-le-Street, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Doncaster. This place, said to derive the adjunct to its name from its situation on a Roman road, is intersected by the great northern road, and contains 1543a. 3r. 22p., of which 595 acres are grass, 924 arable, and 24 wood and plantation. The village is pleasantly situated on a declivity, and watered by a stream that flows eastward to the Don. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.; net income, £364; patron, John Fullerton, Esq.: the glebe consists of 8 acres. The church is a neat structure, with a nave, chancel, north aisle, and tower, and has several ancient altar tombs, richly carved, erected in memory of the Fitzwilliam, Washington, and other families. A school was built in 1835, at an expense of nearly £200, partly by subscription, and partly by a grant from the Education Committee; ten guineas per annum, bequeathed, in 1811, by the Rev. William Hedges, a late incumbent, for the education of children, are now paid to the master. A spring of pure water, in the parish, is in some repute for healing weak eyes.

ADWICK-UPON-DEARNE, a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Doncaster; containing 108 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1105a. 1r. 22p., of which 704 acres are arable, 385 meadow and pasture, 8 homesteads and orchards, and 6 canal; the surface is varied, and the surrounding scenery richly diversified; and the river Dearne, and the Dearne and Dove canal pass through the place. The village is beautifully situated on the southern acclivity of the picturesque vale of Dearne, and near it runs the North-Midland railway. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Wath-upon-Dearne. There was a church here at an early period, which in the former part of the reign of Henry I. was given to the monastery of St. Oswald of Nostell, then newly founded: this edifice, which is the present parochial church, still retains its primitive simplicity, and is the purest specimen remaining in the deanery of Doncaster of the original village churches; it has a nave and chancel, with a little shed in which two bells are hung. A powerful chalybeate spring was discovered on the glebe land in 1820, and is in considerable repute.

AFF-PIDDLE, or PUDDLE, a parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of HUNDRED'S BARROW, Wareham division of DORSET, 9 miles (E. by N.) from Dorchester; containing, with Bryant's Puddle tything, and the hamlet of Pallington, 507 inhabitants.

The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 14. 9. ; patron and impropiator, J. Framp-ton, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £354, and the vicarial for one of £46. 10. ; the glebe consists of 1½ acre. The pulpit in the church bears date 1540, and is beautifully ornamented with carvings. Johanna, relict of the Rev. S. L. Milbourne, late vicar, bequeathed £150 three per cents., of which the proceeds are applied in aid of a Sunday school ; a day school for boys and girls is partly supported by the vicar ; and poor boys of the parish are entitled to participate in the benefits of a charity at Moreton, for apprenticing children.

AGDEN, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of WREXHAM, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2¾ miles (S. E.) from Malpas ; containing 97 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £63.

AGDEN, a township, partly in the parish of ROS-TERN, but chiefly in that of BOWDON, union of AL-TRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Nether Knutsford ; containing 95 inhabitants. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal passes through the township. The tithes of that part in the parish of Bowdon have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £32. 13., of which £16. 13. are payable to the Bishop of Chester, and £16 to the vicar of Bowdon.

AGELTHORPE, or AGGLETHORPE, a township, in the parish of COVERHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapen-take of HANG-WEST, N. riding of York, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Middleham ; containing 195 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1090 acres, and includes within its limits the places called Ashgill, Tup-gill, Brackengill, Giles Alley, Scotescue park, Bird Rid-ding, and Coverham. The Cover river, which has its source near the great Whernside mountain, here passes on the south, and flows north-eastward to the Ure. The monks of Coverham had land here, valued at £1. 6. 8. per annum ; and the village, which is situated on the northern acclivity of the romantic Coverdale, is remarkable for its ancient hall, now a farm-house, which once belonged to the Topham family, afterwards to the Chaytors, and is at present the property of Mr. Ewbank.

AGLIONBY, a township, in the parish of WARWICK, union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 3¾ miles (E.) from Carlisle ; containing 137 inhabitants.

AGNES (ST.), a market-town and parish, in the union of TRURO, W. division of the hundred of PYDER, and of CORNWALL, 8½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Truro, and 263 (W.) from London ; containing 7757 inhabitants. This place, formerly called Breanic, or Bryanic, is situated in an extensive mining district, on the northern coast, and is hilly and barren, consisting principally of cottages inhabited by miners. The rocks on this part of the coast are precipitous, and the character of the scenery for the greater part boldly picturesque. On a pyramidal rocky eminence, 664 feet above the level of the sea, is St. Agnes' beacon, formed out of an ancient cairn, or tumulus, which, during the late war with France, was kept constantly in readiness to communi-cate intelligence in the event of any invasion : it has since that time been greatly diminished by the removal of the stone for repairing the fences in the neighbour-hood. At the base of the hill are vestiges of a strong vallum, supposed to have been constructed by the Romans, which anciently extended for nearly two miles in a circular direction. The surrounding district was formerly worked only for tin, of which the principal mine, called "Seale Hole," after having produced an immense quantity of ore, was discontinued a few years since. Copper-mines were subsequently opened, and have been worked with very great success. The port, which is a member of that of St. Ives, carries on a trade principally with Ireland and Wales, in the exportation of copper-ore and fire-clay, and the importation of coal, iron, machinery, limestone, and grain. After many fruitless attempts, a pier of moorstone, which is here called "Trevannance," was constructed by a company in 1794, and the harbour has been improved within the last few years : it affords safe anchorage to about eight or ten vessels of one hundred tons' burthen, but can only be entered at high water. A pilchard fishery was established in 1802, which affords employment to about forty men. The market is on Thursday, and a fair takes place on the 30th of April. Courts for the duchy are held here annually in October, at which constables and other officers are appointed. The living is a vicar-age not in charge, united to that of Perranzabuloe : the vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £265, and the appropriate, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, for one of £250. The church is an ancient structure, built chiefly of granite, with a small spire of the same material. There are places of wor-ship for Bryanites, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free school, founded by the Rev. St. John Elliott, in 1760, has a small endowment, arising from funds be-queathed by him for charitable uses ; and another school is endowed with £5 per annum. Near the site of an ancient chapel, in a dingle called Chapelcomb, was the famous well of St. Agnes, of which many miraculous stories are recorded. Opie, the celebrated painter, was born here, in 1761.

AIGBURTH, a chapelry, in the parish of CHILD-WALL, partly in the union of PRESCOTT, and partly in that of WEST DERBY, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (S. E.) from Liverpool ; containing 1031 inhabitants. This chapelry, beautifully situated on the Mersey river, contains many handsome villas, and from the salubrity of the air has become the residence of some of the chief merchants of Liverpool. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of certain Trustees : the chapel, dedicated to St. Anne, was erected in 1837, and is a good edifice in the Norman style. A school for boys and girls in connex-ion with the Established Church is supported by sub-scription. There is a curious mausoleum erected by the well-known Dr. Solomon, who had a residence in the chapelry.

AIGHTON, with BAILEY and CHAIGLEY, a town-ship, in the parish of MITTON, union of CLITHEROE, Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. divi-sion of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Clitheroe ; containing 1795 inhabitants. Here are almshouses, towards the support of which J. Weld, Esq. contributes £92 per annum ; also a free school, endowed with £10 per annum.

AIKE, a township, partly in the parish of ST. JOHN, borough of BEVERLEY, but chiefly in that of LOCKINGTON, union of BEVERLEY, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Beverley; containing 98 inhabitants. This place comprises about 630 acres, of which upwards of 200 are in the parish of St. John, Beverley: it was formerly an island, but by means of draining has been connected with the surrounding country, although it is still low and swampy. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act passed in 1771.

AIKTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of WIGTON, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Wigton; comprising the townships of Aikton, Biglands with Gamblesby, Wampool, and Wiggonby; and containing 802 inhabitants, of whom 318 are in the township of Aikton. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 1½.; net income, £546; patron, Earl of Lonsdale. A school is endowed by Margaret Hodgson, with houses and land valued at £150 per annum, and is free to the poor of Aikton, Burgh-upon-Sands, and Beaumont, and to all persons of the founder's name.

AIKTON, YORK.—See ACKTON.

AILBY, a hamlet, in the parish of RIGSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 53 inhabitants.

AILESWORTH, a hamlet, in the parish of CASTOR, union and soke of PETERBOROUGH, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2¾ miles (E. by S.) from Wansford; containing 363 inhabitants.

AINDERBY-MYERS, with HOLTBY, a township, in the parish of HORNBY, union of BEDALE, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 3¼ miles (S. by E.) from Catterick; containing 82 inhabitants. It is situated in the vale of a rivulet, and comprises about 879 acres of land.

AINDERBY-QUERNHOW, a township, in the parish of PICKHILL, union of THIRSK, wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK, 5¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Thirsk; containing 92 inhabitants. This place derives the adjunct to its name from the querns, or mill-stones, obtained from the how or hill in the parish: it comprises an area of 527*a.* 18*p.* The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £150, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge.

AINDERBY-STEEPLE (St. Helen), a parish, in the union of NORTH ALLERTON, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK; containing 760 inhabitants, of whom 262 are in the township of Ainderby-Steeple, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from North Allerton. The parish comprises the townships of Ainderby-Steeple, Morton, Thrintoft, and Warlaby, and consists by measurement of 4599 acres; the township of Ainderby-Steeple extends over 1129 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and has a net income of £200; the patronage and impropriation are vested in the Crown. The church is a handsome structure, on a bold eminence, and from its lofty tower, which may be seen at the distance of 30 miles, the place derives the affix to its name.

AINSTABLE, with RUCKROFT (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 4½ miles (N. N. W.) from Kirk-Oswald, and 10 miles (N. by E.) from Penrith; comprising 4177*a.* 18*p.*, and containing 501 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the west by the river Eden, and on the east and south by the Croglin, abounds with beautiful scenery, particularly in the vale of Croglin, and in the vicinity of Nunnery, the seat of Major Aglionby, who erected a spacious and elegant mansion on the site of a Benedictine convent, founded here by William II., the revenue of which at the dissolution was £18. 18. 8. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 8. 2.; net income, £225; patron and impropriator, Major Aglionby. The vicarial tithes and all moduses were commuted for land under an inclosure act in 1818. The nave of the church was rebuilt in 1816, and the chancel soon afterwards. A small school is endowed with £8. 15. per annum. Near the parsonage-house is a chalybeate spring. John Leake, M. D., founder of the Westminster Lying-in Hospital, and author of some esteemed medical works, was born here, in 1729.

AINSWORTH, or COCKEY, a chapelry, in the parish of MIDDLETON, union of BURY, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Bolton-le-Moors; containing 1598 inhabitants. This chapelry, which is intersected by the road from Bolton to Bury, comprises by measurement about 1200 acres. A large coal-mine is in operation, and two stone-quarries produce excellent material for engine beds and for building purposes. There are also two extensive factories for the spinning of cotton and weaving by power, and works for bleaching, dyeing, and calico-printing; and the Manchester and Bolton railway and canal afford facilities to the industry of the place. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Rector of Middleton: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £48, and the glebe comprises 55 acres. The church, an ancient structure, was formerly surrounded by a moat, and stood in the centre of a common which was inclosed some years since. There is a place of worship for Unitarians. The late Sir Ralph Assheton, Bart. gave a piece of ground and a house, now valued at about £15 a year, for the maintenance of a schoolmaster; and a national school is chiefly supported by subscription. Roman coins have been found here.

AINTREE, a township, in the parish of SEFTON, union and hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Liverpool; containing 311 inhabitants.

AIRTON, a township, in the parish of KIRBY-IN-MALHAM-DALE, union of SETTLE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWGROSS, W. riding of YORK, 6½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Settle; containing 217 inhabitants. This place, which comprises by computation 2790 acres of rich grazing land, derives its name from the river Aire, on which it is situated, and which takes its rise in Malham Tarn, a few miles above the village. The population is chiefly agricultural, but some of the inhabitants find employment in a cotton-mill, the property of Mr. Dewhurst. The land is divided among several owners, and W. N. Alcock, Esq. is lord of the manor: among former proprietors were the monks of Bolton, Fountains, and Nostell Priory. There are places of worship for Methodists and Quakers, the latter built in 1700. Alice Ellis, in 1709, left a house and 29 acres of land for apprenticing poor children.

AISBY, a hamlet, in the parish of HAYDOR, union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN; containing 190 inhabitants.

AISBY, a hamlet, in the parish and wapentake of CORRINGHAM, union of GAINSBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 63 inhabitants.

AISHOLT, or ASHOLT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bridgwater; containing 201 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1252 acres. Limestone is quarried, and used for agricultural purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £280; patron, John West, Esq.: the glebe consists of 60 acres, and there is a good glebe-house attached to the benefice.

AISKEW, a township, in the parish and union of BEDALE, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Bedale; containing 658 inhabitants. This place, which is pleasantly situated on the north side of the Bedale beck, comprises by computation 1950a. 2r. 9p. There are two places of worship for Anabaptists, and one for Roman Catholics; and a free school has a small endowment of £5 per annum, arising from land called "School Fields," in the township of Crakehall, under the will of Timothy Webster. Near Leases Hall, a neat mansion, with pleasant grounds, is Cloven hill, the supposed site of a battle, and where human bones have often been found.

AISLABY, a township, in the parish of EAGLESCLIFFE, union of STOCKTON, S. W. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. by N.) from Yarm; containing 128 inhabitants. There was anciently a chapel here, dedicated to St. Thomas the Martyr, which was founded by William de Aslakby (now Aislaby), and Agnes his wife, in 1313; and the place was for several generations the residence of the family of Pemberton, whose mansion has been converted into an inn and several other tenements. It is pleasantly situated on the northern bank of the Tees, by which it is separated from Yorkshire.

AISLABY, or AYSLEYBY, a chapelry, in the parish and union of WHITBY, E. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Whitby; containing 346 inhabitants. The township comprises about 1080 acres, abounding in the most picturesque scenery, interspersed with several neat mansions: in the neighbourhood are numerous quarries of excellent stone, wrought for various purposes, and shipped from Whitby, between which place and Pickering is a communication by railway. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Mrs. R. Boulby, with a net income of £87; the chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret. A school, in union with the National Society, was established in 1823, and is supported by subscription. About a mile from the village is a fine spring, called St. Kilda's well, which runs directly into the river Esk, two miles from its source.

AISLABY, a township, in the parish of MIDDLETON, union, and W. division of the lythe, of PICKERING, N. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Pickering; containing 128 inhabitants. This place is on the road from Pickering to Helmsley; the surface is undulated, and the scenery pleasingly varied; there are quarries of sandstone for building, and limestone. Aislaby Hall, the seat of George Pitch, Esq., is finely situated within the limits of the township.

AISMUNDERBY, with BONDGATE, a township, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK; containing, with Bondgate and Marchingfield, extra parochial, 614 inhabitants. It adjoins Ripon on the south, and is partly within that borough; in the immediate vicinity are several handsome villas, and a little to the south lies the hamlet of Quarry Moor, noted for its lime-works. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges, amounting to £62, of which £24 are payable to impropiators, and £38 to the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. A national school, containing 180 boys, is supported by subscriptions, out of which the master receives a salary of 60 guineas; and there is also an hospital for the support of two aged widows.

AISTHORPE (ST. PETER), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union, and county, of LINCOLN, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Lincoln; containing 82 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 807 acres, and is intersected by the road from Lincoln to Barton. Stone is quarried for building purposes, and for making roads. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of West Thorpe annexed, valued in the king's books at £4. 10.; net income, £289; patrons, the Milnes family: the glebe consists of an acre and a half, with a cottage. The church is a plain edifice, erected about 40 years since, and consists of a nave, chancel, and tower.

AKEBAR, a township, in the parish of FINGALL, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. E. by E.) from Middleham; containing 30 inhabitants. It is on an acclivity opposite to Fingall, and comprises an area of 760 acres of land, set out in farms.

AKELD, a township, in the parish of KIRK-NEWTON, union of GLENDALE, W. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Wooler; containing 182 inhabitants. The village, which is small, is pleasantly situated near the river Glen, and the road from Wooler to Kirk-Newton. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £56, and the impropriate for one of £1. 13. Vestiges of a burial-place are discernible here, but there are no traces of any place of worship.

AKELY (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Buckingham; containing 362 inhabitants. This parish, according to a survey made in 1794, when the common was inclosed, comprises 1232a. 1r. 26p., of which the soil is a stiff clay, with the exception of some light land in that part which formed the common. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 4.; net income, £245; patrons, Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. There was formerly a chapel of ease at Stockholt, in the parish.

AKENHAM (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SURFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ipswich; containing 117 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory united to that of Claydon, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £260, and there are 20 acres of glebe, belonging to the incumbent.

Seal and Arms.

ALBAN'S (ST.), a borough and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Hertford, and 20 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 8604 inhabitants, including those portions of the parishes of St. Michael and St. Peter which extend beyond the limits of the borough. This place, separated from the site of the Roman Verulamium by the small river Ver, derived its name and origin from the magnificent monastery established here by Offa, King of Mercia, in commemoration of St. Albanus, the proto-Martyr of Britain. Verulam, according to the Roman historians, was founded by the Britons, at an earlier period than London: it was the chief station of Cassivellaunus, at the time of the invasion of Cæsar, who describes it as a place of great military strength, well defended by woods and marshes, and appears to have consisted of rude dwellings constructed of wood, and to have been surrounded by a rampart and fosse. In the reign of Nero it was accounted a Municipium, or free city; and in that of Claudius it was surprised by Boadicea, Queen of the Iceni, who slaughtered the chief part of the Roman and British inhabitants. After its restoration, it continued to be a primary station of the Romans until their final departure from Britain. During their occupation of it, Albanus, an eminent citizen, who had been converted to Christianity by Amphibalus, in 293, boldly refusing to abjure his new religion, was beheaded on the hill called Holmhurst, on which spot the monastery was erected in 793, for 100 Benedictine monks. About the middle of the fifth century, Verulam was occupied by the Saxons, and received the name of Watlingceaster, from the Roman highway, called Watling-street, on which it stood. According to Matthew Paris, the present town owes its origin to Ulsinus, or Ulsig, the sixth abbot, who, about the year 950, built a church on each of the three principal roads leading from the monastery, dedicated respectively to St. Stephen, St. Michael, and St. Peter, and encouraged the neighbouring inhabitants to erect houses, by supplying them with money and materials. Fritheric, or Frederic, the thirteenth abbot, opposed the march of the Norman conqueror, by causing the trees on the road side, near Berkhamstead, to be cut down and laid across the way; he was also principally instrumental in exacting from that sovereign an oath to observe the ancient laws of the realm. William subsequently deprived this church of a great portion of its lands, and would have destroyed the monastery, but for the interposition of Archbishop Lanfranc. The monks and the inhabitants had frequent quarrels; and, in the reign of Richard II., the insurgents in Wat Tyler's rebellion were aided by the latter in besieging the monastery. On their dispersion, the king repaired hither, attended by Judge Trevelyan and 1000 soldiers, to try the delinquents, and many of the townsmen were executed. The king remained eight days, on one of which the commons of the county assembled by his command; and, in the great court of the abbey, swore to be thenceforward faithful subjects. A sanguinary battle was fought here on the 22nd of May, 1455, between Henry VI. and the Duke of York, in which the Lancastrians were defeated, their leader, the Duke of Somerset, killed; and the king himself made prisoner. On the 17th of February, 1461, another engagement took place on Bernard heath, north of the town, when Queen Margaret compelled the Earl of Warwick to retreat with considerable loss: after this action, the town was plundered and much damaged. On the introduction of printing into England, about 1471, a press was put up in the abbey, from which issued some of those early specimens that are now so eagerly sought for by collectors: the first translation of the Bible was also made here. During the civil war between Charles I. and the parliament, a party of soldiers, under the Earl of Essex, garrisoned the town, and destroyed the beautiful cross, which was one of those erected by Edward I. in memory of his queen.

The TOWN is situated chiefly on the summit and northern declivity of a considerable eminence, and consists principally of three streets, the abbey church standing on the hill near the point where they meet. That part of it which forms the old line of the great north road is narrow, and contains many ancient houses; but the other parts are spacious and neatly built. It is well paved and lighted with gas under a local act obtained in 1803, and supplied with water from wells in the upper part of the town. By a diversion of the main road, about three hundred yards to the south, the former circuitous and dangerous route through the town is avoided; and on this new line of road, which is about two miles in length, some handsome villas, and one of the most commodious inns in the county, called the Verulam Arms, have been erected. The manufacture of straw-plat, in which about eight hundred persons are employed, is the chief occupation of the lower class of inhabitants: a silk-mill, occupying the site of the abbey-mill, affords employment to three hundred young persons; and in a mill for spinning cotton-wicks for candles, formerly applied to the cutting and polishing of diamonds, about sixty persons are engaged. Coal is conveyed on the canal for the supply of the town, from Boxmoor, about six miles distant. The market is on Saturday, for corn, straw-plat, and provisions: there is a fair on March 25th and 26th, for cattle and horses; and a statute fair is held on Oct. 11th, and the two following days.

St. Alban's is styled a BOROUGH in the record of Domesday, and is stated to have contained forty-six burgesses, who were the demesne men of the abbot, and continued under his jurisdiction (with the exception of a brief interval in the reigns of Edward II. and III.) until the dissolution, when the possessions of the monastery were surrendered to the crown; and the inhabitants were incorporated in the 7th of Edward VI., by a charter which was modified in subsequent reigns, and confirmed in the 16th of Charles II. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the corporation bears the title of the "Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses," and consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, together forming the council of the borough, of which the municipal and parliamentary boundaries are now the same. The freedom is inherited by the eldest sons of freemen (subject to a peculiar modification), or acquired by servitude: the right by birth accrues, on the death of his father within the borough, to the son of a freeman first born within the borough after the father has taken up his freedom; but the father may, in his lifetime, to the exclusion of the first, confer the right of succeeding him on any other son born after he became free: an exception, nevertheless, exists in favour of aldermen, whose eldest or chosen son may succeed, whether born before or after the father has taken up his freedom. The town first received the elective franchise in the 35th of Edward I., which was suspended from the 5th of Edward III. till the 1st of Edward VI., since which time it has continued to return two members to parliament. The right of election was formerly vested in the freemen, whether resident or not, and in those householders who had been six months resident in the borough, paying scot and lot; but by the act of the 2nd of William IV. it has been confined to the resident burgesses and the rate-payers, the latter 709 in number: the mayor is the returning officer. The limits of the borough have been extended by the act of the 2nd and 3rd of William IV., cap. 64; they formerly comprised, by computation, 308 acres, and are now estimated to contain 425. The mayor, the late mayor, and the recorder, are justices of the peace, and hold courts of quarter-session: the mayor presides at a court of aldermen, on the first Wednesday in every month, for the transaction of public business; and petty-sessions are held every Saturday. The court of record, for pleas to the amount of £50, has fallen into disuse. A court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held by certain commissioners appointed under an act passed in the 25th of George II., every Saturday, the jurisdiction of which extends over the borough and liberty. The magistrates for the liberty hold quarter-sessions here for that division. The liberty surrounds, and is entirely distinct from, the borough, the magistrates of the one having no jurisdiction in the other; it comprises the divisions of Barnet, Watford, and St. Alban's, and extends into twenty-two parishes. The former town-hall was originally the charnel-house of the monastery; but a handsome and commodious edifice was erected in 1830. The ancient prison of the monastery is now appropriated to the confinement of criminals committed for the borough and liberty, but is ill adapted to the purposes of a gaol.

The venerable ABBEY, rich in lordships and immunities, continued to flourish under a succession of forty abbots, who enjoyed both spiritual and temporal authority, having a palatine jurisdiction similar to that possessed by the bishops of Durham and Ely; they had also a precedence from Pope Adrian IV. over all other abbots, with an exclusive exemption from the payment of Peter's pence, which, according to Camden, they possessed the power of collecting throughout the county, and applying to their own use. Henry VIII. granted the abbey, which, at the dissolution, had a revenue, according to Dugdale, of £2102. 7. 1., to Sir Richard Lee, but retained the church, since made parochial, which Edward VI., in 1553, granted for a pecuniary consideration to the mayor and burgesses. The abbey is a cruciform structure, six hundred feet in length, and consists of a nave, two aisles, choir, presbytery, lady chapel, and two transepts, with a large square tower rising from the intersection. The choir is separated from the nave by St. Cuthbert's screen, which, with the elaborately carved screen over the altar, the ceiling (partly groined, and partly enriched with Mosaic paintings), and the tombs of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, and Abbot Ramryge, presents a rich and imposing appearance. The tower, supported on four arches, the two transepts, and a greater part of the choir, were built of Roman tiles from the ancient city of Verulam, about the year 1077, and exhibit the Norman style of architecture; the remainder, erected about the reign of Henry III., is in the early English style, with sharply pointed arches. Many fine brasses, in memory of the abbots, were taken by Cromwell's soldiers, and the church was much damaged by the prisoners who were confined in it during the parliamentary war.

The town comprises the parish of St. Alban, or the Abbey parish, and parts of the parishes of St. Michael and St. Peter. The living of St. Alban's is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £111; patron and incumbent, Dr. Nicholson, who purchased the advowson from the mayor and corporation. A lectureship was founded in the church in 1640, by Francis Combe, Esq., who endowed it with £10 per annum. The living of St. Peter's is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 0. 10.; net income, £308; patron, Bishop of Ely. The church, erected by Abbot Ulsinus, in 948, has been rebuilt within the last fifty years. The living of St. Michael's is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 1. 8.; net income, £300; patron and impropiator, Earl of Verulam. The church is a small edifice, erected by the same abbot, and contains, in a niche on the northern side of the chancel, a finely sculptured alabaster statue of Lord Bacon, who was interred here. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. The Free Grammar school was erected in or about the year 1569, by the mayor and burgesses, under their charter of incorporation bestowed by Edward VI.; and was endowed by letters-patent of Elizabeth and James I., granting power to the mayor and burgesses to license dealers in wine in the borough, from which source it now has an income of £45; also in 1595, by Richard Raynshaw, with 37 acres of land in the parish of St. Peter, let for £25. 4. per annum; and by Richard Platt with a piece of land yielding a rental of £1. 7.; making, with the dividends on £1500 three per cent. reduced annuities, arising from accumulated funds, a total income of £157. The school-room, adjoining the Abbey church, was formerly the beautiful chapel of the Virgin. Dr. Aubrey Spencer, Bishop of Jamaica, and Dr. George Spencer, Bishop of Madras, were educated here. There are also a few other schools, supported by charity. The almshouses, called Marlborough buildings, containing apartments for thirty-six persons of both sexes, were built and endowed by Sarah, Duchess Dowager of Marlborough, in 1736: they occupy three sides of a quadrangle, on the site of the old manor-house of Newland-Squillers; and the income, arising from property in the counties of Warwick and Surrey, now amounts to £757 per annum. The church lands, appropriated to the repairs of the abbey, together with several benefactions for the same purpose, produce a revenue of £220, and there are numerous bequests for the relief of the necessitous. The poor law union of St. Alban's comprises eight parishes or places, and contains a population of 17,051.

In the town is a high square brick tower, with a house attached, called the Clock house, built by one of the abbots in the reign of Henry VIII., and conveyed to the corporation in the 29th of Elizabeth; the house and lower part of the tower are let as a shop, and in the upper part is a public clock. At the distance of half a mile to the south-east, are some fine remains of the nunnery of Sopwell, founded in 1140, by Abbot Geoffrey de Gorham, and of which the lady Juliana Berners was at one time prioress: like the monastery, it was built of Roman tiles and bricks, and partly of flints. Of two hospitals, founded by the abbots, and dedicated respectively to St. Julian and St. Mary de Pratis, there is not a single vestige. On the left of the road leading to Dunstable, a few fragments of the ancient walls of Verulam are still discernible; and in a field adjoining the town, called New England, are some hills supposed to have been the site of the camp of Ostorius, and thence vulgarly styled Oyster hills. There is a mineral spring in a garden near St. Michael's bridge. Matthew Paris, one of the most eminent of the old English historians, was a monk in the abbey; and among the most distinguished natives of the town may be enumerated Alexander Necham, a poet and scholastic divine; Sir John Mandeville, the celebrated traveller; and Sir John King, and Sir Francis Pemberton, two eminent lawyers. Breakspear's farm-house, in the vicinity, was the birthplace of Nicholas Breakspear, the only Englishman that ever sat in the papal chair; on his elevation he assumed the name of Adrian IV.; he was a great benefactor to the abbey. St. Alban's gives the title of Duke to the family of Beauclerc; and the representative of the family of Grimstone enjoys the title of Earl of Verulam.

ALBERBURY, or ABERBURY (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, partly in the hundreds of CAWRSE and DEYTHUR, county of MONTGOMERY (North Wales), but chiefly in the hundred of FORD, S. division of SALOP, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Shrewsbury; containing, in the English portion of the parish, which includes the township of Alberbury and the chapelry of Wollaston, 1065 inhabitants, of whom 638 are in the township of Alberbury. This parish, the Welsh name of which is Llanvihangel-yn-Ghentyn, is partly bounded by the river Severn, and is intersected by the Roman Watling-street. There are some remains of a castle, built in the reign of Henry II., by Fulk Fitz-Warine, who founded an abbey for Black monks of the order of Grandmont, vestiges of which may still be traced about a mile from the castle: on the suppression of Alien priories, Henry VI. gave the site to the college of All Souls, Oxford, to which it still belongs. The parish comprises 1000 acres: coal is abundant, but none is at present worked. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 10.; net income, £187; patrons and impropriators, Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College. The glebe consists of 20 acres. A school is supported by subscription; and about £13 per annum, the interest of divers benefactions, is distributed amongst the poor on Christmas-day.

ALBOURNE (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the union of CUCKFIELD, hundred of TIPNOAK, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Hurst-Pierrepoint; containing 395 inhabitants, and comprising about 1400 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 2., and in the gift of John Goring, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £310, and the glebe consists of 10 acres. The church is an ancient structure; the nave is separated from the chancel by a fine Norman arch, and a north transept was added a few years since by C. Goring, Esq. There are two schools, chiefly supported by subscription. Albourne Place is said to have been built by Bishop Juxon, who retired hither after the death of Charles I., where he resided till the Restoration.

ALBRIGHTON (St. Mary), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of SHIFFNALL, Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Wolverhampton; containing 1058 inhabitants, and comprising 3424a. 1r. 33p. Pepperhill, an ancient mansion of the Shrewsbury family, is now converted into a farm-house. The living is a vicarage, endowed with nearly the whole of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £5. 10.; net income, £651; patrons, alternately, the Haberdashers' Company, and the Governors of Christ's Hospital, London: the glebe consists of 27 acres. The church, which has partly been rebuilt, has a Norman tower, with a small Saxon arch outside; the chancel is ancient, and has a fine eastern window; in the north-east angle, on a monument dated 1504, are effigies of a knight of the Talbot family, and of his lady, one of the Gifford family. The Duke of Shrewsbury lies buried here. A free school is principally supported from the tolls of the fairs, which are held on March 5th, May 23rd, July 18th, and Nov. 9th, for horned cattle, sheep, and hogs.

ALBRIGHTON (St. John), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, hundred of PIMHILL, N. division of SALOP, 4 miles (N.) from Shrewsbury; containing 85 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Spurrier family; net income, £52.

ALBURGH (All Saints), a parish, in the union of DEPWADE, hundred of EARSHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Harleston; containing 589 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1512 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £395; patron, the Earl of Effingham, who must present a member of St. John's College, Cambridge: the glebe consists of about 7 acres. The church, built partly in the early English, and partly in the perpendicular style, consists of a nave and chancel, with a lofty embattled tower; the nave is separated from the chancel by the remains of a beautiful carved screen, formerly highly gilt. Some town lands, left by Richard Wright before the reign of Henry VIII., are let for about £70, applied in aid of the poor-rate.

ALBURY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BISHOP-STORTFORD, hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Bishop-Stortford; containing 641 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 7.; net income, £264; patron and impropriator, Treasurer of St. Paul's Cathedral. A pleasure fair is held in July.

ALBURY (St. Helen), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3¼ miles (W. by S.) from Thame; containing, with the hamlet of Tiddington, 244 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 2. 8½; net income, £276; patron, Earl of Abingdon. The church has been lately rebuilt, principally through the munificence of the noble earl, and is fitted up throughout with open sittings of handsome old oak. Lady Mary Bertie, in 1737, gave a rent-charge of £10 for the instruction of poor boys.

ALBURY (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of GUILDFORD, Second division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, W. division of SURREY, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Guildford; containing 1079 inhabitants. It comprises 3596a. 17p., and includes the hamlets of Brooke and Little London; the sub-soil in general is chalk and sand. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 12. 8½, and in the gift of Henry Drummond, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £482. 10., and there are 78 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure, in the early English style, occupying a picturesque situation in Albury park; it contains two singular octangular pillars, resting upon circular bases of Sussex marble, supposed to have been removed from a Roman temple which stood on Blackheath. An additional church has recently been erected by Mr. Drummond, a cruciform edifice in the later English style. In 1754, William Resbridger bequeathed £400 for instructing children, purchasing bread for the poor, and other charitable purposes. National schools are supported by subscription. The Rev. T. R. Malthus, author of the celebrated "Essay on Population," was born here in 1766.

ALBY (ST. ETHELBERT), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 4¾ miles (N. by E.) from Aylsham; containing 299 inhabitants. This place, which was anciently called Oslyby, is intersected by the road from Aylsham to Cromer, and includes the hamlets of Alby Common and Alby Hill; it comprises about 840 acres, of which 634 are computed to be arable, 80 pasture, and 100 common or heath, inclosed in 1840. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 11. 8½, and in the gift of the Earl of Orford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £196, and there are 13 acres of glebe, with a small house. The church is in the early English and decorated styles.

ALCESTER, a liberty, in the parish of St. James, borough of SHAFTESBURY, locally in the hundred of MONCKTON-UP-WIMBORNE, county of DORSET; containing 334 inhabitants.

ALCESTER (ST. NICHOLAS), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the Alcester division of the hundred of BARNLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 15 miles (W. S. W.) from Warwick, and 103 (N. W. by W.) from London; containing 2399 inhabitants. The name of this place is a contraction of Alnceastre, with its position on the line of the Ikeneld-street (which may still be traced within a mile to the north-west), and the discovery of numerous relics of antiquity, affords indubitable evidence of its having been a Roman station, which by most antiquaries has been identified with the Alauna of the Itineraries. In the time of the Saxons it was a place of great importance, and a royal residence; and the inhabitants are described by Capgrave as given to luxury and viciousness from an abundance of worldly wealth. Egwin, third bishop of Huicca, who first preached Christianity here, founded the abbey of Evesham, and at a general synod held at this place, at which were present Bertwald, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Wilfred, Archbishop of York, the endowments of that house were confirmed. Alcester is said to have been formerly of much greater extent than at present, and to have contained three parochial churches; which opinion is corroborated by the discovery of human skeletons, and numerous foundations of ancient buildings, in that part of the parish called the Blacklands, now an extensive meadow, lying between the present town and the bridge over the Alne, to which, in all probability, it formerly extended; and also by the site of a monastery, founded in 1140, by Ralph de Boteler, for Benedictine monks, afterwards made a cell to the abbey of Evesham, and valued, at the dissolution, at £101. 14. per annum. The remains have been converted into a farm-house, and are situated about half a mile to the north-east of the town, in the centre of which, according to Leland, they originally stood. In the reign of Henry I. the place was a free borough, and in that of Henry II. it was rated, among the other boroughs in the county, at four marks as a yearly aid. In the 21st of Edward I., Sir Walter de Beauchamp, lord of a moiety of the manor, obtained the grant of an annual fair for eight days, to begin on the eve of St. Giles; which being found inconvenient, it was transferred to the eve of St. Faith by another charter in the 30th of that monarch's reign. In the 23th of the same reign he also received a grant of free warren in all his demesne lands here and elsewhere. His son Walter, in the 13th of Edward II., obtained a charter for another fair, to be held annually for eight days, beginning on the eve of St. Barnabas the Apostle; and his brother and successor, Giles, procured in the 14th of Edward III., a charter to fortify and embattle his manor-house here. His great-grandson, Sir John Beauchamp, purchased the other moiety of the manor from the family of Botreaux, and having thus become lord of the whole, obtained, in the 25th of Henry VI., a charter confirming the privilege of a court leet with waifs and estrays, a market, and all other privileges previously enjoyed by his predecessors.

The TOWN is pleasantly situated on the river Arrow, at its confluence with the Alne, in a fertile and richly-cultivated vale, surrounded with finely-wooded eminences; and consists of one principal street, from which, near the market-place, others diverge in the direction of the roads to Birmingham, Stratford-upon-Avon, and Evesham. The houses are in many instances well built, and of handsome appearance, occasionally interspersed with ancient buildings having projecting upper stories, and many modern brick-built cottages. The principal manufacture is that of needles and fish-hooks, in which from 500 to 600 persons are employed. The market, denoting its situation on the river Alne, and together which is well supplied with corn, is on Tuesday; and the fairs, principally for cattle, horses, and sheep, are on Jan. 26th, March 23rd, May 18th, July 27th, Oct. 18th, and Dec. 7th. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates; and a court leet is held annually in November, when bailiffs and constables are appointed by the steward of the manor. The town-hall, situated in the centre of the market-place, is a plain building, of which the lower part, appropriated to the use of the market, is of stone, supported on circular arches and round Tuscan columns. The parish comprises by measurement 1200 acres of good fertile land, and extends to the Ridge Way, which separates a portion of the county from that of Worcester. The LIVING is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 18. 10., and in the gift of the Marquess of Hertford: the income arises from land granted in lieu of tithes, comprising 90 acres, valued at £215 per annum. The church, formerly dedicated to St. Andrew, was built in the beginning of the thirteenth century; but of the original structure only the tower remains, the battlements of which, together with the body of the church, were rebuilt in 1732, when the church was dedicated to St. Nicholas; it has been lately rendered more commodious by extensive galleries erected at the expense of the rector. The exterior preserves a characteristic appearance, harmonizing with the tower, to which the interior, with a flat ceiling supported on round Tuscan pillars separating the aisles from the nave, forms a striking contrast. Near the altar is a tomb with recumbent effigies of Sir Fulke Greville and his lady, finely sculptured and coloured, and an elegant monument to the second Marquess of Hertford, in which his effigy, in a sitting posture, is beautifully represented in white marble. Two chantries were formerly existing in the church; one in a chapel of "Our Lady," founded by one of the Botelers of Oversley; and the other by John, son of Giles de Beauchamp, in the 36th of Edward III. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. The free school, which is open to all the boys of the parish, was instituted in 1592, by Walter Newport, of Goldney, in the county of Northampton, who endowed it with £400, producing £20 per annum, which is paid to the master, who has also a house and garden rent-free: there are but few boys on the foundation. Certain almshouses are endowed with land for eight poor women, who have a weekly allowance of two shillings and four-pence, and receive from Lady Warwick's charity a black gown annually; and there are also other charitable bequests for apprenticing children and for distribution. The poor law union of Alcester comprises 18 parishes and places in the county of Warwick, and 4 in that of Worcester; and contains a population of 16,833. Among the Roman antiquities found in the town and its immediate vicinity are numerous urns, coins, tessellated pavements, and other relics. Beauchamp's Court, the ancient manor-house, now a farm, about a mile and a half distant, gives the title of Baron to the Earl of Warwick.

ALCISTON, a parish, in the union of WEST FIRLE, hundred of ALCISTON, rape of PEVENSEX, E. division of SUSSEX, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Lewes, containing 275 inhabitants. It comprises about 2100 acres, a portion of which consists of chalky downs. The living is a discharged vicarage, united by act of council in 1840 to Selmeston, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £50; patron, the Prebendary of Heathfield in the Cathedral of Chichester for two turns, and the Dean and Chapter for one; the latter are the impropiators. The church has some remains of Norman architecture, with an admixture of the early English style.

ALCOMBE, a hamlet, in the parish of DUNSTER, union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of DORSET; containing 259 inhabitants.

ALCONBURY (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Huntingdon; containing 823 inhabitants, and comprising about 4000 acres. A fair is held on Midsummer-day. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Alconbury-Weston annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 6. 1.; net income, £162; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The glebe comprises 186 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ALCONBURY-WESTON, a parish, in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 6 miles (N. W.) from Huntingdon; containing 491 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Alconbury.

ALCUMLOW, with MORETON, a township, in the parish of ASTBURY, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing 148 inhabitants.

ALDBOROUGH (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N.) from Aylsham; containing 293 inhabitants. It comprises 788a. 9p., of which 434 acres are arable, 287 pasture and meadow, and 20 woodland. A stock and pleasure fair is held on June 22nd. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of Lord Suffield: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £192. 10., and the glebe consists of 26 acres, with a good house. The church, chiefly in the decorated style, contains several neat memorials to the family of Gay, and some sepulchral brasses to the Herwards, from whom the Gays were descended.

ALDBOROUGH, or ALDEBURGH (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a sea-port and parish (formerly a representative borough and market-town), having separate jurisdiction, in the union, and locally in the hundred, of PLOMESGATE, S. division of SUFFOLK, 25 miles (N. E. by E.) from Ipswich, and 94 (N. E.) from London; containing 1557 inhabitants.

This place takes its name from its situation on the river Alde, and was formerly of very considerable extent and importance, possessing many valuable privileges. Owing to the encroachment of the sea (which, within the last century, has destroyed the market-place, with an entire street and a great number of houses), it has been reduced to an inconsiderable town; but from the salubrity of the air and the convenience of the shore for sea-bathing, it has lately become a place of fashionable resort during the summer; baths for the accommodation of visitors have been erected, and machines are in attendance on the beach. The town is situated in a pleasant vale, rather below the level of high-water mark, having the river Alde on the north, and on the south the navigable river Ore, which flows from Orford to this place: it is sheltered by a steep hill, the extended summit of which forms a magnificent terrace, affording a delightful promenade, and a beautifully diversified prospect, embracing an extensive view of the North Sea. The strand, to which the descent from the town is gradual, consists of firm sand, favourable for bathing and walking. At the southern extremity of the main street, which is nearly a mile in length, are a battery, on which, during the late war, two eighteen-pounders were mounted, another of five guns, and a martello tower, for the protection of the coast. The old houses are in general ill-constructed, but those erected by families residing here during the season, or for the accommodation of visitors, are well built and respectable; among which is an elegant marine villa, in the Italian style, built by the late Leveson Vernon, Esq. There is a public subscription library, situated on the Head; a neat and commodious theatre is open for a few weeks during the season; and assemblies are held occasionally at the principal inns. The trade of the port consists chiefly in the exportation of corn, and the importation of coal and timber, in which forty-six vessels, averaging fifty-two tons' burthen, are employed. The custom-house is a neat and convenient building near the quay; and the harbour, which is safe and commodious, attracts a number of seafaring people and fishermen, by whom the town is principally inhabited. Many of these are Trinity-house pilots, who form themselves into small associations, and purchase swift-sailing cutters, in which they traverse the North Sea, frequently approaching the coast of Norway, in search of vessels requiring assistance. The chief employment of the other inhabitants consists in the taking and drying of herrings and sprats, the latter of which are found here in profusion, and exported to Holland: soles and lobsters of superior flavour are taken also in abundance. The market, formerly on Wednesday and Saturday, has been discontinued; the fairs are held on March 1st and May 3rd.

Aldborough claims to be a borough by prescription: the earliest charter extant was granted by Henry VIII. in 1529, since which it has received several others, the last and governing charter being granted by Charles I. in 1637. The officers of the corporation are two bailiffs, ten capital and twenty-four inferior burgesses, a recorder, town-clerk, two chamberlains, two serjeants-at-mace, and others; and the bailiffs, late bailiffs, and recorder are justices of the peace for the borough, which is co-extensive with the parish. The revenue arises principally from the proceeds of the town marshes, comprising 188 acres of land used for depasturing cattle, which were purchased in 1610, and are vested in trustees. The town-hall is an ancient building of timber, under which is the common gaol, consisting of a single cell, for the confinement of disorderly persons; the borough magistrates generally commit to the county gaol. The borough first exercised the elective franchise in the 13th of Elizabeth, from which time, until its disfranchisement by the Reform Act, in the 2nd of William IV., it returned two members to parliament: the right of election was vested in the bailiffs and burgesses not receiving alms, and the bailiffs were the returning officers. The parish comprises by measurement 1150 acres; it contains a small portion of good arable land, but it chiefly consists of heath, and of land laid out in sheep-walks. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., with a net income of £220: it is in the patronage of F. J. V. Wentworth, Esq., and there is a manor of 13 acres attached to it. The church is an ancient structure of flint and freestone, standing on the summit of a hill at the northern extremity of the town, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a turret, affording an excellent land-mark for mariners. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. A national school is supported by subscription, and the rental of a quay, or wharf, on the river Ore, is applicable to the purposes of education. This is the birth-place of the poet Crabbe.

ALDBOROUGH (St. Andrew), a parish, partly in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding, but chiefly in the Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK; comprising the ancient borough towns of Aldborough and Boroughbridge, and the townships of Minskip, Rocliff, and Upper and Lower Dunsforth, part of that of Humberton with Milby, and the whole of Ellenthorpe in the N. riding; and containing 2473 inhabitants, of whom 615 are in the township of Aldborough, $16\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from York, and $205\frac{1}{2}$ (N. N. W.) from London. The town, which is situated upon the southern bank of the river Ure, and upon the line of the northern Watling-street, was the celebrated and important Roman station called Isurium Brigantium, and received from the Saxons the name of Eald-burgh, denoting its antiquity even in their time. Its destruction is attributed to the Danes, by whom it was sacked and burnt to the ground, about the year 870. The elective franchise was granted by Philip and Mary, in 1558; but by the Reform Act the borough was deprived of the privilege of returning members. The right of election was vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, in number about sixty; and the bailiff, who was appointed by the electors, was the returning officer. The town is now only a rural village, beautifully situated. The parish comprises 4600 acres; the scenery is varied, and in some points picturesque. Aldborough Lodge, the seat of Basil T. Woodd, Esq., J. P., is a handsome residence, in grounds tastefully laid out.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, and is a peculiar of the Dean and Chapter of York, valued in the king's books at £9. 19. 5.; net income, £368; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. The tithes of the township of Aldborough were commuted for land and a money payment, by an inclosure act, in 1808. The church, supposed to have been built out of the ruins of Isurium, has several antique monuments, and on the outside is a figure of Mercury, $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet in length. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a school in connexion with the National Society is supported by subscription. The foundations of the walls of the ancient city, which included a quadrilateral area of 2500 yards, may still be traced. Near the centre are vestiges of a mount, called the Borough Hill, removed in 1783, and believed, from the remains then discovered, to have been the site of a Roman temple; and about a hundred paces from the south wall is a semicircular outwork, named Studforth, 200 feet long, with a slope of 30 feet, forming a lofty terrace, on the south side of the town. Many Roman remains, consisting of tessellated pavements, military weapons, coins, &c., have at various times been discovered, and are preserved in the pleasure-grounds of Aldborough Lodge, where are remains of a Roman encampment; and in the village is a beautiful tessellated pavement, under a wood covering.

ALDBOURN (St. MICHAEL), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of SELKLEY, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and Northern, divisions of WILTS, 6 miles (N. E.) from Marlborough; containing 1556 inhabitants. The name is compounded of the Saxon terms Ald, old, and bourne, a brook. Aldbourn anciently gave name to a royal chase, granted by Henry VIII. to Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, which for a long period served only as a rabbit-warren, but is now inclosed and cultivated. Previously to the battle of Newbury, in the reign of Charles I., a sharp skirmish took place here between the parliamentary forces and the royalists. In 1760, a fire consumed seventy-two houses; and, in 1817, twenty were destroyed by a similar calamity. The parish comprises 8495*a.* 3*r.* 19*p.*, of which 5037 acres are arable, 839 meadow and pasture, and 226 woodland; the surface is generally undulated, and the quality of the soil is various, presenting a sand-gritty substance together with red clayey gravel and black turfy mould, and in some places chalk and flint. The town, situated in a fertile valley, has a willow-factory for bonnet frames, in which about 100 females are employed. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £26. 6. 3.; patron, Bishop of Salisbury; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1475, and the small tithes for one of £210: the rectorial glebe comprises about 120 acres; the vicarial consists chiefly of allotments made under an act of parliament, and is valued at £262 per annum. The church, an ancient structure, exhibiting portions in the Norman style, has a tower erected at the cost of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster; and the southern part of the vicarage-house is supposed to be the remains of a hunting seat, which belonged to him. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Near a farm-house, called Pierce's Lodge, are vestiges of an ancient British encampment; and in the neighbourhood may be seen various artificial mounds of earth.

ALDBROUGH (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of SKIRLAUGH, Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Aldbrough, Newton-East, and Newton-West, with part of Great and Little Cowden; and containing 1119 inhabitants, of whom 845 are in the township of Aldbrough, 11½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Hull. The township of Aldbrough comprises upwards of 4000 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and one-third is pasture; the soil, generally, is strong and tenacious; and bricks and tiles are manufactured. The village, which is large and convenient, is pleasantly situated on an eminence about a mile from the sea, and includes some good houses and shops, and a large hotel, recently built, for the accommodation of visitors who resort hither for sea-bathing. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 15., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £350: the rectorial tithes for the lordship of Aldbrough were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1764. The church, the oldest in Holderness, is a large and ancient edifice, and contains a circular stone, bearing this Saxon inscription: "Ulf commanded this church to be built for the soul of Hanum and Gunthral." Ulf was lord of the place, and had a castle here, every vestige of which, except the moat, has been destroyed. The chantry on the north side of the chancel contains a very splendid monument of Sir John de Melsa and his lady; the Knight was governor of the city of York from 1292 to 1296, and a great warrior; his massive helmet is preserved. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The rental of certain land, left by Mr. Towry, is appropriated to the instruction of children and relief of the poor; and three inhabitants of the parish are eligible to Tymperon's almshouses at Beverley. Slight traces of a Roman road are discernible in the vicinity.

ALDBROUGH, a township, in the parish of STANWICK-ST. JOHN, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 7 miles (W. S. W.) from Darlington; containing 544 inhabitants. It is a large and pleasant village, situated on a small rivulet, and the lands in the vicinity are fertile and productive. Carlton Hall, a mile to the north, was formerly the seat of S. B. M. Barrett, Esq., who built a school here, which is supported by Lord Prudhoe, lord of the manor, and other subscribers. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ALDBURY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BERKHAMPTSTEAD, hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Tring; containing 790 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 2102 acres. The village is pleasantly situated at the foot of the Chiltern Hills, the summits of which are crowned with thick plantations; and the Tring station of the London and Birmingham railway is only about a mile distant from the church. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 8. 6½., and in the patronage of the Countess of Bridgewater: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £374, and the glebe comprises 32 acres. The church is in the early style of English architecture, and contains an altar-tomb of an armed knight, in a recumbent posture, and his lady; also another, with brasses, to a knight and his lady, and their nine sons and three daughters; both executed in the richest style of ancient sculpture. There are two places of worship for Baptists. Several schools are supported; and the poor have the produce of some bequests left for their relief.

ALDCLIFFE, a township, in the parish of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 1½ mile (S. W.) from Lancaster; containing 111 inhabitants.

ALDEBURGH.—See ALDBOROUGH.

ALDEBY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of CLAVERING, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. E.) from Beccles; containing 496 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the navigable river Waveney, which separates it from the county of Suffolk; and comprises 3043 acres by admeasurement. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £120; patrons and appropriators, Dean and

Chapter of Norwich. The church, a cruciform structure, with a south chapel, is partly in the early and partly in the perpendicular style; the entrance to the west is through a rich Norman doorway; the tower rises between the nave and chancel. A national school was erected in 1840. £40, the rental of land, are annually distributed among the poor. Here was a small priory, a cell to the Benedictine abbey of Norwich, which, at the dissolution, was given by Henry VIII. as part of the endowment of that cathedral.

ALDENHAM (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WATFORD, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Watford; containing, with the hamlet of Theobald Street, 1662 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £24, and in the gift of the Trustees of P. Thellusson, Esq.: the inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £778, and the vicarial for £110. The church is in the early English style, and contains some highly ornamented screen-work, the effigies of two females in stone, and an enriched font. The free grammar school was founded and endowed in 1599, by Richard Platt, citizen of London, for sixty children, to be chosen from among the poor of Aldenham and the families of freemen of the Brewers' Company, London; and, in default of the full number of scholars from Aldenham, from the poor of the adjacent parishes, the children of the founder's name and kin to have the preference. In consequence of a great improvement in the value of the property, the master and wardens of the company, who were constituted the governors, decided upon extending its benefits; and the present buildings, called the "Upper and Lower Schools," were erected in 1825, the latter school being designed for the sons of farmers and labourers of Aldenham, to be taught on the national system. The same munificent benefactor also endowed six almshouses; and a school, established in 1826, is supported by Lady Pole. Elizabeth Brown, in the 16th year of Charles I., bequeathed a rent-charge of £15, which is distributed at Christmas, in coal and clothing, among the poor.

ALDERBURY (St. MARY), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of ALDERBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Salisbury; containing, with Farley and Pitton chapelries, 1440 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Treasurer of Sarum, with a net income of £162: the great tithes were commuted for land and an annual money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1803. At Farley and Pitton, in the parish, are chapels of ease. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a small endowed free school. The Rev. Gabriel Thistlethwaite, by deed in 1708, gave ten acres of land at Whaddon in the vicinity, now let for £15 per annum, of which £10 are appropriated for the benefit of the poor of Alderbury and Whaddon; and a rent-charge of £5, under the will of James Ely, is occasionally applied to the apprenticing of children. The poor law union of Alderbury comprises 22 parishes or places, and contains a population of 14,171. A monastery formerly existed at Ivy Church, in the parish, the site of which is now occupied by a modern residence.

ALDERFORD (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of ST. FAITH'S, hundred of EYNSFORD, E. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Reepham; containing 44 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the south by the river Wensum, and intersected by the road from Norwich to Reepham, comprises 431a. 16p., chiefly arable. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Attlebridge consolidated, valued in the king's books at £4. 6. 8.; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Norwich. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £137, and the glebe consists of 7 acres, with a small cottage. The church is in the early, decorated, and later English styles, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower; the font is curiously and elaborately sculptured.

ALDERHOLT, a tything, in the parish and hundred of CRANBORNE, union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, Wimborne division of DORSET; containing 404 inhabitants.

ALDERLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Macclesfield; containing 1538 inhabitants, of whom 455 are in the township of Upper Alderley, 679 in that of Lower Alderley, and 404 in that of Great Warford. This parish comprises by computation 6009 acres of fertile land; the surface is greatly diversified, and towards the north-east the ground rises gradually, forming an elevation called Alderley Edge, which terminates abruptly, and commands an extensive view. Alderley Park, the seat of Lord Stanley, forms an interesting feature in the landscape; in the grounds is a fine sheet of water, called Radnor Mere, a wood near which contains some of the finest beech trees in England. A few of the inhabitants are engaged in weaving for the manufacturers of the neighbouring towns. The branch of the Manchester and Birmingham railway from Stockport to Crewe passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 10. 10.; net income, £514; patron, Lord Stanley. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, and one for Baptists at Great Warford. An ancient school-house in the churchyard, some time after its erection, was endowed with £250, which has been placed at interest in the hands of Lord Stanley, who pays the master £10 per annum; and there is also another school, which is principally supported by his lordship. On the high ground of Alderley Edge is a fine spring, called the Holy Well. The title of Baron Stanley, of Alderley, was created in 1839.

ALDERLEY (St. KENELME), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-SODBURY, Upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Wotton-under-Edge; containing 174 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence between two streams which unite and fall into the river Severn at Berkeley, and commands an extensive and interesting view to the south and south-west. There is a manufactory of cloth which affords employment to between one and two hundred persons. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 4. 7., and in the gift of R. H. B. Hale, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £155. 5. 8., and there are about 25 acres of glebe. The Rev. Potter Cole was, in 1730, presented to this benefice, which he held till the year 1800. Cornua ammonis and other fossils are found. Sir Matthew Hale, lord chief justice in the reign of Charles II., was born here, Nov. 1st, 1609, and lies interred in the churchyard.

ALDERMASTON, or ALDMERSTON (St. Mary), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, 10 miles (S. W. by W.) from Reading; containing 662 inhabitants. This place was distinguished by various military operations in the civil war. The royal army under the command of Col. Gage, on its way from Oxford to Basing House in 1643, halted at the village: on its return, finding the enemy in possession of the place, the troops were ordered to march by a different route. The Earl of Essex was here with his army in the same year, and proceeded hence by Padworth and Bucklebury heath to Newbury, immediately before the second battle fought near that town. The parish comprises 3689*a. 6p.*, and is intersected by the river Kennet. Fairs are held on May 6th, July 7th, and Oct. 11th. The living is a peculiar, in the gift of the lord of the manor, valued in the king's books at £12. 12. 8½. The tithes were formerly appropriated to the priory of Sherborne, subject to the payment of a small quit-rent to Queen's College, Oxford; but since the reign of Elizabeth they have belonged to the lord of the manor; they have been commuted for a rent-charge of £535. The church is an ancient structure, and contains several fine old monuments of the families of Orchard, De la Mere, and Foster. The Rev. Robert Dixon, an incumbent, built four almshouses for poor widows, in 1706; and there is a national school.

ALDERMINSTER (St. Mary), a parish, partly in the Upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, but chiefly in the Upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, union of STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, Blockley and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, of which it is a detached portion, surrounded by Warwickshire, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Stratford; containing 508 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 3000 acres; it is bounded on the south-west by the river Stour, and has a great variety of soil. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7; the patronage and impropriation belong to the Crown. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £188. 4. 6., and those of the incumbent for £160. 19. 6.; the glebe comprises 20 acres in this parish, and 3½ acres in that of Bengworth, near Evesham. The church is a curious cruciform edifice, with a low tower; the nave is in the Norman style.

ALDERNEY, an island, dependent on, and under the jurisdiction of, the states of Guernsey, situated 6 leagues (N. E.) from that island, and 7 miles (W.) from Cape La Hogue, in Normandy (from which it is separated by a strait, called by the French "Raz Blanchard," and by the English the Race of Alderney), and containing 1030 inhabitants. This island, named in old English records Aurney, Aureney, and Aurigny, by which last name it is still designated by the French geographers, is supposed to have been the Riduna of Antoninus; but little of its history is known prior to the time of Henry III., in the fourth year of whose reign an act of parliament was passed, by which it appears that one moiety of the island belonged to that monarch, and the other moiety to the Bishop of Coutances. From an extent of the crown, made in the fourth year of the reign of James I., the whole of the island was the property of the king, who was entitled to the amends, or fines, and the perquisites of the court; to the treizièmes, or thirteenthths, upon the sale of lands; and to the wrecks, and other princely rights and royalties; but it was subsequently granted in fee-farm to successive tenants. George III., by letters patent under the great seal, bearing date Dec. 14th, 1763, in consideration of the surrender of the former lease, or patent, and for other considerations therein specified, granted the island to John Le Mesurier, Esq., for 99 years, with a proviso for resuming the lease at any time, upon payment to the lessee of such amount of money as should have been disbursed in improving the mansion called the Governor's house, and the other premises; and in this grant was included the advowson of the church and chapel, with power to levy duties upon all vessels coming into the port of the island, in the same proportion as they are levied in the harbour of St. Peter's Port, in Guernsey. The rights and property of the island were, however, purchased by government from J. Le Mesurier, Esq., of Poole, who was the last governor.

The approach to the ISLAND, particularly in stormy weather, is dangerous, from the rapidity and diversity of the currents, which at spring tides rush in contrary directions, with a velocity of six miles an hour, and from the numerous rocks by which it is surrounded. These rocks were fatal to Prince Henry, son of Henry I., who was wrecked here on his return from Normandy, in 1119; and, in 1744, to the Victory man of war, which was lost with the whole crew, consisting of 1100 men: the French fleet, notwithstanding, escaped through this passage after its defeat at La Hogue, in 1692. About seven miles to the west are the Caskets, a cluster of rocks rising to a height of twenty-five to thirty fathoms from the water, and about one mile in circumference: on the south-west side is a naturally-formed harbour, in which a frigate may shelter as in a dock; steps are cut in the rock, and conveniences are provided for hauling up boats: there is also a smaller and less compact harbour on the north-east side. On these rocks three light-houses have been erected, and furnished with revolving reflectors. The island, which is four miles in length, one mile and a half in breadth, and nearly ten miles in circumference, shelves considerably to the north-east, and is intersected by deep valleys: the whole of the southern and eastern parts, from La Pendante to La Clanque, is bounded by cliffs varying in elevation from 100 to 200 feet, and presenting picturesque and striking scenery: the northern and eastern sides are terminated with lower cliffs, alternating with small bays and flat shores. The bay of Bray is remarkably fine, affording good anchorage to vessels, and at low water the sands are very extensive: Longy bay is also commodious; and Craby harbour, in which at spring tides the water rises to the height of twenty-five feet, affords every facility for a wet dock. The east side of the island consists chiefly of reddish sandstone, and the west side principally of porphyry, neither of which rocks is found in large masses in any of the other islands of the group. About one-half of the land is in cultivation; the remainder consists of common and furze land, affording good pasturage for sheep, but insufficient for cattle. The soil, though light and sandy, is in general good, and the system of agriculture similar to that of Guernsey; but the general appearance of the land is bare, as few trees and no thorn hedges are to be seen, the inclosures being formed by walls of loose stones, and furze banks. Of the Alderney breed of cows, which has taken its name from this island, Jersey and Guernsey furnish by far the greater number for exportation, this island but very few. The town is situated nearly in the centre of the island, and, with the exception of the Governor's house, contains few buildings worthy of notice; it is partially paved, and well supplied with water: there is a good road to Bray harbour, and another to Longy bay, where was an ancient nunnery, subsequently used as barracks during the war, and, since the peace converted into an hospital, and a dépôt for military stores. The pier, near which are several houses, is of rude construction, with but one projecting arm, affording shelter to vessels only from the north-east.

The CIVIL JURISDICTION is exercised by a judge and six jurats, the former of whom is nominated by the governor, and the latter elected by the commonalty; they hold their several appointments for life, unless removed for misbehaviour, or malversation in office; and, with the queen's officers, viz., the procureur, or attorney-general; the comptroller, or solicitor-general; and the greffier, or registrar, who is also nominated by the governor, compose the court, the decision of which, however, is not necessarily definitive, being subject to an appeal to the royal court at Guernsey, and from that to the queen in council. In all criminal cases the court of Alderney has only the power of receiving evidence, which is transmitted to the superior court of Guernsey, where judgment is pronounced, and the sentence of the law executed. The entire jurisprudence of the island is similar to that of Guernsey, as appears by the order of the royal commissioners sent to the island by Queen Elizabeth, in 1585. The judge and six jurats, together with the douzainiers, being twelve men chosen by the commonalty for their representatives, compose the assembly of the states of the island, wherein all ordinances for its government are proposed. But the douzainiers have only a deliberative voice, and no vote, the judge and jurats alone deciding upon the expediency of any proposed measure. The governor, or his lieutenant, must be present at each assembly, but has no vote in it. The public acts were first registered at Alderney in 1617, and the first contract was enrolled in the year 1666. The privileges of the charter are inherited by birth, or obtained by servitude.

It is not known at what time the CHURCH was built: it is an ancient edifice, not entitled to architectural notice; the tower was added to it in 1767, and a chapel near it was erected in 1763. From the year 1591 to 1607 Alderney was without an officiating minister, during which period baptisms and marriages were solemnized at Guernsey, and registered in the parish of St. Saviour. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school for boys, and another for girls, were founded by J. Le Mesurier, Esq., the last governor; the building was erected in 1790. The general hospital was erected in 1789, for the reception of patients, and is supported by subscription. The remains of the ancient nunnery have been converted into an hospital, substantially built of sandstone, and surrounded by a strong wall; and there still exists part of a castle begun by the Earl of Essex, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, but never finished, the ruinous foundations of which yet bear that favourite's name. The islet of Burhou, lying to the westward, is not inhabited, but is used by the governor as a rabbit-warren.

ALDERSEY, a township, in the parish of CODDINGTON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester; containing 138 inhabitants. Salt-works were carried on here in the middle of the sixteenth century; and there is still a brine spring in the neighbourhood, but it is not worked, owing to the distance from which coal must be brought for that purpose.

ALDERSHOTT (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the hundred of CRONDALL, Odiham and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Farnham; containing 685 inhabitants. It is situated on the road between Farnham and Guildford, and comprises 4130 acres, of which 731 are arable, 550 pasture, 130 woodland, 20 sites and gardens, 19 hops, and 2700 common. The Basingstoke canal passes within a mile and a half of the village. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £64; patrons, J. Eggar, S. Andrews, J. Alden, and W. Tice, Esqrs.; improPRIATORS, Master and Brethren of the Hospital of St. Cross, Winchester. The church contains a curious monument to the Titchbourne family, whose ancient seat has been converted into a farm-house. A school in union with the National Society has been established. There are some remains of an extensive Roman camp on Brixbury Hill.

ALDERTON (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMB, Upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Winchcomb; containing, with the hamlet of Dixon, 411 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 1750 acres; the surrounding country is picturesque and beautiful, and extensive views are commanded from the neighbouring hills. Near Alderton Hill stood the fine old mansion, recently taken down, where one of the ancestors of the family of Tracy (Lord Sudely) was born; and at Dixon is a large manor-house, where the Higfords, who have been great benefactors to the parish, resided for several centuries. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 1. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £337; patron, Rev. C. Covey. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £150; the glebe consists of about 9 acres, and a commodious parsonage-house has recently been built. The church, which is an ancient structure, is distinguished for the elegance of its arches. A school is supported by subscription. At Dixon Hill are the remains of a Saxon encampment. Numerous fossils are found in the stone quarries in the parish.

ALDERTON (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of POTTERS PURY, hundred of CLELEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Towcester; containing 166 inhabitants. On the north, the parish is bounded by the river Tow, and on the east partly by the road leading from Northampton to Stony-Stratford. It consists of 869a. 20p.; the surface is boldly undulated, and the village stands on the western declivity of an eminence. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Grafton-Regis, and valued in the king's books at £12.

ALDERTON (St. Andrew); a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of WILFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 7 miles (S. E. by S.) from Woodbridge; comprising 2635 acres by admeasurement, and containing 620 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 18. 4., and in the alternate patronage of the lords of the four manors in the parish, of whom the Bishop of Norwich, as lord of Alderton Hall, is one. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £630, and there are about 22 acres of glebe.

ALDERTON (St. Giles), a parish, in the union of MALMESBURY, and forming a detached portion of the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, 9 miles (N. W. by N.) from Chippenham; containing 183 inhabitants. It comprises 1584 acres, of which a considerable portion is waste land. Stone is quarried suitable for building and the repair of roads. The living is a perpetual curacy, united with the rectory of Sherston-Parva, to the vicarage of Sherston-Magna, and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £145, and the glebe consists of 47 acres, valued at £1 per acre. The church is a very ancient structure.

ALDERWASLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of WIRKSWORTH, union of BELPER, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Wirksworth; containing 398 inhabitants. There are iron-works and furnaces for smelting lead-ore in the neighbourhood. The chapel belongs to F. Hurst, Esq., who appoints the chaplain.

ALDFIELD, a chapelry, in the parish of RIPON, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Ripon; containing 132 inhabitants. This village, which is beautifully situated in the woody vale near Fountain's Abbey, is resorted to on account of its mineral springs, discovered about 1698, the sulphureous quality of which is said to be stronger than that of the Harrogate water. The surrounding scenery comprises all the variety and beauty of the picturesque spot of Matlock, in Derbyshire. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Mrs. Lawrence; net income, £72. Rent-charges amounting to £59. 12. have been awarded as a commutation for the tithes, of which sum £38 are payable to the trustees of Smith's charity, and £21. 12. to the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. A school in connexion with the National Society has been established.

ALDFORD (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON; comprising the townships of Aldford and Churton in the Higher, and those of Buerton and Edgerley in the Lower, division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER; and containing 835 inhabitants, of whom 488 are in the township of Aldford, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Chester, on the road to Farndon and Holt. This place, which had formerly a market and a fair, derives its name from an ancient ford on the river Dee, which divides it on the west from the county of Denbigh, North Wales, and over which a good bridge has been erected. In the reign of Henry II. a castle was built commanding the ford, of which, at present, only the earth-works, nearly adjoining the church, are remaining; and in the reign of Charles I. a garrison was placed here by Sir William Brereton, during the siege of Chester. The parish contains, by measurement, 2633 acres; there are two quarries for red sandstone. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 17. 8½., and in the gift of the Marquess of Westminster: the tithes of the township of Aldford have been commuted for a rent-charge of £315, and the glebe comprises 21 acres, with a large and commodious house. The church stands on the verge of the castle moat, and has been repaired in various styles; in the churchyard is the recumbent effigy of a female, sculptured in red stone. Schools are supported; and there are six almshouses for aged widows, endowed with £22 per annum. Vestiges of a Roman road, connecting the northern and southern branches of the Watling-street, are discernible in the parish.

ALDHAM, a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Great Coggeshall; containing 382 inhabitants. This place is situated on the river Colne, by which it is bounded on the north, and comprises an area of about four miles in circumference. Fairs are held at the hamlet of Ford-street on Easter-Tuesday and Nov. 1st. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £327; patron, Bishop of London. The church is a rude edifice, with a small wooden turret, and consists of a nave, south aisle, and chancel. A national school is supported; and £22 per annum, bequeathed by an unknown benefactor, are divided among 16 married persons who have not received parochial relief during the preceding twelve months. The Rev. Philip Morant, author of the History of Essex, was rector of the parish; he died Nov. 26th, 1770, aged 70 years, and was interred in the chancel of the church, where a monument has been erected to his memory. The learned Sir John Marsham, one of the six clerks in chancery, and author of several valuable works, was proprietor of Bourchiers Hall (now a farm-house), in the reign of Charles I., to whose fortunes he was a firm adherent.

ALDHAM (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of COSFORD, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Hadleigh; containing 293 inhabitants. It comprises 1742*a. 1r. 33p.*, and has, for the most part, a hilly surface; the land consists of arable, pasture, and wood, the last of which is tithe-free; and the soil is stiff clay, and produces good corn. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 13. 4.; net income, £290; patron, Thomas Barret Lennard, Esq.: the glebe consists of 45 acres. The church is situated on a hill, and is built of flint and stone, with a round tower: the advowson formerly belonged to the Earls of Oxford, whose arms are carved on the oak benches fitted up in the church in 1537. Dr. Rowland Taylor suffered martyrdom on the common of the parish, in 1555.

ALDINGBOURNE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of Box and Stockbridge, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Chichester; containing, with the hamlets of Lydsey and Westergate, 772 inhabitants. This was formerly the residence of the Bishops of Chichester, whose palace here was destroyed in the parliamentary war by Sir William Waller on his march to Arundel; and a castellated building near the palace, situated on a mound surrounded with a moat, was demolished at the same time. The road from Chichester to Arundel, and the Portsmouth and Arun canal, both pass through the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 5.; net income, £212; patron and appropriator, the Dean of Chichester. The church is a cruciform structure in the Norman style, with a square embattled tower which terminates the north transept: the south transept is an ancient chapel, to which is an entrance by a fine Norman doorway. At Lydsey, a small hamlet in the parish, was a chapel founded prior to the year 1282, of which there are now no remains. A national school is supported.

ALDINGHAM (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Ulverstone; containing 907 inhabitants. It is situated on the western shore of Morcombe bay, which has encroached so much upon the lands, that the church, said to have been formerly in the centre of the parish, is now within the reach of a high tide. From a promontory on the coast, which was once surrounded by a moat, and is supposed to have been an exploratory station during the incursions of the Picts and Scots, there is an extensive prospect over the counties of Westmorland and York. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £39. 19. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £1093.

ALDINGTON (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, partly in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, but chiefly in the franchise and barony of BIRCHOLT, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Hythe; containing 733 inhabitants. It is crossed by the South-Eastern railway. The living is a rectory, with the chapel of Smeeth annexed, valued in the king's books at £38. 6. 8.; net income, £1014; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury. The church displays the early English style in its general structure; the tower presents a specimen of very good masonry. A school for boys is supported by subscription. Erasmus, the celebrated divine, was rector of the parish.

ALDINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of BADSEY, union of EVESHAM, Upper division of the hundred of BLACKENHURST, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (E.) from Evesham; comprising 628 acres, and containing 102 inhabitants. On the west it is bounded by the Avon and on the north by a stream which falls into that river. The soil is of the most fertile quality.

ALDRIDGE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WALSALL, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Walsall; containing, with the chapelry of Great Barr, 2094 inhabitants, of whom 1007 are in the township of Aldridge. The neighbourhood affords a kind of clay, well adapted for the manufacture of the finest sort of pottery and tiles, which are made in great quantities. An extensive distillery is also carried on; and the trade of the district is greatly facilitated by the Wyrley and Essington Extension canal, which passes within a quarter of a mile of the village. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Great Barr annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 3.; net income, £905; patron, Sir E. D. Scott, Bart. The glebe comprises 30 acres. The Wesleyans have a place of worship; and there are two free schools; one with an endowment of about £110 per annum, founded in 1718, by the Rev.

John Jordan, and the other endowed with £12 per annum. The remains of a Roman encampment are visible in the parish.

ALDRINGHAM (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Aldborough; containing, with the hamlet of Thorpe, 401 inhabitants. The parish derives its name from the river Alde, (by some improperly called the Hundred brook,) which separates it from Aldborough: it comprises 860 acres. A market was formerly held, which has fallen into disuse: there is a small fair on St. Andrew's day, called Cold Fair. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £59; patron and impropiator, Lord Huntingfield, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £205. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

ALDRINGTON, EAST, a parish, in the union of STEYNING, hundred of FISHERGATE, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Brighton; containing about 650 acres. This place is by Camden, Stillingfleet, and others, identified with the Portus Adriani of the Romans; and urns, skeletons, pottery, and other relics of Roman antiquity have been frequently discovered in this and the adjoining parishes, which appear to have been the first points of attack when the Saxons began to infest the coasts. It is bounded on the south by the English Channel, which has made such encroachments on the land as to have completely destroyed the village, and the parish is now without any population, except one individual returned in the last census. The road and railway from Brighton to Shoreham both pass through it. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £294; patrons, the Masters and Fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge. The church is in ruins.

ALDSTONE.—See ALSTON.

ALDSWORTH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S BARROW, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Northleach; containing 365 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Turkdean; net income, £66. The tithes were commuted for land and an annual money payment, by an inclosure act, in 1793. The peculiar of Aldsworth is regularly inhibited during the bishop's visitation, although his right has been and still continues to be resisted by the patron and ordinary of the peculiar, notwithstanding an award of the Dean of Arches, in 1741, in the bishop's favour.

ALDSWORTH, a tything, in the parish and union of WEST BOURNE, hundred of WEST BOURNE and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, W. Division of SUSSEX; containing 118 inhabitants.

ALDWARK, a township, in the parish of ALNE, union of EASINGWOULD, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Boroughbridge; containing 224 inhabitants. This place comprises about 2220 acres, and was anciently a possession of a branch of the Fitzwilliam family: the village is seated in the vale of the Ouse, and nearly a mile to the south is Aldwark bridge, a substantial wooden structure, which crosses the river and its banks by twenty-seven arches and culverts. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £75, and the impropriate tithes for £3. 11.

ALDWARK, a township, in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, union of WORTLEY, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Rotherham. Aldwark, or "the old work," the seat of the Clarels, Fitzwilliams, and Foljambes, lies remote from the rest of the parish, and has consequently never been considered a part of Hallamshire: its long line of resident proprietors presents a fine subject for the genealogist and antiquary. About eleven years since the extensive corn and oil mills on the opposite side of the river Don, were burnt down.

ALDWARK, a township, in the parish of BRADBORNE, union of BAKEWELL, hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wirksworth; containing 82 inhabitants.

ALDWICK, a tything, in the parish of PAGHAM, union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of ALDWICK, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 203 inhabitants.

ALDWINKLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N.) from Thrapston; containing 272 inhabitants. It is situated on the navigable river Nene, and contains about 1000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 4. 2.; net income, £311; patron, Rev. R. Roberts, D.D. The tithes were commuted for land and a money-payment, by an inclosure act, in 1792; the glebe comprises 205 acres. The church is remarkable for its beautiful tower: it has some windows in the decorated English style, and a small ornamented chapel adjoining the southern side of the chancel. A school, with a small endowment, is further supported by subscription; and the sum of £30 per annum, the rental of a plantation of twelve acres, is divided between the poor of the two parishes of Aldwinkle, All Saints, and St. Peter. There is a chalybeate spring. The poet Dryden was born in the parsonage-house, in 1631.

ALDWINKLE (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Thrapston; containing 183 inhabitants. The river Nene, which is navigable to the North Sea, and communicates with the Northampton canal, flows through the parish. Here are the remains of a singular cruciform building, called Liveden, erected by the Tresham family, and richly decorated with sculpture, especially round the cornice, which exhibits a Roman Catholic legend and a variety of religious symbols. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 6. 3.; net income, £230; patron, Lord Lilford: the glebe consists of 183 acres. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Dr. Thomas Fuller, author of "The History of the Worthies of England," and other learned works, was born in the parish.

ALDWORTH (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WANTAGE, hundred of COMPTON, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from East Ilsley; containing 314 inhabitants. This place, supposed by Hearne to have been a Roman station, comprises 1785a. 3r. 32p., of which nearly the whole is cultivated land; the village is situated on an eminence commanding extensive and interesting views. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 16. 0½.; patrons and appropriators, Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, and the vicarial for £100; the appropriate glebe consists of 27, and the vicarial of 16, acres. The church is an ancient structure of simple character, containing eight altar-tombs, on which are nine recumbent figures, under highly enriched arches, elegantly sculptured, supposed to represent different members of the De la Beche family, and to have been executed in the fourteenth century. A school is supported by subscription.

ALEMOUTH.—See ALNMOUTH.

ALETHORPE, an extra-parochial liberty, locally in the parish of FAKENHAM, union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Fakenham; containing 8 inhabitants.

ALEXTON (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of BILESODON, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Uppingham; containing 81 inhabitants. This parish, which is separated from Rutland by the river Eye, and is situated near the road from Leicester to Cambridge, comprises 997a. 28p., nearly the whole good grazing land; and all, with the exception of 200 acres, tithe-free: the soil is a stiff clay, and the surface is undulated and pleasingly wooded. The ancient hall, built in the reign of Elizabeth, is adorned with avenues of Scotch and Balm of Gilead firs, which are considered the finest in the country. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 18. 4.; net income, £140; patron, Lord Berners. Attached are 24 acres of glebe within the parish, and two in Belton Field. The church was built in 1594, by Edward Andrewes, Esq.

ALFOLD (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of HAMBLEDON, First division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, W. division of SURREY, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Godalming; containing 519 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2726a. 1r. 33p., and abounds with oak, ash, and elm: in parts there is a bed of stone, which is used for repairing the roads, but is not hard enough for building. The Arun and Wey Junction canal passes through it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 11. 2., and in the gift of the Rev. L. W. Eliot: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £355, and the glebe comprises 14 acres. The church consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with a tower surmounted by a small spire: the parsonage-house is situated on the south side of the churchyard. Schools are supported by subscription.

ALFORD (ST. WILFRED), a market-town and parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 34 miles (E.) from Lincoln, and 137 (N. by E.) from London; containing 1945 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from an old ford over a stream that twice runs through it, is a small, though ancient, town, and is described by Leland as consisting of one street of mean buildings, covered with thatch. Since that writer's time, however, it has been considerably improved, particularly during the last 20 years: it is pleasantly situated, and is one of the polling-stations for the parts of Lindsey. The market is held on Tuesday, and fairs occur on Whit-Tuesday and the 8th of November: a court leet takes place annually, and petty-sessions once in every three weeks; and under an act passed in the 47th of George III., a court of requests, for sums not exceeding £5, is held monthly, the jurisdiction of which also extends over several other towns in the county. The parish comprises about 1000 acres of land. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Rigsby annexed, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln, the appropriator, with a net income of £122: the church is a large structure of stone, repaired with brick, embellished by a tower commanding very extensive views of the adjacent districts, and containing many ancient monuments. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists, Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans.

The free grammar school was founded and endowed by Mr. Francis Spanning, in 1565; and its revenue has been considerably augmented by subsequent benefactions of lands at Farlesthorpe, Thoresthorpe, Woodthorpe, Strubby, and Cumberworth, containing in the whole 260 acres, and yielding an annual rent of £268. 18., together with the living of Saleby, the patronage being vested in the governors. By a charter obtained in 1576, it was made a royal foundation, to be called "The Free Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth," and the management vested in eleven governors, who are a body corporate, and have a common seal. It has two quinquennial fellowships at Magdalene College, Cambridge; and there is a scholarship of £6. 8. 6. per annum at Jesus' College, Cambridge, for students from Alford, Caistor, or Louth schools; and children of parents residing in the parishes of Thoresthorpe, Well with Mawthorpe, Ailby, Rigsby, Bilsby, and also Farlesthorpe, and Saleby, are eligible for admission to the school. The premises consist of a substantial brick house for the master, with two commodious rooms adjoining, and a large garden in the town. A national school, in which 130 children of both sexes are instructed, was founded by Mr. John Spendluffe, who endowed it with an estate now producing £70 per annum. Almshouses for six poor people were erected and endowed by Sir Robert Christopher, Knt., in 1668; the endowment was subsequently augmented by Lord Harborough, in 1716. Richard Towthby gave some land, now yielding £12 per annum, for a school, or to the poor; and there are several other bequests for distribution among the necessitous. In the vicinity are the ruins of Hornby or Hagnaby abbey, which appears to have occupied a site of eight or nine acres. A salt spring, efficacious in scurvy, jaundice, &c., was discovered here in 1670. Alford confers the title of Viscount on the family of Brownlow.

ALFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. by N.) from Castle-Cary; containing 90 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Hornblotton by act of parliament in 1836, and valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 9.; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. G. D. Thring. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £140, and there are 40 acres of glebe. At a farm-house, called Alford Well, about three-quarters of a mile from the church, is a saline chalybeate spring, now disused.

ALFRETON (ST. MARY), a market-town and parish, in the union of BELPER, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 14 miles (N. N. E.) from Derby, and 140 (N. N. W.) from London; comprising the township of Alfreton, the ville of Greenhill-Lane, the manor of Riddings with Nonville, and the hamlets of Summercotes and Swanwick; and containing 7577 inhabitants, of whom 1774 are in Alfreton township. This place, called in King Ethelred's charter to Burton abbey, "Alfredingtune," is supposed to have derived its name from Alfred the Great, who is thought to have been its founder. The town is situated on the brow of a hill, and consists of three or four streets, with a market-place in the centre; the houses are irregularly built, and some of them are fine specimens of the ancient style of architecture. The manufacture of stockings is carried on to a considerable extent; and there are large coal and iron works at Alfreton Riddings, Butterley, and Codnor Park, the produce of which is conveyed by the Erewash canal, which passes about six miles off. The market is on Friday; and fairs are held on Jan. 26th, Easter-Monday, Whit-Tuesday, July 31st, Oct. 7th, and Nov. 24th. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 9.; net income, £150; patron and impropriator, W. Palmer Morewood, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, in the early and later English styles, with an embattled tower crowned by pinnacles. A district church has been built at Riddings, in the parish, by subscription, aided by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners; there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free school was founded in 1740, by Mrs. Elizabeth Turner, who endowed it with $48\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land at Swanwick, in the parish, for the instruction of twelve boys and eight girls, of Swanwick and Greenhill-Lane.

ALFRICK, a chapelry, in the parish of SUCKLEY, union of MARTLEY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Worcester; containing 434 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the river Teme, and consists of 1645 acres; the surface is undulated, and very well wooded and watered. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £240; and there is a glebe of $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres, with a property in the chapel yard. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a free school with an endowment of £10 per annum.

ALFRISTON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of EASTBOURNE, hundred of ALCESTON, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, 9 miles (S. E.) from Lewes; containing 668 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the Cuchmere river; the soil is rich and fertile, and the produce of the orchards and gardens is remarkable for quality and exuberance. The village, beautifully situated in a valley near the river, was formerly of much greater extent than at present, and in the centre is an ancient cross, where probably a market was held. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £135; impropriators, the Trustees of "Smith's Charity." The church is an ancient cruciform structure, in the decorated and later English styles, with a central tower surmounted by a spire. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school is supported by subscription. On the neighbouring downs are several barrows, in some of which urns, spear-heads, and other relics of antiquity have been found.

ALGARKIRK (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of BOSTON, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (S.) from Boston; containing 754 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the Saxon Earl Algar, who, in 870, aided by his seneschals Wibert and Leofric, obtained a victory over the Danes in this neighbourhood, but was defeated and slain on the day following: a statue of stone in the churchyard is said to have been erected to his memory. The parish comprises by admeasurement 5041 acres. The living is a rectory, with Fosdyke annexed, valued in the king's books at £50. 18. 1½.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Basil Beridge. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £990, and the glebe, including that of Fosdyke, comprises 500 acres. The church, which is partly in the Norman and partly in the early English style, is rich in its details, and contains monuments to the Beridge family since the time of James I. The parsonage-house has a very picturesque appearance. About £38 per annum, the amount of various bequests, is distributed among the poor, who are also eligible to the benefit of Sir Thomas Middlecott's Hospital at Fosdyke.

ALHAMPTON, a tything, in the parish of DITCHEAT, hundred of WHITSTONE, E. division of SOMERSET, 2¾ miles (N. W. by N.) from Castle-Cary; containing 386 inhabitants. There was formerly a chapel at this place.

ALKERTON, a tything, in the parish of EASTINGTON, union of WHEATENHURST, Lower division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (W.) from Stroud; containing 1108 inhabitants.

ALKERTON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Banbury; comprising 691a. 24p., and containing 190 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 9.; net income, £153; patron, J. Dent, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, by an inclosure act, in 1776. The church has some sculpture in the mouldings of the outer walls, representing angels scattering incense. Thomas Lydiat, the learned mathematician and chronologer, was born at Alkerton in the year 1572.

ALKHAM (St. Anthony), a parish, in the union of DOVOR, hundred of FOLKESTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Dovor; containing 595 inhabitants. It comprises 3145a. 2r. 28p., including 300 acres of woodland, and 100 of common; the surface is hilly, and the soil chalky, except at the tops of the hills, where it is a stiff clay. The living is a vicarage, with Capel-le-Ferne annexed, valued in the king's books at £11; net income, £152; patron and appropriator, Archbishop of Canterbury, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £500, and the vicarial tithes for £213. 10.: there are 9½ acres of appropriate glebe, and about 3 of vicarial. The church is partly Norman, and partly early English: the interior, which has been much improved of late years, has a venerable and interesting aspect, and there are some ancient monumental stones. According to Domesday book, a church existed here in the time of Edward the Confessor.

ALKINGTON, a tything, in the parish, and Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, union of THORNBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1¼ mile (S. E.) from Berkeley; containing 1175 inhabitants. The village of Newport, on the great road from Gloucester to Bristol, is situated in this tything, and is the central posting-place between those cities; it contains two good hotels and several smaller inns. There is a place of worship for Independents.

ALKINGTON, a township, in the parish of WHITCHURCH, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 2 miles (S. by W.) from Whitchurch.

ALKMONTON, a township, in the parish of LONGFORD, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 5¾ miles (S. by E.) from Ashbourn; containing 102 inhabitants. There was anciently an hospital dedicated to St. Leonard, between this place and Hungry-Bentley, in the same parish, to which Walter Blount, Lord Mountjoy, was a benefactor, in 1474. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £54. 15., of which £28. 15. are payable to the rector, and £26 to the vicar, of Longford.

ALKRINGTON, a township, in the parish of OLDHAM-CUM-PRESTWICH, union of OLDHAM, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4½ miles (N. N. E.) from Manchester; containing 338 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £40.

ALLCANNINGS (St. Anne), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 5¾ miles (E.) from Devizes; comprising the chapelry of Etchilhampton and the tythings of Allington and Fullaway, and containing 851 inhabitants. On the downs is St. Anne's hill, on which a large fair for sheep and horses is held on the 6th of August. The Kennet and Avon canal affords facility for the conveyance of goods. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £31. 16. 10½., and in the gift of Lord Ashburton: the tithes, including those of Etchilhampton, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1204. 5., and the glebe comprises 36 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style. There is a chapel of ease at Etchilhampton; and a national school is supported by subscription. Miss Anne Lavington, in 1828, bequeathed £500, the interest to be distributed among the poor at Christmas.

ALLEN, ST. (St. Alleyn), a parish, in the union of TRURO, W. division of the hundred of POWDER and of CORNWALL, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Truro; containing 652 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 4.; patron, Bishop of Exeter; impropiator, Earl of Falmouth. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £265, and the vicarial for £147; and there are 95 acres of glebe. The parish contains a Danish encampment.

ALLENDALE, a market-town and parish, in the union of HEXHAM, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (S.) from Haydon Bridge, 9¾ miles (S. W. by W.) from Hexham, and 256 (N. N. W.) from London; comprising the grieveships of Allendale town, Broadside, Catton, High and Low Forest, Keenly, Park, and West Allen High and Low; and containing 5729 inhabitants. The town, which includes 1217 persons, is irregularly built on an acclivity gradually rising from the eastern bank of the river Allen, over which a bridge was erected in 1825. The market is on Friday; the fairs are held on the Friday before the 11th of May, the 22nd of August, and the first Friday after the festival of St. Luke, for horses, cattle, and sheep; and a cattle show, which has been established within the last few years, is annually held. In the market-place are the ruins of a cross. This very extensive parish derives its name from the river Allen, a small but rapid stream which rises in the hamlet of Allenheads, in East Allen, and Coalcleugh, in West Allen, and falls into the river Tyne about three miles to the west of Haydon Bridge, where is a station of the Newcastle and Carlisle railway. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the lead-mines, which are on a large scale, producing upwards of 3500 tons of lead annually; there are several works for grinding and washing the ore, and two extensive smelting-houses, one having an horizontal chimney $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, with a terminus upwards of 780 feet above the ground floor of the mill, and the other a chimney $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile in length, and 700 feet above the ground floor; in one of these smelting-houses twenty-one tons pass through the furnace weekly, from which a considerable quantity of silver is separated. Limestone is extensively quarried, and there are also numerous quarries of stone of good quality for building.

The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £130; patron, T. W. Beaumont, Esq.; impropiators, T. W. Beaumont, Esq., and others. The church is of stone, rebuilt in 1807. Within the parish also are four chapels, in the gift of the incumbent of Allendale, viz. St. Peter's, rebuilt in 1825, a perpetual curacy, of which the net income is £74; the chapel at Nine-Banks, partially rebuilt about 1816, a perpetual curacy, with an income of £124; the chapel at the Carr Shield, or West Allen High chapel, built in 1822, also a perpetual curacy, of which the income is £109; and that of Allenheads, described under its proper head. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Wesleyans. A free school for the children of parishioners is endowed with two tenements, bequeathed by William Hutchinson in 1692, producing a rental of £24; and with other premises and thirty-two acres of land, in Broadside, purchased with a legacy of Christopher Wilkinson in 1700, and yielding £38 per annum. There are also various other schools, connected with the different places of worship in the parish; and the curates of West Allen High and Allenheads chapels are obliged to teach the miners' children for 1s. 6d. per quarter each, in consideration of certain annual payments of 5s. from each miner of one description, and 2s. 6d. from those of another, which they receive as ministers of the respective chapels. Various small sums, the principal of which is an annuity of £10 from Shield's charity, are distributed annually among the poor. There are several chalybeate springs in the parish, and at a place called Old Town, about three miles to the north-west, are vestiges of an ancient intrenchment, of a square form, supposed to be Roman.

ALLENHEADS, a hamlet (formerly a distinct parish), in the parish of ALLENDALE, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 17 miles (S. S. W.) from Hexham: the population is returned with that of Allendale. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$; present net income, £50; patron, incumbent of Allendale; impropiators, T. W. Beaumont, Esq., and others. The chapel was rebuilt by Col. Beaumont, in 1826, on the site of one erected in 1701 by Sir William Blackett, for the religious duties of the miners, who at that time attended prayers every morning at six o'clock: it is now considered a domestic chapel, and near it is a good house for the minister, occupied by the incumbent of St. Peter's, described in the preceding article, who officiates in both chapels. There are several veins of lead-ore in the neighbourhood, which are worked to a considerable extent.

ALLENSFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of SHOTLEY, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 13 miles (S. E.) from Hexham. This place is on the north side of the river Derwent, over which is a stone bridge.

ALLENSMORE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the hundred of WEBTREE, union and county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (S. W.) from Hereford; containing 668 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the road from Hereford to Monmouth, and consists of 1820 acres, the surface being generally level, with an ample proportion of timber. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 6., and endowed with £400 royal bounty; patron, the Dean of Hereford. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for two rent-charges, each of £125, one payable to the Dean, and the other to the Dean and Chapter of Hereford; the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £175, and a rent charge of £7. 6. is paid to impropiators. There are 30 acres of glebe. A school was established in 1824.

ALLENTON, or ALLWINTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; comprising the townships of Allenton, Biddleston, Borrowdon, Clennell, Fairhaugh, Farnham, Linbriggs, Nether-ton, North and South sides, Peals, and Sharperton; and containing 1255 inhabitants, of whom 78 are in the township of Allenton, 19 miles (W. by S.) from Alnwick. The parish is of great extent, stretching from the parish of Rothbury to Scotland, and 20 miles from east to west; and consists almost entirely of porphyritic mountains, presenting very abrupt elevations, covered with short thick grass, valuable for rearing sheep. The river Coquet rises within its limits, and here pursues a winding course through a very narrow valley, the mountains rising in many parts almost perpendicularly from its bed: it is joined by the Alwine, which gives name to the parish. Two fairs are held at Harbottle, in Hallystone, chiefly for wool and sheep, in July and September. The living is a vicarage not in charge, with the curacy of Hallystone annexed; net income, £130, with a glebe-house recently built; patron, Duke of Northumberland; impropiators, Thomas Clennell, Esq., and others. The church is an ancient edifice, but has been greatly disfigured by repairs. At Harbottle is a Presbyterian meeting-house; also a national school for the instruction of the poor, which is endowed with £18 per annum, arising from the produce of the sale of a messuage in Newcastle, amounting to £400, bequeathed by William Dixon in 1806. Here was formerly an hospital belonging to the convent at Hallystone; and on the south side of the Coquet, are vestiges of an old structure, called Barrow Peel, to the west of which is Ridlee Cairn

Hill, supposed to have been burial-places of the ancient Britons. Throughout the district are numerous other remains of the Britons, consisting of encampments, cromlechs, &c., and at Chew green, near the Scottish border, are the remains of a very extensive Roman station, the next to the north from Bremenium, High Rochester.

ALLER, a hamlet, in the parish of HILTON, union of BLANDFORD, hundred of WHITEWAY, Blandford division of DORSET; containing 91 inhabitants.

ALLER (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of LANGFORD, hundred of SOMERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Somerton; containing 559 inhabitants. Guthrum, the Danish chief, received baptism at this place, under the sponsorship of Alfred the Great, after the victory obtained by that monarch over the Danes at Ethandune. Aller Moor was the scene of a battle between the royalists and the parliamentarians in 1644. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £36. 15., and in the gift of Emanuel College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £590, and the glebe comprises 66 acres. A national school has been built. Dr. Ralph Cudworth, author of "The Intellectual System of the Universe," was born here in 1617.

ALLERBY, or ALWARDBY, with OUGHTERSIDE, a township, in the parish of ASPATRIA, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, and county of CUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Cocker mouth; containing 555 inhabitants.

ALLERFORD, a tything, in the parish of SELWORTHY, union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 181 inhabitants.

ALLERSTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and lythe of PICKERING, N. riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Pickering; containing 414 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 9110 acres, of which about 4800 are arable and pasture, 240 wood and plantations, and the remainder large tracts of moor abounding with peat and turf: the surface is varied, and in some parts mountainous, and the lands on the south side, which are low, are frequently overflowed by the Derwent. Coal is supposed to exist, but has not been wrought. The village is situated at the foot of the moors of Pickering forest, and on the northern verge of the fertile marshes of the vale of Derwent. The living has been united to the vicarage of Ebberston since 1242: the church is an ancient edifice, with a lofty square tower. A national school was erected in 1839, under the auspices of the vicar, and is supported by subscription, aided by a donation of £14 per annum from George Osbaldiston, Esq., the lord of the manor.

ALLERTHORPE, a parish, in the union of POCKLINGTON, Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Allertorpe and Waplinton, 199 inhabitants, of whom 154 are in the township of Allertorpe, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by W.) from Pocklington. The general surface of the parish is flat and well wooded, and it consists of 1543a. 1r. 33p., of which about 670 acres are arable, 420 meadow or pasture, and 450 common land, tithe-free; the soil is of a light and various quality, but chiefly sandy. On the east the parish is bounded by the Pocklington canal, and it is also contiguous to the road between York and Market-Weighton. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Thornton: the appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £246. 2. 6., and the vicarial for one of £73. 12.; and there are a glebe-house and 3 acres of glebe. In the church is a very fine font. A school is endowed with £9 per annum, the interest of £200 bequeathed by Mr. John Hart.

ALLERTHORPE, with SWAINBY, a township, in the parish of PICKHILL, union of BEDALE, wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Bedale; containing 31 inhabitants. Helewise, daughter of Ranulph de Glanville, founded a priory here for canons of the Præmonstratensian order, which was removed to Coverham in 1215. Allertorpe Hall was for some time the residence of Mrs. Elizabeth Montague.

ALLERTON, a township, in the parish of CHILDWALL, union and hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Liverpool; containing 443 inhabitants. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £228. 3. 8., payable to the Bishop of Chester, and the vicarial for one of £42. 17. 6. Adjoining the farm on which stands the famous Allerton oak, is a supposed Druidical monument, called Calder Stones, in digging around which, more than sixty years since, urns of the coarsest clay, containing human bones, were found.

ALLERTON, a township, and, with WILSDEN, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish and union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Bradford; containing 1914 inhabitants. This township, which is part of the ancient manor of Allerton-cum-Wilsden, comprises by measurement 1872 acres, of which a very considerable portion of waste has, under the provisions of an act of parliament, obtained in 1840, by Mrs. Ferrand, the lady of the manor, in concurrence with the principal freeholders, been inclosed, and is rapidly coming into profitable cultivation. Of the land, about 1100 acres are meadow and pasture, 550 arable, and 40 wood and plantations; the soil is not unfertile, and the substratum is chiefly coal and freestone of good quality; the surface is varied, and the scenery in many parts pleasingly picturesque. There are several ancient mansions, formerly the seats of distinguished families, of which Crossley, Shuttleworth, and Allerton halls, are still remaining; and Dean House, the asylum of the celebrated Oliver Heywood, during the times of the Tudors and Stuarts, is now divided into several tenements. The township consists chiefly of scattered houses, and the inhabitants are principally employed in the worsted manufacture, and in the coal-mines and quarries. The church was erected in 1823; and there are places of worship for General Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans.

ALLERTON-BYWATER, a township, in the parish of KIPPAX, Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Pontefract; containing 490 inhabitants. This place comprises about 870 acres, and is situated at the confluence of the rivers Aire and Calder, where extensive wharfs and stations have been constructed by the Aire and Calder Company: part of the houses near the bridge form a suburb of Castleford. Large glass-works have been established. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, by an inclosure act, in 1803.

ALLERTON, CHAPEL, a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BEMPSTONE, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S.) from Cross; containing 331 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 8. 4.; net income, £923; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Wells. There are 15 acres of glebe. The church is a small edifice, and was formerly a chapel to Wedmore.

ALLERTON, CHAPEL, W. riding of the county of YORK.—See CHAPEL-ALLERTON.

ALLERTON-MAULEVERER (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 4½ miles (E.) from Knaresborough; containing 277 inhabitants, of whom 258 are in the township of Allerton-Mauleverer with Hopperton. This place obtained its distinguishing name from the family of Mauleverer, one of whom, named Richard, in the reign of Henry II., founded here an Alien priory of Benedictine monks, the revenue of which was given by Henry VI. to King's College, Cambridge. The parish is wholly the property of Lord Stourton, and comprises 2170 acres, of which 1180 are arable, 820 meadow and pasture, and 170 woodland and plantations. The mansion, which, with the estate, was purchased by his lordship's father for £163,800, is a handsome structure, in the Grecian style; and attached to it is a neat Roman Catholic chapel. The village is pleasantly situated about half a mile from the great north road between London and Edinburgh. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £65; patron, Lord Stourton. The church is an ancient cruciform structure. A school, attended by thirty children of both sexes, chiefly of Catholic parents, is supported by Lady Stourton. The late Duke of York resided here in 1786, 1787, and 1789.

ALLERTON, NORTH (ALL SAINTS), a borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, in the wapentake and liberty of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK; comprising the chapelries of Brompton, Deighton, and High Worsall, and the townships of Romanby and North Allerton; and containing 5273 inhabitants, of whom 3092 are in the town, including the extra-parochial liberty of Lazenby, 32 miles (N. W. by N.) from York, and 224 (N. N. W.) from London. This place, which was a Roman station, and subsequently a Saxon borough, is in Domesday book called Alvertune and Alreton, the prefix having been applied to distinguish it from Allerton-Mauleverer. It was greatly injured, if not destroyed, by Beornredus, or Earnredus, who, in 769, having invaded the kingdom of Northumberland, with a view to usurp the throne, burnt the town of Catterick, about eight miles distant. William Rufus gave the town, with the lands adjacent, to the see of Durham, and, under the patronage of the bishops of that diocese, it grew into importance, and became an episcopal residence. At Cowton Moor, about three miles from the town, and within the parish, the celebrated battle of the Standard was fought, in 1138, between the English, commanded by Ralph, Bishop of the Orkney Islands, Walter l'Espee, and William d'Albemarle, and the Scots, led on by their king, David, who had ravaged the country as far as York, in which the latter were defeated, with the loss of 11,000 men: the spot on which the standard was erected is still called Standard Hill, and the holes into which the dead were thrown, the Scots' Pits. About 1174, Henry II. ordered the episcopal palace, supposed to have been built by Geoffrey, Bishop of Durham, and which had been strongly fortified by Bishop Pudsey, to be demolished; it was afterwards rebuilt, and again destroyed. Traces of the foundation are still visible on the western side of the town. In 1318, the Scots plundered and burnt the town. During the civil war, Charles I., in one of his journeys to Scotland, lodged here in an old mansion, called the Porch-house; and in the rebellion of 1745, the English army, under the Duke of Cumberland, encamped on the Castle hills.

The TOWN is pleasantly situated close to the line of the Great Northern railway, and consists chiefly of one spacious street, half a mile in length, partially paved, and containing some good houses; it has long given name to a district called Allertonshire, now constituting the wapentake and liberty. The principal branches of manufacture are those of tanning and the currying of leather; and hand-loom linen weaving is carried on at Brompton. The market is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on Feb. 14th, Sept. 5th and 6th, Oct. 3rd and 4th, and the second Wednesday in the latter month. The borough, town, and township are all distinct: the borough, which exists by prescription, first exercised the elective franchise in the 26th of Edward I., but made no subsequent return till 1640; since which time, till the 2nd William IV., it regularly sent two members to parliament, but was thenceforward destined to return only one. The right of election was formerly vested in the proprietors of ancient burgage houses, in number about two hundred and ten, but is now extended to the £10 householders of the townships of North Allerton and Romanby, and the chapelry of Brompton, which, by the act of the 2nd and 3rd of William IV. cap. 64, were made to constitute the new borough, comprising 8693 acres, of which 3150 are in North Allerton township: the returning officer is a bailiff, appointed by the Bishop of Ripon, who is high-bailiff of the whole shire or liberty, and lord of the manor of North Allerton. The general quarter-sessions for the North riding are held here, as directed by the act of the 1st of William IV. cap. 70; and there is a weekly meeting of the county magistrates. The sessions-house is an elegant building, erected about 1790; annexed to it is a house of correction, on the plan of Mr. Howard, containing thirty cells. To the west of the sessions-house is the registrar's office for the North riding, where the Bishop of Ripon holds his courts.

The parish comprises an extensive and fertile district stretching sixteen miles from north to south, and between three and four from east to west; it is bounded on the west by the river Wiske, and intersected by the Sunbeck and the North-beck; the surface is flat, except on the west, where it is hilly, and the soil near the town is a good loam. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17; net income, £697: patrons, Dean and Chapter of Durham; impropiators, Miss Pierse and others: the glebe attached to the benefice comprises about 200 acres. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, in the Norman and later English styles, with a square tower rising from the centre, and crowned with pinnacles at the angles. There are chapels of ease at Brompton and Deighton, both ancient buildings; also places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. The free grammar (now the parochial) school is of royal foundation: it has a small endowment, arising from a bequest by Elizabeth Raine, in 1737; also an interest in five scholarships, founded by Bishop Cosins, at Peter House, Cambridge, in a failure of applicants from the school at Durham; and has likewise a contingent interest in twelve exhibitions to Lincoln College, Oxford, founded by Lord Crewe. The school-house was rebuilt in 1777. Dr. W. Palliser, Archbishop of Cashel; Dr. George Hickes, Dean of Worcester, and author of the "Thesaurus Septentrionalium Linguarum;" Dr. Thomas Burnet, master of the Charter-House, London; Rymer, editor of the Fœdera; Dr. Radcliffe; and the Rev. John Kettlewell, were educated here. A national school for boys and girls, established in 1787, is partly supported by subscription. An hospital, or Maison de Dieu, was founded in 1476, by Richard de Moore, a draper in the town, for thirteen poor people: it has been rebuilt at the expense of the inhabitants, but the number of inmates is reduced to four. The Rev. John Kettlewell, of St. Andrew's, Holborn, bequeathed, in 1694, an estate in the township of Brompton, called Low Moor Farm, comprising eighty-three acres, and yielding a rental of £70, of which £40 are applied in support of the national schools here and at Brompton, and the residue is laid out in clothing and medicine for the poor of those places. The union of North Allerton comprises 44 parishes and places, and contains a population of 12,575. There are some remains of a monastery of Carmelites, founded by Thomas Hatfield, Bishop of Durham, about the year 1354, and dedicated to St. Mary; and the site of St. James's hospital, about a mile from the town, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £58. 10. 10., is still visible. It is also on record that, in the 14th of Edward III., William de Alverton gave the Augustine friars eight acres of ground, in the town, on which to erect a church and habitation. Vestiges of a military road leading from Alby, the Derwentio of the Romans, through the town to Catterick may be traced. Edmund Guest, Bishop of Salisbury, almoner to Queen Elizabeth, was born here. North Allerton, in the reign of Anne, gave the title of Viscount to the Elector of Hanover, afterwards George I.

ALLESLEY, or AWESLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MERIDEN, Kirkby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Coventry; containing 963 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 4242 acres, in good cultivation; the surrounding scenery is pleasingly varied, and the village is neatly built. Sandstone is quarried for rough building purposes. Fairs are held for cattle in February, March, June, August, September, October, and December. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 18. 9.; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. T. Bree. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £786, and the glebe comprises nearly 40 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the early and later Norman styles, with modern additions in bad taste. There is a free school for boys, towards the support of which Mrs. Flint, in 1705, gave by deed a small portion of land, and a house for the residence of the master; and another school, for girls, is supported by subscription. Vestiges of an ancient castle are discernible in the parish.

ALLESTREE (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of BELPER, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH,

S. division of the county of DERBY, 2 miles (N.) from Derby; containing 507 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Derwent and the road from Derby to Bakewell and Manchester, and comprises 1030 acres, of which 900 are pasture, 80 arable, and 50 woodland; the soil is a loam and marl. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Mackworth: the church is an ancient structure, containing several monuments of the Munday family, and having 300 sittings, all free. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and schools are partly supported by subscription.

ALLEXTON.—See ALEXTON.

ALLHALLOWS, a parish, in the union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Wigton; comprising by admeasurement 1860 acres, and containing 235 inhabitants. This place, which was anciently a chapelry in the parish of Aspatria, is bounded on the south by the river Ellen, and contains some quarries of freestone and limestone, and a vein of coal of inferior quality. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £80; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Carlisle. The tithes were partially commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1817. A little southward of Whitehall is an intrenchment, twenty-eight yards square, surrounded by a ditch.

ALLHALLOWS, a parish, in the union and hundred of HOO, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 9 miles (N. E.) from Rochester; containing 268 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester: the appropriate tithes, belonging to the Dean and Chapter, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £620, with a glebe of 11 acres, and those of the incumbent for one of £185, with a glebe of 39 acres. The river Thames bounds this parish on the north.

ALLINGTON (ST. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, hundred of GODDERTHORNE, Bridport division of DORSET, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. W.) from Bridport; containing 1545 inhabitants. This parish, formerly a chapelry in that of Bridport, comprises 582a. 3r. 5p., of which 281 acres are arable, 249 pasture, and 51 homesteads. The river Brid, or Birt, runs through the locality, which may be considered as a continuation of the town of Bridport, and is within the limits of the borough. Great quantities of hemp and flax are raised in the vicinity, and a manufacture of home and sail cloth is carried on, which affords employment to a considerable number of persons. A fair for cheese and pedlery is held on the first Wednesday in August. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Rev. Henry Fox: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £190. The church is a modern edifice in the Grecian style, erected in 1827, and contains 800 sittings, of which 400 are free. Two closes of land, containing thirty acres, are vested in trustees for the benefit of the poor in the almshouses of this parish and Charmouth. An hospital for lepers, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was founded here, which, at the dissolution in 1553, was valued at £7. 8. 4. An ancestor of the celebrated John Wesley was ejected from the ministry of Allington as a non-juror.

ALLINGTON (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of MALLING, hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. W.) from Maidstone; containing 49 inhabitants. It is situated on the western side of the Medway, nearly opposite Aylesford. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 8.; net income, £145, with a glebe-house, recently built; patron, Earl of Romney. Sir Thomas Wyatt, a distinguished poet in the reign of Henry VIII., was born at Allington Castle, the remains of which have been converted into a farm-house.

ALLINGTON, a tything, in the parish and union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 536 inhabitants.

ALLINGTON, a parish, in the union and hundred of AMESBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Amesbury; containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 4.; net income, £236; patron, Earl of Craven.

ALLINGTON, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Chippenham.

ALLINGTON, a tything, in the parish of ALLCANNINGS, union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Devizes; containing 188 inhabitants. The tithes belong to the Dean and Canons of Westminster. There is a place of worship for a congregation of Particular Baptists.

ALLINGTON, EAST (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of STANBOROUGH, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Kingsbridge; containing 729 inhabitants, and comprising 2348 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £32. 2. 1., and in the patronage of Mrs. Fortescue: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £485, and the glebe consists of 80 acres. In the church is a wooden screen, which, with the pulpit, is much enriched with carved work.

ALLINGTON, EAST (St. James), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. W.) from Grantham; containing 276 inhabitants. The living is consolidated with a mediety of the rectory of Sedgebrook, to the incumbent of which an allotment of land was given as a commutation for the tithes of the manor, by an inclosure act, in 1793.

ALLINGTON, WEST, DEVON.—See ALVINGTON, WEST.

ALLINGTON, WEST (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Grantham; containing 120 inhabitants. In this parish is the seat of T. Earle Welby, Esq., a handsome edifice, partly in the Elizabethan style, and commanding a distant view of Foston and the city of Lincoln. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 13. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £262.

ALLITHWAITE, LOWER, a township, in the parish of CARTMEL, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S.) from Cartmel; containing 807 inhabitants.

ALLITHWAITE, UPPER, a township, in the parish of CARTMEL, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Cartmel; containing 740 inhabitants.

ALLONBY, a chapelry, in the parish of BROMFIELD, union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Cockermouth; containing 811 inhabitants. The village, comprising about 200 houses, is situated on the coast of Allonby bay, which opens to the Solway Firth and the Irish Sea, and is much frequented as a bathing-place, the sands being extremely smooth and firm. It was noted for a herring fishery, but this has greatly declined, owing to the herrings having almost totally deserted the neighbouring sea; a few of the inhabitants are, however, still occupied in fishing. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £94; patron, Vicar of Bromfield. The chapel, dedicated to Christ, was built at the expense of Dr. Thomlinson and some relatives, in 1744; and a school was endowed in 1755, by Mrs. Thomlinson, his relict, with £100, since laid out in land producing £8 per annum. There is a place of worship for the Society of Friends. Six cottages, forming the wings of a dwelling-house erected by Thomas Richardson, Esq., of Stamford Hill, London, a native of this place, are appropriated as rent-free residences to as many poor families. Captain Joseph Huddart, F.R.S., an eminent naval engineer and hydrographer, was born here in 1741, and in the chapel is a handsome monument erected to his memory, at a cost of £500.

ALLOSTOCK, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Nether Knutsford; containing 427 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Unitarians. The children of all persons in this township who rent property under the value of £10 per annum are entitled to instruction at the parochial school of Lower Peover.

ALLOWENSHAY, a hamlet, in the parish of KINGSTON, union of CHARD, hundred of TINTINHULL, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 212 inhabitants.

ALLSTONEFIELD.—See ALSTONFIELD.

ALLTON, with IDRIDGEHAY, a township, in the parish of WIRKSWORTH, union of BELPER, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Wirksworth; containing 194 inhabitants.

ALLWINTON.—See ALLENTON.

ALMELEY (St. Mary), a parish, partly in the hundred of WOLPHY, but chiefly in that of STRETFORD, union of WEObLEY, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Kington, near the road to Hereford; containing 642 inhabitants. It comprises 3352 acres, of which 1500 are meadow and pasture, 1300 arable, and 552 woodland; the surface is undulated and extensively wooded; and the soil, for the most part, is a sandy loam, having a wet sub-soil of marl and clay. A tram railway for the conveyance of coal from Brecon to Kington passes through the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 17. 11.; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Hereford. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £300, and the vicarial for £207. 10. ; the appropriate glebe contains 19, and the vicarial 55, acres. The church is partly in the Norman, and partly in the English style. About three-quarters of a mile north-west of it there was probably once a castle, part of the ditch, &c., being traceable, and the farm there called Old Castle; and near the church are two tumuli. Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, executed in 1417 for his attachment to the Lollards, was a native of the parish.

ALMER (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of LOOSEBARROW, Winbourn division of DORSET, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Blandford-Forum; containing, with the hamlet of Mapperton, 189 inhabitants. It comprises 1129 acres of land, presenting a flat appearance, and the soil of which is light, with a chalk and gravel bottom. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 5. 8., and in the patronage of Mrs. Drax; net income, £284. The glebe consists of 35 acres. The church is a small edifice, rebuilt by General Erle. There is a school in connexion with the National Society.

ALMHOLME, a hamlet, in the parish of ARKSEY, union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Doncaster; containing 69 inhabitants. The term holme or holmes is a generic name for low and level pasture lands near water, which is descriptive of the neighbourhood of this place. The hamlet is situated in the north-eastern extremity of the parish; the river Don runs a little on the east, and on the north flows a tributary to that river.

ALMINGTON, a township, in the parish of DRAYTON-IN-HALES, union of MARKET-DRAYTON, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by N.) from Drayton; containing 189 inhabitants.

ALMINGTON, with STONE-DELPH, a township, in the parish and union of TAMWORTH, Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Tamworth; containing 276 inhabitants, and comprising 2191 acres. It is intersected by the river Anker, the Coventry canal, and the road from Tamworth to Ashby-de-la-Zouch.

ALMODINGTON, a hamlet (formerly a parish), in the parish of EARNLEY, union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of MANHOOD, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Chichester. The living, a rectory, was consolidated, in 1524, with that of Earnley; and the chapel has fallen into ruins.

ALMONDBURY (All Saints), a parish, in the union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of the wapentake of AGRIBIGG, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Huddersfield, on the old road to Sheffield; comprising the townships of Almondbury, Austonley, Crosland South, Farnley-Tyas, Holme, Honley, Lingards, Linthwaite, Lockwood, Marsden, Meltham, Nether-Thong, and Upper Thong; and the hamlets of Berrybrow, Crosland Moor, Deanhouse, Meltham Mills, Longley, Lowerhouses, Nether-ton, and Rashcliffe; and containing 37,315 inhabitants, of whom 8828 are in the township of Almondbury. According to Camden, this was the Cambodunum of Antoninus, the site of which was on the summit of a neighbouring hill, where there are still some vestiges of a rampart and the remains of a fortification; but some later writers are of opinion that these are Saxons remains, as no Roman relics have ever been found, and there are no ancient roads leading to it. The same author states that in the early Saxon times it was a royal vill, and had a church, built by Paulinus, and dedicated to St. Alban, from which circumstance the name Albanbury, since softened into Almondbury. This church is supposed to have been afterwards burnt in the war between Penda, King of Mercia, and Edwin of Northumbria, the latter of whom had a palace here; and it appears that no church from that period was known till after the year 1090, when the manor came into the possession of the Lacy family, of whom Alice de Lacy and her son Henry, presented to the rectory in 1187, prior to which time a church had been erected most probably by Gilbert de Lacy, the first lord. The inhabitants of this populous and extensive district are principally engaged in the manufacture of fancy goods and woollen cloth, for which there are numerous establishments. The parish comprises 26,055a. 3r. 37p.; there are several coal-mines, and the produce of some stone-quarries is chiefly applied to building purposes. In the 39th of George III. an act was passed for inclosing the waste lands in the townships of North Crosland and Honley; in the 9th of George IV. one for reclaiming those in the townships of Austonley and Upper Thong; and in 1830 similar acts were passed for Meltham and Nether-Thong: in 1837 an act was procured for making and maintaining certain reservoirs in the parish. Fairs are held annually on Easter and Whit-Mondays, and on Nov. 23rd for swine and cattle.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20. 7. 11.; net income, £250; patrons and improPRIATORS, Governors of Clitheroe school, to whom the rectory, &c., were given by the crown at the dissolution, previously to which they had belonged to the College of Jesus, at Rotherham: there are 16 acres of glebe, with a good vicarage-house, rebuilt about 1774. The church, an ancient and venerable structure, erected on the site of the original church in 1552, and which had fallen into a state of general dilapidation, was, in 1840, through the spirited efforts of a few of the inhabitants, thoroughly repaired and completely restored, with the most scrupulous regard to the preservation of its pristine character, and is one of the most beautiful churches in the West riding; many of the elegant windows which had been long concealed, were opened; and the beautiful screen that divided the chancel from the nave, and which was almost entirely destroyed, was perfectly restored. At the end of the north aisle is a chapel belonging to the Earl of Dartmouth, and at the extremity of the south aisle one belonging to the Beaumont family: there are two oak chests of great antiquity richly carved; and round the upper part of the walls, close to the ceiling, are some verses in Saxon characters: in the north and south walls of the chancel are some portions of the original church incorporated in the present edifice. There are also churches at Holme Bridge, Crosland, Farnley-Tyas, Linthwaite, Meltham, Lockwood, Marsden, Nether-Thong, and Honley; that at Farnley built by the Earl of Dartmouth in 1840: and within the township of Almondbury are two places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and one for the New Connexion. A free grammar school was founded by letters-patent of James I., of which the annual income amounts to £91, arising from lands and rent-charges demised by Robert Nettleton and other benefactors; and there is also a national school for 150 children. In 1724, Israel Wormald bequeathed land, the produce of which he directed to be applied towards instructing and apprenticing children of this place; and the poor of Almondsbury have property yielding a considerable rental, which is appropriated to their relief.

ALMONDSBURY (St. MARY THE VIRGIN), a parish, in the union of THORNBURY, comprising the tything of Almondsbury, in the Lower division of the hundred of BERKELEY, the tythings of Gaunts-Earthcote and Lea, in the Lower division of that of THORNBURY, and the tythings of Hempton and Patchway, Over, and Lower Tockington, in the Lower division of the hundred of LANGLEY and SWINEHEAD, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; and containing 1584 inhabitants, of whom 603 are in Almondsbury tything, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Bristol. This parish, which is situated near the river Severn, comprises 6927 acres of rich pasture land in good cultivation; sandstone is quarried chiefly for rough building purposes. The village is situated at the foot of a ridge of limestone rocks, in which lead-ore has been found in small quantities, and of which the old roof of Berkeley castle was partly composed; and the views from the heights, along which passes the road from Gloucester to Bristol, are extensive, embracing the whole estuary of the Severn, and the opposite coast of Wales. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to the see of Gloucester and Bristol, and valued in the king's books at £20: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1150. 13. 4., and there are two acres of glebe. The church, situated in that part of the parish which is in the hundred of Berkeley, is a very handsome cruciform structure, in the early English style, with a tower and spire at the intersection; it has been extensively repaired and altered within the last few years, and contains 700 free sittings. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Here is a school with a small endowment, bequeathed by the late Mr. John Silcox; and a national school, erected at an expense of £250, is endowed with £30 per annum from lands left by an unknown benefactor for the use of the church, producing £210 per annum. A school is also supported by Mr. Lippincott; and two cottages and three acres of land were bequeathed by Mr. Jefferies for widows or widowers.

ALMSFORD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N.) from Castle-Cary; containing 293 inhabitants, and comprising 844*a.* 1*r.* 18*p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 1.; patron and rector, Rev. George Thomas Chamberlaine. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £215, and the glebe consists of 60 acres, with a glebe-house. The church is a small neat structure.

ALNE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EASINGWOLD, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Aldwark, Alne, Flawith, Tholthorp, Tollerton, and Youlton; and containing 1703 inhabitants, of whom 494 are in the township of Alne, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Easingwold. The parish contains by computation 10,900 acres, of which 1900 are in the township of Alne, and are chiefly arable; the surface is level, and the land comprises every variety of soil. A fair for cattle and sheep is held on the Tuesday next after the 8th of Oct. The Great Northern railway passes through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £370; patron and impropiator, Sir C. B. Codrington: a small glebe-house was obtained by exchange with the patron, in 1842. The church, an ancient edifice, with a square tower, was repewed about thirty years since. There are places of worship for Wesleyans at Alne, and Tollerton; where, and at Aldwark and Tholthorp, are also schools. Remains exist of a religious house, which was subordinate to St. Mary's, at York.

ALNE, GREAT (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of ALCESTER, Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Alcester; containing 404 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1800 acres, and is bounded on the south, and partly on the east, by the river Alne. The living is a rectory, annexed, with the perpetual curacy of Weethley, to the rectory of Kinwarton: the church has been enlarged within the last few years. Part of the glebe belonging to Kinwarton rectory is situated in this parish.

ALNESBORNE, an extra-parochial district (locally in the parish of NACTON), in the hundred of COLNEIS, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Ipswich, and adjoining the river Orwell; containing 39 inhabitants. Here was formerly a small priory of Austin Canons, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and suppressed about the year 1466; there are still the remains of a chapel.

ALNEY, a small island in the river Severn, partly in the parish of MAISEMORE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, and partly in those of ST. MARY-DE-LODE and ST. NICHOLAS, city of GLOUCESTER. This island, which is formed by a division of the river into two streams, and comprehends several acres of rich pasture land, was by the Saxons called Oleneag, and is memorable for the interview which took place here, in 1016, between Edmund, King of the Saxons, and Canute, leader of the Danes, whose armies had been drawn up at Deerhurst in battle array for some time, without either giving the signal for the attack. Edmund at length challenged Canute to single combat, which the latter refused on the plea of inequality; but proposed a reference to the principal officers of both armies, which was accepted by Edmund, and, after a short conference on this island, peace was concluded between them by a partition of the kingdom.

ALNHAM (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ROTHBURY, N. division of COQUETDALE ward, and of NORTHUMBERLAND; consisting of the townships of Alnham, Prendwick, Screnwood, and Unthank, and containing 256 inhabitants, of whom 141 are in the township of Alnham, 6 miles from Whittingham, and 14 (W.) from Alnwick. The parish forms part of the Cheviot range of mountains, and comprises about 12,000 acres, almost entirely occupied as sheep-walks: excellent building stone is obtained. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with part of the great tithes, and valued in the king's books at £3. 17. 1.; net income, £74; patron, Duke of Northumberland; impropiator of the remainder of the great tithes, J. C. Tarleton, Esq. There are about ten acres of glebe. The church has a plain Norman arch between the nave and chancel.

Near it are the ruins of an ancient tower, which his Grace is now fitting up for a parsonage; and on Castle Hill is a semicircular encampment, defended by a high double rampart and deep trench, within which is a range of uncemented stones.

ALNMOUTH, or ALEMOUTH, a small sea-port, and township, in the parish of LESBURY, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTH-UMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Alnwick; containing 480 inhabitants. This place, which takes its name from its situation on a tongue of land projecting into the sea, near the mouth of the river Aln, comprises 180 acres of land, of a light turnip soil, in equal portions of arable and pasture; the scenery is undulated, and there are good land and sea views; stone for building is procured from the rocks on the shore. Mr. Edward Thew, of Lesbury House, has a steam flour-mill here, and ships large quantities of corn; and there is an extensive timber-yard, belonging to Mr. Hindmars, of Alnwick. Formerly a considerable trade was carried on, consisting principally in the export of corn, flour, eggs, and pork to London, and of wool to the manufacturing districts of Yorkshire, but the trade is now limited, and the business of ship-building, which prevailed here, has entirely declined. To the port, which is subordinate to that of Berwick, belong several vessels, varying from 50 to 150 tons' burthen. The village is resorted to for sea-bathing, and the sands, being very firm, form a fine promenade; hot baths are always in readiness at the Schooner inn. By an encroachment of the sea, and a change in the course of the river, a small island has been formed, on which, until 1806, were the remains of an old chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, the site of which was originally on the main land. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge amounting to £30. 1. 6., of which £26. 15. 10. are payable to the vicar, who has a glebe of about three-quarters of an acre, £2. 3. 1. to the clerk, and £1. 2. 7. to the sexton, of the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school-house was built in 1826, at the expense of a benevolent individual.

Corporation Seal.

Lands, Canongate, Denwick, and Hulne Park, and containing 6626 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, was occupied at a very early period by the Danes or Saxons, who, from its situation near the river Alne, called it Ealwvic, and built a strong castle for its defence on a site supposed to have been previously occupied by a Roman fortress, which, after the Norman Conquest, became the baronial residence of Ivo de Vesey, lord of Alnwick, to whom the barony had been given by the Conqueror. In 1093, the castle was besieged by Malcolm III., King of Scotland, and bravely defended by Mowbray, Earl of Northumberland; upon which occasion Malcolm and his son Edward were both killed; the former, according to the Chronicle of Alnwick Abbey, by one of the garrison, under pretence of presenting to him, in token of submission, the keys of the fortress at the point of a lance; and the latter in his eagerness to revenge the death of his father, in an unguarded assault of the enemy, in which he received a mortal wound. The remembrance of this event is preserved by a cross erected about a mile north of the town, on the spot where the Scottish monarch is supposed to have fallen; it was rebuilt in 1774 by the Duchess of Northumberland, a lineal descendant of that king, and is still called Malcolm's Cross. In 1135, the town, which during the border wars was constantly an object of attack, was taken by David, King of Scotland; and in 1174 it was besieged by William, at the head of 80,000 Scottish forces, but was successfully defended by William de Vesey, Robert de Stuteville, Ranulph de Glanville, and others, who took the Scottish monarch prisoner, and sent him to London, where he was kept in confinement till released by his subjects, who paid £100,000 for his ransom. In 1215, the town was nearly reduced to ashes by King John; but it appears to have been speedily rebuilt, for, within five years from that date, Gualo, the pope's legate, summoned a general council of the Scottish bishops to be held here, for the regulation of some ecclesiastical abuses. In 1328, it was again besieged by the Scots under Robert Bruce, but without success; and in 1411, the castle was embattled and the town surrounded with a strong wall, to protect it from the predatory incursions of the Scots. Notwithstanding these fortifications, it was again assailed by the Scots, who in 1448 set fire to it, in retaliation for the burning of Dumfries by the English. After the battle of Hexham, in 1463, the castle, which was in the interest of the House of Lancaster, was summoned by the Earl of Warwick; but the garrison, though unable to sustain a protracted siege, retained possession, till they were relieved by Sir George Douglas, who, arriving at the head of a considerable force, afforded them an opportunity of retiring unmolested.

The town is pleasantly situated on the irregular declivity of an eminence rising from the bank of the river Alne, over which, at the northern extremities, are two neat stone bridges. The streets are spacious, well paved, and lighted with gas; the houses, which are built of stone, are chiefly of modern erection; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from cisterns and reservoirs, and by pumps in various parts of the town, erected at the expense of the corporation. Near the south entrance of the town is a fine column, eighty-three feet in height, erected upon an eminence at the side of the turnpike-road: it is called the Percy Tenantry Column, from having been raised by the agricultural tenantry of the Duke of Northumberland, in 1816, in grateful commemoration of his Grace's liberality at various periods, when the distress of the times had rendered the payment of rent in many cases difficult, and in some altogether impracticable. An elegant column was also erected in 1814, on Camp Hill near the town, in commemoration of the various victories obtained by the British during the war, and of the restoration of peace. A subscription library was established in 1783; but this was dissolved in 1833, and an improved institution was formed in 1834, which now contains nearly 2000 volumes. In 1824, a mechanics' institute was founded, for which a handsome building was erected in 1831, containing a lecture-room, library, and other accommodations. Assemblies are held in a spacious building in the market-place, part of which is also appropriated as a reading-room: a savings' bank was established in 1815. The trade and manufactures of the place are not of much importance; yet there are some extensive breweries and tanneries, and the parish abounds with coal, limestone, freestone, and whinstone. The market, abundantly supplied with corn and provisions, is held on Saturday; fairs, for cattle and horses, are held on May 12th, the last Monday in July, and the first Tuesday in Oct.; and there are also other fairs, on the first Saturday in March and in November for hiring servants. On the eve of the July fair, the inhabitants of certain of the manors and townships, owing suit and service to the Duke of Northumberland, send deputies to attend the bailiff in the ceremony of proclamation; they afterwards keep watch and ward in the several quarters of the town for the remainder of the night, by which service they obtain exemption from toll within the town during the fair. A new fish-market, erected at the expense of his Grace, was opened April 20th, 1830.

Alnwick is a BOROUGH by prescription, having no royal charter of incorporation; though, from the capricious mode of choosing the freemen, which is ascribed to King John, it would appear that its prescriptive right was at least tacitly acknowledged by that sovereign; an established corporation is also recognised by an inoperative charter of Henry III., as well as by several ancient existing grants of the De Vescy family. The present corporation consists of twenty-four common-councilmen, and four chamberlains are chosen from among them, who, at a council meeting held on the 29th of September, nominate eight out of their number, and return their names to the steward of the manor, by whom, at the next court leet held for the manor, four are appointed to act as chamberlains for the ensuing year. The common-councilmen are chosen from among the resident freemen of the several incorporated companies or fraternities, of which there are ten, viz., the Cordwainers, Skinners and Glovers, Merchants, Tanners, Weavers, Blacksmiths, Butchers, Joiners, Tailors, and Coopers. A chamberlain's clerk and other officers are appointed by the common-councilmen. The freedom is inherited by the sons of freemen, provided they have first been made free of one of the trading companies; it may also be acquired by a servitude of seven years to a freeman residing in the borough. Each candidate, on taking up his freedom, is subjected to the ludicrous ceremony of passing through a miry pool, thence called the "Freemen's well." A bailiff is appointed by the Duke of Northumberland for the manor of Alnwick. The corporation possess no magisterial authority, the town being wholly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty-sessions on the first and third Saturday in every month. Courts leet and baron are held at Easter and at Michaelmas, under the Duke of Northumberland, as lord of the manor; and a manorial court is held also for the township of Canongate. The quarter-sessions for the county take place here at Michaelmas, in rotation with Hexham, Morpeth, and Newcastle. The county court is held here monthly; and the election of parliamentary representatives for the northern division of the county, and also the election of coroners for the county, take place at Alnwick. The town-hall, erected in 1731, is a handsome stone building, surmounted by a square tower, and stands on the west side of the market-place, an extensive area in the centre of the town, on the south side of which is a large building, erected by the Duke of Northumberland, containing in the upper part a spacious and splendid assembly-room, and a news-room, and affording underneath a covered area for the sale of butchers' meat, fish, and poultry. The house of correction, near the Green Bat, was erected in 1807, and comprises nine sleeping cells, a work-room, a day-room, and two airing yards, but there is not sufficient room for the classification of prisoners.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £175; patron and proprietor, Duke of Northumberland. The church is a spacious and venerable structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a neat tower, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and a chancel. The roof of the chancel is richly groined and ornamented; on the sides are some ancient stalls carved in tabernacle work; and at the east end are three altartombs, on which are recumbent figures of stone finely sculptured, but without date or inscription. The chancel was repaired and beautified in 1781, by the first Duke of Northumberland, and in 1818, the church was repewed, and repaired, when the present duke contributed £300 towards the expense. On repairing the north aisle, two statues of stone, one representing a king and the other supposed to be that of a martyr, were found about two feet below the surface of the ground, and are now placed beneath the tower, at the western extremity of the church. There are places of worship for Independents, a United Secession Relief congregation, Presbyterians, Wesleyans, New Connexion of Methodists, and Unitarians; and a Roman Catholic chapel rebuilt in 1836. The borough grammar school for the education of the children of freemen, has an endowment of about £14 per annum, arising from the corn-tolls, and a rent-charge. The English school is also supported by the corporation; an annuity of £10 was bequeathed to it, in 1726, by Mark Forster, who also left a house and garden for the use of the master. A school for 200 boys was founded in 1810, by the Duke of Northumberland, in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the accession of George III.; and a school has been instituted by the Duchess, for clothing and instructing 50 girls. An infants' school, projected in commemoration of the Queen's coronation, was opened in 1839, and is supported by subscription. A dispensary was established in 1815. The poor law union of Alnwick comprises 62 parishes or places, and contains a population of 18,768.

The ancient CASTLE, now the magnificent residence of the Duke of Northumberland, is a noble and stately structure, comprising two wards, and has been put into a state of thorough repair by the grandfather of the present owner, with a due regard to the preservation of its original style, and its ancient character as one of the most splendid baronial residences in the kingdom: the extensive park and demesnes abound with beautifully varied walks, commanding a rich diversity of scenery, and a fine assemblage of strikingly interesting objects, among which the venerable ruins of Alnwick and Hulne abbeys are conspicuous. On the south-west side of the town stands Swansfield, the residence of Prideaux Selby, Esq., which is a plain stone structure, situated in grounds of varied and picturesque character, and commands beautiful prospects; and from Alnbank House and Frelands, the residences of the respective proprietors, Luke Hindmarsh, Esq., and Thomas Skelly, Esq., are also obtained fine views of the surrounding country. There are some remains of the ancient town walls, which were defended by four square massive gateway towers, of which Bondgate, now the only one entire, was built by the son of the renowned Hotspur; on the site of Pottergate tower a handsome tower gateway has been erected, in the later style of English architecture. Alnwick Abbey was founded in 1147, by Eustace Fitz-John, who endowed it for Præmonstratensian canons, and dedicated it to St. James and the Blessed Virgin: the abbot was summoned to parliament in the reigns of Edward I. and II. It continued to flourish till the dissolution, at which time its revenue was estimated at £194. 7.: the only remains are a gateway, which has been fitted up as a lodge to the parks (which are stocked with deer, and a very fine breed of buffaloes), and, with the abbey grounds, forms a highly interesting feature in the park.

Hulne Abbey, about three miles from the town, but within the limits of the Duke's park, is beautifully situated on the slope of an eminence. It was founded about the year 1240, according to some authorities, by William de Vescy, and according to others by Ralph Fresborn, after returning from the crusades, for Carmelite friars, and is said to have been the first house of that order established in England; it was amply endowed by William de Vescy and his successors, and Fresborn became the first abbot. The site was granted, in the reign of Elizabeth, to Thomas Reeve and others, and was afterwards purchased by the Percy family, its present proprietors. The remains, which are beautifully mantled with ivy, are very considerable, and form an interesting feature in the scenery of the park; part of the abbey buildings has been fitted up as a residence for a gamekeeper. Bale, the eminent biographer, was one of the brethren of this ancient monastery. Opposite to the remains of the abbey, a road, winding round a lofty eminence, leads to Brislee Hill, on the summit of which is a noble column, ninety feet high, and within it a spiral staircase leading to the balcony, which commands an extensive and delightful prospect, embracing the hills of Cheviot and Teviotdale; the hill of Flodden; the castles of Bambrough, Dunstanburgh, and Warkworth; the isle of Coquet, the port of Alnmouth, and various other interesting objects. Here also was an ancient hospital, founded by Eustace de Vescy, and dedicated to St. Leonard; likewise a chapel dedicated to St. Thomas: and in Walkergate-street is an old house, the doorway and windows of which prove its ecclesiastical origin. At Sheep-layers-on-the-Moor, and at Rugley Moorhouse farm, in the vicinity of the town, are encampments supposed to be of Danish origin, but nothing is recorded of their history. In 1726, a workman employed in quarrying stone for the repairs of the castle discovered twenty swords, sixteen spearheads, and forty celts, all of brass; and on the face of the rock under which they were found was rudely cut the date 1115. Alnwick gives the title of Baron Louvaine of Alnwick to the Earl of Beverley.

ALPERTON, a hamlet, in the parish of HARROW-ON-THE-HILL, union of HENDON, hundred of GORE, county of MIDDLESEX; containing 242 inhabitants.

ALPHAMSTONE, a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 5 miles (N. E.) from Halstead; containing 314 inhabitants. This parish, which includes the hamlet of Bures, and contains 1557*a. 2r. 37p.*, was anciently parcel of the possessions of the abbey of Bury-St. Edmund's, except a portion that belonged to Richard Fitz-Gilbert, which, after the Conquest, was divided among several proprietors. The soil is rich, and constitutes fine corn land; the scenery is picturesque. A pleasure fair is held on the first Thursday in June. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the gift of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £440, and the glebe consists of 28 acres. The church, an ancient building of flint, consisting of a nave, with a south aisle and chancel, lighted by small lancet-shaped windows, is finely situated on an eminence, commanding an extensive and richly varied prospect: the tower, with the bells, fell down about fifty years since.

ALPHETON, a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Long Melford; containing 321 inhabitants, and comprising 1200 acres by admeasurement. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 1. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. G. Dickenson. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £286; and there are 40 acres of glebe, with a good parsonage-house, pleasantly situated near the turnpike-road. The church contains a mural monument to Lieut. Shepard, who received a wound in the head at the attack on Boulogne in 1805, which caused his death ten years after; the old painted glass has been lately collected, and, with the addition of new, formed into two neat windows.

ALPHINGTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of St. THOMAS, hundred of WONFORD, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, 1½ mile (S.) from Exeter; containing 1286 inhabitants. This place, an ancient manor, of which the lords had the power of inflicting capital punishment, is skirted by the banks of the Exe, which river, as well as the Exeter canal, passes through the parish. It comprises 2223 acres by computation; granite is found in some parts, and at the Porkham quarry good building stone is obtained. Fairs for cattle are held on the first Wednesday after the 20th of June; and in the beginning of October. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £34. 6. 8., and has a net income of £852; the glebe consists of 27 acres, with an excellent parsonage-house built by the late Rev. William Ellicombe, whose son, the Rev. Richard Ellicombe, is the present patron and incumbent. The church contains a circular Norman font, with intersecting arches and scroll ornaments. There are a place of worship for Wesleyans, and a school in connexion with the National Society.

ALPINGTON, a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of LODDON, E. division of NORFOLK, 1½ mile (N.) from Brooke, and 6 miles (S. E.) from Norwich, on the road to Bungay; containing 197 inhabitants, and comprising 530*a.* 3*r.* 12*p.* The living, a rectory, is united to Yelverton, and there are no remains of the church. About 9½ acres of land were allotted to the poor for fuel, at the time of the inclosure.

ALPRAHAM, a township, in the parish of BUNBURY, union of NANTWICH, First division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Tarporley; containing 520 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £106, payable to the Haberdashers' Company, London. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ALRESFORD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, 6½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Colchester; containing 289 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Colne, and takes its name, which is supposed to be a modification of Aldersford, from an ancient ford across that river: the lands are elevated, and the soil generally of a light sandy quality. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £307; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church, a small edifice, with a spire of shingles, was, according to an inscription in the chancel, written in Norman French, erected by Anfrid or Anfrey de Staunton. There is a school in connexion with the National Society.

ALRESFORD, NEW, a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the liberty of ALRESFORD, Alton and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Winchester, and 57 (S. W. by W.) from London, on the high road to Winchester; containing 1578 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from its situation near a ford on the river Arle, was given to the church of Winchester by Cenwalh, King of the West Saxons, after his baptism by Bishop Birinus; and about 1220, Godfrey de Lucy, Bishop of Winchester, restored the market, then fallen into disuse. On May-day, 1690, the town was destroyed by fire, previously to which it was so prosperous that there was not an individual requiring parochial relief; and in 1710 a similar calamity occurred. The parish comprises, by computation, 730 acres; the surface is flat in some parts, and in others hilly; the soil, which is light and chalky, is in general good. Alresford pond is a fine piece of water, through which runs the river Itchen, which divides this parish from Old Alresford. The northern embankment is formed by a causeway, nearly 500 yards in length, which, previously to the construction of the present road through Bishop's-Sutton, in 1753, constituted part of the main road to London: it was accomplished by Bishop de Lucy, under a grant from King John, with a view to the improvement of his grounds, and to increase the depth of the river Itchen, which was formerly navigable to Southampton Water, though of late it has ceased to be so higher than Winchester; and as a recompense for this arduous undertaking, the bishop obtained, for himself and his successors, the entire royalty of the river from the reservoir to the sea. Among the seats in the neighbourhood are those of Lord Rodney (formerly the residence of his ancestor, the gallant Admiral), Sir Henry Tichbourne, Bart., and Lord Ashburton, which last, called the Grange, is a beautiful copy of the Parthenon at Athens. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held on Holy-Thursday, the last Thursdays in July and Nov., and the Thursday next after Old Michaelmas-day, almost exclusively for sheep.

Alresford was incorporated at a very early period, and returned one representative to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I. The corporation consists of a bailiff, appointed by the Bishop of Winchester (as lord of the manor), and eight burgesses, who, by virtue of a lease from the bishop, receive the tolls of the market, but exercise no magisterial authority. A court leet is held at Michaelmas, when the bailiff is chosen; and the county magistrates hold a petty-session weekly, for the division of Alton. The living is a rectory, annexed, with that of Medsted, to the rectory of Old Alresford: the glebe comprises 18 acres. There are places of worship for Independents and Roman Catholics. H. Perrin, Esq., in 1698, founded a school for nineteen boys, sons of poor tradesmen in the town, and the neighbouring villages of Old Alresford, Sutton, and Tichbourne; it is endowed with a good house for the master, and fifty-two acres of land, now let for £100 per annum. A school in connexion with the National Society has also been established. The poor law union, of which this town is the head, comprises 18 parishes and places, and contains a population of 7092. At Bramdean, about three miles distant, a tessellated pavement was discovered about ten years ago, one part of which represents the wrestling match between Hercules and Antæus.

ALRESFORD, OLD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ALRESFORD, hundred of FAWLEY, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, ¾ of a mile (N.) from New Alresford; containing 502 inhabitants. This parish, which is divided from that of New Alresford, by the river Itchen, comprises about 2000 acres; the surface is hilly, and the soil light and chalky, but tolerably good. The hamlet of Hamsworth is included in the measurement of this parish, but is rated with that of Medsted. The living is a rectory, with those of New Alresford and Medsted annexed, valued in the king's books at £49. 12. 8½.; the glebe comprises 40 acres; patron, the Bishop of Winchester. Schools are supported by subscription.

ALREWAS (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LICHFIELD, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 5½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Lichfield; containing, with the hamlets of Fradley and Orgrave 1658 inhabitants, of whom 1173 are in the township of Alrewas. This parish is bounded by the Trent on the north, and by the Tame on the east, and contains 4329*a.* 31*p.*; it is intersected by the Trent and Mersey, and the Coventry canals; and there is a station of the Birmingham and Derby railroad 1½ mile from the village. A manufactory of worsted yarn employs about ninety hands. Courts leet and baron for the manor are held twice a year: the custom of Borough English prevails. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; patron and impropiator, Prebendary of Alrewas and Wecford, in the Cathedral of Lichfield. The prebendal tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £439. 15., and the vicarial for £250; there is glebe-land and land allotted in lieu of tithes upon the common; the prebendal has 102*a.* 25*p.*, and the vicar 37*a.* 2*r.* 10*p.*; with a glebe-house. The church is chiefly in the Norman style, and contains monuments to several of the family of Turton, a member of which was chief justice of the king's bench, in the time of William III. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Ranters; and a national school. Viscount Anson was baron of Orgrave, in the parish, where he had an estate, which still remains in the possession of the family. The Roman Ikeneld-street intersects the parish.

ALREWAS-HAYES, an extra-parochial liberty, locally in the parish of ALREWAS, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Lichfield; containing 92 inhabitants, and comprising 1200 acres.

ALSAGER, a chapelry, in the parish of BARTHOMLEY, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4 miles (W.) from Church Lawton; containing 445 inhabitants. This place is situated on the road from Barthomley to Lawton, and comprises 2076 acres. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the ladies of the manor; the income is £105, arising from 63 acres of land. A rent-charge of £240 has been awarded as a commutation in lieu of the tithes. The chapel is a handsome edifice consecrated in 1790, and contains a monument to the memory of Col. Tryon, who was engaged in the Peninsular war. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a small school founded and endowed, in 1789, by Mary, Judith, and Margaret Alsager, owners of the manor, who likewise built and endowed the chapel.

ALSOP-LE-DALE, with EATON, a chapelry, in the parish of ASHBOURN, hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ashbourn; containing 67 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the inhabitant freeholders; net income, £49; appropriator, Dean of Lincoln. The chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, is of Norman architecture, with many modern alterations.

ALSTON, or ALSTON-MOOR (St. AUGUSTINE), a market-town and parish, forming a union of itself, in LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 29 miles (E. S. E.) from Carlisle, and 287 (N. N. W.) from London; comprising the township of Alston, and the chapelry of Garrigill, the former containing 4588, and the latter 1474, inhabitants. Mining in this district is of some antiquity, several charters having been granted to the miners of "Alderston" in the 13th century: in 1282 the manor was granted by Edward I. to Nicholas de Veteripont, and in 1333 Edward III. confirmed to his son, Robert de Veteripont, and to the monetarii, or coiners, many important privileges: in the reign of Henry V. the manor and mines were let to William Stapleton; and, subsequently, Alston became the property of the Hyltons of Hylton Castle, in the county of Durham, and lastly of the Radcliffe family, with whom it continued until the attainder of the last Earl of Derwentwater, in 1716, when it was granted by the crown to the Governors of Greenwich Hospital. The parish comprises by computation about 40,000 acres, and includes two considerable villages, Garrigill and Nent Head, the latter on the eastern border of the parish; each 4 miles from Alston, and each containing about 500 persons. The town of Alston, consisting of 1650 inhabitants, is situated on the declivity and base of Middlefell hill, in a narrow valley, near the confluence of the rivers Nent and South Tyne, over each of which is a neat stone bridge. The houses, which are irregularly and rather meanly built, are chiefly of stone, roofed with slate, and the streets are inconveniently steep; the inhabitants are supplied with water conveyed by pipes from an excellent spring, about half a mile distant, into four punts, or cisterns, conveniently placed in different parts of the town. A subscription library was established in 1821, in commemoration of the coronation of George IV.; and races are held on Easter Monday and Tuesday. An excellent new line of road has been made, under the superintendence of Mr. M'Adam, from Hexham to Penrith, through Alston, which is shorter by several miles than the old road by way of Carlisle. Several of the contiguous eminences command beautiful views of the surrounding country, particularly Hartside, which embraces the counties of Cumberland and Westmorland, including the lake of Ullswater, and the mountains of the lake district, Solway Firth, and the adjacent Scottish shore.

The immediate vicinity, which is inclosed on the west by the mountains Cross Fell and Hartside, and on all sides by high lands, is equally remarkable for the sterility of the soil and the abundance of its MINERAL wealth. The lead-mines, in which the inhabitants are chiefly employed, and of which there are no fewer than thirty-eight in the parish, are very extensive and productive: the ore contains a proportion of silver, averaging from eight to ten ounces per ton; and one of the mines opened at Yadmoss in 1828, has produced ore containing ninety-six ounces of silver in each ton. Copper has also been found in the same vein with the lead, and in many instances the same mine has been worked for copper-ore of excellent quality, and lead-ore rich in silver. The grand aqueduct level, called "Nent Force," was cut by the trustees of Greenwich Hospital: this subterraneous canal is five miles in length, from its mouth, near the town, to the shaft of the mine, and boats and guides were once kept in readiness to conduct those who might wish to explore it. In the mines are several extensive caverns, splendidly decorated with fluor-spar, shot into crystals of every form and hue; and, where the yellow copper-ore and pyrites are intermingled, nothing can exceed the brilliancy with which the prismatic colours are reflected. Of these, Tutman's Hole has been explored to the distance of a mile from the entrance; and in that at Dun Fell, on the side of Alston-Moor, the chambers and windings are so intricate, that visitors have been glad to avail themselves of some clue to their return. Among other minerals found here are, pyrites of iron, containing small particles of gold, tessellated ore, zinc, phosphate and sulphate of lead, cobalt, &c. The crow coal, found on the moor, at a small depth below the surface, contains pyrites in large proportion; it burns with little flame, but emits an intense heat, and, mixed with clay, is made into balls for fuel. There are two large smelting-furnaces, and several machines, worked by water, for crushing and washing the ore. The principal manufacture is that of woollen yarn, carried on in an extensive mill recently built; and there is also a public brewery on a large scale. The market is on Saturday; fairs take place on the last Thursday in May, Friday before the last day of Sept., and the first Thursday in Nov. At Nent Head, a customary market is also held every Thursday. Two of the county magistrates hold a petty-session at the Swan inn, on the first Friday in every month; and courts leet and baron occur in the months next after Easter and Michaelmas.

The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 13.; net income, £180; patrons and improprators, Governors of Greenwich Hospital. The tithes, with certain exceptions, were commuted for an allotment of land, under an inclosure act, in 1803. The church, rebuilt in 1770, is a neat edifice with a tower. A chapel of ease is situated at Garrigill, a plain and unadorned building erected by subscription about 1780; and there are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The grammar school was rebuilt by subscription, in 1828, and is endowed with £29. 8. 6. per annum: no scholars are gratuitously instructed, but the master, in consideration of the endowment, is limited to a certain scale of charges for boys attending it. There are also various other schools in different parts of the parish, some of which have small endowments. The Roman road called the Maiden-way crosses the western part of the parish, where it may be distinctly traced; and on Hall hill, a little below the bridge over the Tyne, are the foundations of an ancient fortress, surrounded by a moat. On Gildersdale fell is a stagnant pool, covered with mud several inches thick, which is used by the neighbouring people as paint; it produces colours resembling yellow ochre and Spanish brown, but has not been analyzed.

ALSTON, a chapelry, in the parish of Ashburton, union of NEWTON ABBOT, hundred of TEIGNBRIDGE, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Ashburton. It comprises 1010 acres by computation; the surface is hilly, and the sub-soil consists of limestone, clay, and sharp gravel. The chief produce arises from corn land and orchards, the cultivators of which are in general independent freeholders.

ALSTON, a township, in the parish of RIBCHES-TER, union of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Preston; containing 807 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £170, of which £150 are payable to the Bishop of Chester, and £20 to the vicar. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics.

ALSTONE, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of CHELTENHAM, union of WINCHCOMB, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. W. by W.) from Cheltenham. This place is situated on the river Chelt, over which is a viaduct for the Birmingham and Gloucester railway, which proceeds hence to the parish of Swinton. A church was consecrated in 1840, and is a handsome and spacious structure, containing 2085 sittings, 480 of which are free. Here is a chalybeate saline spa, for an account of which see CHELTENHAM.

ALSTONE, a chapelry, in the parish of OVERBURY, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Tewkesbury; containing 89 inhabitants. It forms part of a detached portion of the parish, surrounded on all sides, except the north-west by the county of Gloucester. The chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret.

ALSTONFIELD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of LEEK, hundred of NORTH TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Ashbourn; comprising the chapelries of Elkstone, Warslow, Longnor, and Quarnfor, and the townships of Alstonfield, Fairfieldhead, Heathy-Lee, and Hollinsclough; and containing 4701 inhabitants, of whom 654 are in the township of Alstonfield. This parish, which is fifteen miles in length, is situated at the northern extremity of the county, and is bounded on the west by Cheshire, and on the east by Derbyshire, from which it is separated by the river Dove: the township comprises 2862 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 11. 4.; net income, £112; patron and improprator, Sir George Crewe, Bart. The church is in the early English style, with an embattled tower crowned with pinnacles; the nave is separated from the aisles by a series of finely pointed arches; the pulpit and reading-desk were the gift of the poet Cotton, who resided at Beresford Hall. There are six chapels exclusively of the parish church, those in Heathy Lee and Hollinsclough having been lately built, principally at the expense of Sir G. Crewe. A small free school was founded in 1726, by German Pole, who bequeathed £60 for its endowment.

ALTCAR (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Ormskirk; containing 490 inhabitants. It consists of about 3300 acres; the surface is in general flat, and the soil light, and in some parts mossy; a considerable portion is laid out in meadows, from which a large quantity of hay, of somewhat inferior quality, is produced. The lands are subject to floods in the winter, which are carried off by the small river Alt. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £95; patron and improprator, Earl of Sefton.

ALTERNON (St. NUNN), a parish, in the union of LAUNCESTON, hundred of LESNEWTH, E. division of CORNWALL, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Launceston; containing 1334 inhabitants. Fairs are held at Five-Lanes, in the parish, on the Monday after June 24th, and the first Tuesday in November. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 5.; net income, £320; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Exeter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school supported by subscription.

ALTHAM, a chapelry, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of BURNLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (W.) from Burnley; containing 349 inhabitants. Coal is obtained in the vicinity. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £117; patron, R. T. W. Walton, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

ALTHORNE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of MALDON, hundred of DENGIE, S. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (N. W.) from Burnham; containing 418 inhabitants. It is situated on the estuary of the river Crouch, from the overflowing of which the lowlands are protected by very strong embankments, nine feet high, constructed by labourers from Holland, whose descendants are still resident here. The living is a vicarage, united to the rectory of Creeksea in 1811, and valued in the king's books at £14; improprator, Thomas Wilson, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £454. 5. 6., the small tithes for a rent-charge of £155. 15.; and there are more than six acres of glebe. The church is a small edifice, containing, in the aisles, two brass plates, with inscriptions in the old English character, one to the memory of Margaret Hycklot, the other to William Hycklot, "who paid for the workmanship of the walls of this church," and died in 1508.

ALTHORP (St. OSWALD), a parish, in the union of THORNE, W. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 11 miles (W. by N.) from Glandford-Bridge; containing, with the townships of Amcotts and Keadby, 1184 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £400. The tithes of the township of Althorp have been commuted for corn-rents under an act obtained in 1794. There is a chapel of ease at Amcotts.

ALTHORPE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of NEWBOTTLE-GROVE, county of NORTHAMPTON; containing 55 inhabitants.—See BRINGTON.

ALTOFTS, a township, in the parish of NORMANTON, Lower division of the wapentake of AGRIBIGG, W. riding of YORK, 3¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Wakefield; containing 704 inhabitants. This place is situated on the south side of the river Calder, across which is a horse-ferry, and near the junction of the York and North-Midland railways. There is an aqueduct of elegant design for the Aire and Calder canal. The ancient hall of Altofts is said to have been the residence of Admiral Frobisher, by whom it was built. Stone of good quality is quarried, and many fossils are found. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £344, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, and the vicarial for one of £69. 10. Here is a school, endowed with £20 per annum by Mrs. Susannah Dods-worth, for which 15 girls are clothed and instructed.

ALTON (St. LAWRENCE), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of ALTON, Alton and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 17 miles (E. N. E.) from Winchester, and 47 (S. W. by W.) from London; containing 3139 inhabitants. The name of this town, which is a slight modification of Auleton or Aultone, is descriptive of its great antiquity. It was a royal demesne in the time of Alfred the Great, and is noticed in the Saxon Chronicle as the scene of a sanguinary battle which was fought between the Saxons and the piratical Danes, who, having landed on this part of the coast in 1001, plundered and laid waste the country till they reached this place, at that time called "Aethelinda-dene," where the men of Hampshire had assembled in order to oppose their further progress, but notwithstanding great numbers of the invaders were slain, they remained in possession of the field of battle, whence they afterwards marched northward. At the time of the Norman survey the town belonged to the abbot of St. Peter's, Winchester; and in the reign of Edward I. it returned one member to parliament. During the civil war of the seventeenth century, the place was occupied by a detachment of the royal army, under the command of Sir Ralph Hopton; but, in 1643, it was taken by the parliamentary forces under Sir William Waller, after an engagement in which Col. Bowles was killed at the church door, and his regiment taken prisoners.

The TOWN is situated at the source of the river Wey, and consists of three principal streets, which are lighted under an act obtained for that purpose; the houses are in general neatly built, and of pleasing and cheerful appearance. A public library, on a plan calculated to meet the wants of the working mechanics, was established in 1837; it is in a state of prosperous advancement, and lectures are occasionally given to the members. The environs are beautifully picturesque, and the adjacent district richly fertile; the lands are watered by a fine stream, which crosses the town under the streets and houses; and in the surrounding scenery the church occupies a commanding site, and forms a conspicuous and interesting feature. The parish comprises by measurement 3896 acres; the surface is generally hilly, and the soil consists principally of chalk and gravel. The manufacture of bombazines was formerly carried on to a very considerable extent, but is now totally discontinued; a great quantity of hop bagging is made, and there is a large paper manufactory, which is set in motion by the Wey, at no great distance from its source. There are also two large breweries in the town, and in the vicinity are about 200 acres of ground laid out in the cultivation of hops, the malt and the ale of Alton being in high repute. The market, formerly held on Saturday, but since 1840 altered to Tuesday in every alternate week, is chiefly for cattle and sheep, and from the great agricultural resources of the neighbourhood is rapidly increasing: fairs for horses and cattle take place annually on the last Saturday in April, and Sept. 29th, the former for the manor of Alton Westbrook, and the latter for that of Alton Eastbrook. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions here for the division; and a court leet is held once a month by the steward of the manor, at which debts under 40s. are recoverable. The town-hall, situated in the market-place, was rebuilt by subscription in 1812, and was principally used for the national school; but since the establishment of the new market, and of an agricultural society, it has, together with the market-place, been taken on lease by the inhabitants for the use of the market, and the school has been removed.

The LIVING is a vicarage, with those of Binstead, Holybourne, and Kingsley annexed, valued in the king's books at £15; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Winchester, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £770, and the vicarial for £496. The church is a spacious structure, principally in the later style of English architecture, with some portions of earlier date; it has a square embattled tower surmounted by a spire, and has been enlarged by the addition of a north aisle; on its northern wall is a curious painting of our Saviour's life. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, and for Independents. The free grammar school at Anstey, in the parish, was founded in the reign of Charles I., by John Eggar, and has an endowment of £74. 10. per annum; and there is also a national school. The poor law union of Alton comprises 19 parishes or places, and contains a population of 11,299. Roman urns, coins, and other antiquities have been found in the neighbourhood; and in cleaning the church, in 1839, a portrait of Henry VI. and several bishops were discovered. William de Alton, a Dominican friar, who lived in the time of Edward II., and wrote a treatise on the universality of the pollution of mankind by original sin; John Pitts, an eminent biographer, author of a work entitled "De Illustribus Angliæ Scriptoribus;" and William Curtis, an eminent botanist, author of the "Flora Londinensis," editor of the Botanical Magazine, and founder of a botanical garden near the Magdalene Hospital, and afterwards of a more extensive establishment at Brompton, were natives of the town.

ALTON, county of STAFFORD.—See ALVETON.

ALTON-BARNES, or BERNERS (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 7 miles (E.) from Devizes; containing 167 inhabitants. The new road from Amesbury to Kennet will pass through the parish, where it will cross the Kennet and Avon canal, which flows a little south of the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 18. 11½., and in the gift of New College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £449, and the glebe consists of about 50 acres. A school is supported by the rector.

ALTON-PANCRAS (ST. PANCRATIUS), a parish and liberty, in the union of CERNE, Cerne division of DORSET, 8¼ miles (N.) from Dorchester; containing 248 inhabitants. The two manors, or parcels of demesne land, called Alton Borealis and Alton Australis, constitute the endowment of two prebends in the cathedral of Salisbury. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £25; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury (who are also appropriators), on the nomination of the Prebendary. The church is dedicated to St. Pancratius, a nobleman of Phrygia, who suffered martyrdom under Diocletian at Rome in the third century.

ALTON-PRIORS, a chapelry, in the parish of OVERTON, union of PEWSEY, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Devizes; containing, with the tything of Stowell, 251 inhabitants. The chapelry is separated on the north from the principal portion of the parish in which it is situated by a range of hills that stretches across the country in this part; and the Kennet and Avon canal passes at a short distance on the south. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints.

Arms.

ALTRINCHAM, a market-town and chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of BOWDON, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Nether Knutsford, and 180 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 3399 inhabitants. The town is situated near Bowdon Downs, and, though small, contains several respectable dwelling-houses, the salubrity of the air rendering it a place of general resort for invalids from Manchester: it is watched and lighted under the general act of the 11th of Geo. IV., and is characterized throughout by cleanliness and neatness. The trade principally consists in the spinning of yarn, the making of hobbins for cotton and worsted spinners, and the weaving of cotton by hand-looms, and by machinery driven by steam, for the manufacturers at Manchester and other adjacent towns. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal from Manchester to Runcorn passes within three-quarters of a mile from the town, and affords a facility of conveyance for coal. Early potatoes are cultivated here to a great extent for the Manchester market. The market-days are Tuesday and Saturday, the latter for butchers' meat; the fairs, chiefly for the sale of live stock, are held on April 29th, August 5th, and November 22nd. Altrincham was made a free borough in the reign of Edward I., by charter of Hamon de Massey, lord of the barony of Dunham-Massey, whereby the burgesses were empowered to have a guild-merchant, and to choose a prepositus, or bailiff; but the only privilege they now possess is that of electing a mayor at a court leet held in autumn, when a jury of burgesses present three of their own body to the steward, who appoints one to the office, which is merely nominal, and the duty of which extends only to the opening of the fairs. A steward is chosen by the lord of the barony of Dunham-Massey, and this officer appoints a bailiff; there are also two constables, who are chosen by the leet jury. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron, Vicar of Bowdon; net income, £187. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £91. 14., of which £48. 14. are payable to the Bishop of Chester, and £43 to the vicar. The chapel, dedicated to St. George, is a plain brick building, erected by subscription in 1799. There are two places of worship for Methodists, and one for Unitarians. The Jubilee school, built in 1810, has a small endowment, but is chiefly supported by subscription. The poor law union of Altrincham comprises 39 parishes or places, and contains a population of 31,019.

ALVANLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of FRODSHAM, union of RUNCORN, Second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Frodsham; containing 314 inhabitants. The living is a donative; net income, £47; patron, Lord Alvanley. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. A national school has been established. Alvanley gives the title of Baron to the Arden family.

ALVASTON, a township, in the parish, union, and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2½ miles (N. E.) from Nantwich; containing 40 inhabitants. Races are held annually in the township. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £82. 7. 6.

ALVASTON, a chapelry, in the parish of St. MICHAEL, DERBY, union of SHARDLOW, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 3½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Derby; containing 493 inhabitants. This place is pleasantly situated near the river Derwent, on the London road, and contains 1354*a.* 3*r.* 34*p.* The Derby canal runs through the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the parishioners, with a net income of £116: the tithes were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1802; the glebe consists of about 67 acres, and portions of land have been purchased in Leicestershire and Derbyshire by an allowance from Queen Anne's Bounty. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and two schools are aided by the trustees of Gilbert's charity, which provides also for the repair of the church.

ALVECHURCH (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of BROMSGROVE, forming a detached portion of the Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, locally in the Upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Northfield and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bromsgrove; containing 1633 inhabitants. This was the occasional residence of the Bishops of Worcester, who had a palace here in the reign of Henry II., which after the sale of the manor by the parliament, in 1648, was suffered to fall to decay, and has now entirely disappeared. The parish comprises 6599 acres, and the Birmingham and Worcester canal runs through it. Fairs for cattle and sheep are held on the 22nd of April and the 10th of August. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 16. 8.; net income, £1025; patron, Bishop of Worcester. The church has Norman pillars, but the chancel displays the early English style, and the tower is more modern. Here is a charity with an income of £36 per annum, appropriated to the education of children, and general purposes. An hospital for a master, six brethren, and two sisters, was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, and is endowed with £33. 6. 8., exclusively of keeping the tenements in repair; and there are several minor charities. The Roman Ikeneld-street passes through the parish, in its course from Alcester towards Lichfield. The learned Dr. Hicckes, author of the "Thesaurus Septentrionalium Linguarum," was incumbent of Alvechurch.

ALVELEY (St. MARY), a parish, partly within the liberty of the borough of BRIDGENORTH, but chiefly in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, union of BRIDGENORTH, S. division of SALOP, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Bridgenorth; containing, with Nordley Regis township, and Romsley liberty in the borough of Bridgenorth, 1062 inhabitants. It comprises 6435 acres, including Romsley, which contributes one-third towards the church-rate, but is independent of the parish in other respects: the road from Shrewsbury to Cheltenham passes through it, and the river Severn is its boundary on one side. There are some works for the manufacture of iron, and several stone-quarries, of which the stone is used for building, and made into wheels for mills and manufactures. Alveley was one of the five prebends in the royal free chapel of the castle of Bridgenorth, valued, in the reign of Henry III., at sixty marks, and is still reputed and rated as such in the Office of the First Fruits. The living is a perpetual curacy, lately endowed with £300 by various persons, and with £17 per annum by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; net income previously, £82; patron and impropiator, Col. Gatacre. The church is a fine edifice, a mixture of Norman and English architecture, with middle, side, and transept aisles, and a curious old painted window, supposed to have been built in the time of the Tudors. There is a private chapel attached to Coton Hall in the parish. A free school was endowed in 1616, by John Grove, who also founded almshouses for decayed labourers.

ALVERDISCOT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of TORRINGTON, hundred of HARTLAND, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Torrington; containing 332 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the old road from Torrington to Barnstaple, comprises by computation 2000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 3. 11 $\frac{1}{4}$., and in the gift of William Lee, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £156. 8., and the glebe comprises 36 acres. The church contains some elegant marble monuments to the families of Hoody and Welch, former proprietors of the manor: it has been recently repewed and beautified, and a small vestry-room has been added. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans, and a school is supported by subscription.

ALVERSTOKE (St. MARY), a parish, comprising the sea-port town of Gosport, the watering-place called Anglesey, and the chapelry of Forton, in the liberty of ALVERSTOKE and GOSPORT, Fareham and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; and containing 13,510 inhabitants. This place is situated on the shore of Alverstokey bay. According to an ancient chronicle, Henry de Blois, Bishop of Winchester, and brother of King Stephen, on his return from Normandy, being overtaken by a storm in the bay, between the Isle of Wight and Alverstokey, made a solemn vow to build a church on the spot where he should first land in safety; and, having landed at this place, is said to have erected the parish church, in fulfilment of his vow, about the year 1130. The parish is of considerable extent: the scenery is varied, and in the western part of the parish are several small rural villages which have a pleasing aspect, and contrast finely with the more stately edifices in other parts of it. The village of Alverstokey is pleasantly situated about half a mile from the bay, and within a quarter of a mile from the elegant new buildings of Anglesey. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1250, and the glebe consists of 45 acres. The church, which occupies a site in the village beautifully secluded by trees, has undergone many changes since its foundation, and is now in a state of renovation, which has been effected with a judicious regard to its original character, under the superintendence of the late incumbent. There are two chapels in the parish; one at Gosport, consecrated in 1696, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity; and one at Forton, in honour of St. John the Evangelist, an elegant edifice, containing 1200 sittings, of which 700 are free, completed at an expense of £3775, by subscription, aided by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, and consecrated in April 1831. Attached to this chapel, of which the living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £114, in the patronage of the Rector, is a small plot of glebe; and a district has been assigned to it, containing 2300 inhabitants. It has an organ, which belonged to the celebrated Handel, and was formerly in the Roman Catholic chapel at Winchester, but was purchased, some years ago, by the Rev. H. A. Veck. There are two national schools, and one for the children of Roman Catholics.

ALVERTHORPE, a township, comprising the ecclesiastical districts of Alverthorpe and Thornes, in the parish and union of WAKEFIELD, Lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Wakefield; containing 5930 inhabitants. This township, including Westgate Common, a suburb of the borough of Wakefield, comprises by computation 3000 acres, chiefly the property of the Earl of Cardigan, who is lord of the manor of Alverthorpe. The land is rich and fertile, and in good cultivation; the surface is varied, and the prevailing scenery pleasingly diversified; the substratum abounds with coal of good quality, and several mines are in operation. Alverthorpe Hall, the seat of Francis Maude, Esq., is a handsome residence, and throughout the township are numerous pleasing villas, of which the principal are Lupset Hall, the residence of Daniel Gaskell, Esq., and Homefield House, the seat of Thomas Foljambe, Esq. The village of Alverthorpe is pleasantly situated within a mile of Wakefield, and the township includes also the village of Thornes, and the hamlets of Fanshaw, Kirkham Gate, and Silcoates. The population is chiefly employed in the spinning of woollen and worsted yarn, and in the manufacture of woollen cloth and worsted stuffs, for which there are several mills and large factories; the manufacture of rope and twine is also carried on to a considerable extent. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, was erected in 1826, at an expense of £8000, chiefly by grant of the Parliamentary Commissioners: it is a handsome structure, in the early English style, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, and contains 1600 sittings, of which 800 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, at present in the gift of the Vicar of Wakefield; the income, previously £72, was augmented in 1841 with £78 per annum by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and a neat residence for the minister was built in 1842. The small tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an act of inclosure, in 1793. A church has been also erected at Thornes, which is noticed in the article under that head; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school for girls is supported by Benjamin Gaskell, Esq., of Thornes, who also contributes to the support of an infant school, and pays £5 per annum for the instruction of nine children in the national school. The Northern Congregational school at Silcoates House was instituted in 1830, for the board and education of the sons of ministers of the Independent denomination of dissenters; and there are three Sunday schools in connexion with the Established Church. John Forster, Esq., bequeathed to the poor of the parish three cottages and some land, situated here, to which an addition was made at the inclosure, the whole producing £51 per annum, which is annually distributed at Christmas.

ALVERTON, a hamlet, in the parish of KILVINGTON, union of NEWARK, S. division of the wapentake of NEWARK and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Newark; containing 26 inhabitants.

ALVESCOTT, a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (S. S. E.) from Burford; comprising 2021*a.* 29*p.*, and containing 357 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 16. 8.; net income, £371; patron, Rev. Thomas Neate. All the tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1796. The church is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave with semi-transpts, a massive western tower, and a chancel, which has been rebuilt, and contains some mural monuments. Goddard Carter, Esq., in 1723, left a rent-charge of £10, directing one-half to be applied in educating poor children, and the remainder in apprenticing them.

ALVEDISTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of TISBURY, hundred of CHALK, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Shaftesbury; containing 263 inhabitants. This parish takes its name from Aileva, who held lands here at the time of the Norman survey: it contains about 2733 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Broad-Chalk consolidated, and united to the vicarage of Bower-Chalk; patrons and impropiators, the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church has a font of great antiquity, and in one of the aisles are four handsome mural monuments of marble to the memory of the Wyndham family.

ALVESTON (ST. HELEN), a parish, in the union of THORNBURY, partly in the Lower, but chiefly in the Upper, division of the hundred of LANGLEY and SWINEHEAD, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (S. by E.) from Thornbury; containing 841 inhabitants. This parish, which lies on the road from Bristol to Birmingham, comprises by computation 2600 acres, including some waste lands, for the inclosure of which an act was passed in 1836: the land is almost entirely pasture, and is thickly clothed with elm, beech, and oak. The scenery is grand, and the parish being situated on a high ridge, commands extensive views of the Severn and surrounding country. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Olveston: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £319, and the glebe comprises 25 acres. The church, situated at some distance from the village, is a small edifice in the later English style, with a low square embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans, and a national school was established in 1835. There are some remains of a Roman encampment in a part of the parish called the Abbey.

ALVESTON (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-ON-AVON, Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, W. division of the county of WARWICK, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Stratford; containing 793 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Avon, and contains by measurement 2700 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £220; patron, Rector of Hampton-Lucy; impropiator, George Lucy, Esq. The glebe consists of 90 acres. The church was rebuilt in 1839, at an expense of about £2300, chiefly raised by subscription. A school is supported.

ALVETON, or ALTON (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of CHEADLE, S. division of the hundred of TOMMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Cheadle; comprising the townships of Alton, Cotton, Denston, and Farley, and containing 2390 inhabitants, of whom 1168 are in Alton township. The extensive manor of Alton became the property of John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, by his marriage with the heiress of the Furnival family, and has remained with his descendants to the present time. The living, before the Reformation, was connected with the abbey of Croxden, to which the benefice was attached by Bertram de Verdon of Alton Castle, in 1176, after he founded the abbey. The ruins of the castle still remain, and are visible on the summit of a rock 300 feet above the bed of the Churnet: on the opposite bank of the river are the magnificent mansion and park of the Earl of Shrewsbury. The parish contains between 7000 and 8000 acres: there are limestone quarries in the township of Cotton, and some copper-mines at Ribden. The Uttoxeter branch of the Trent and Mersey canal runs through the parish, its course being for some miles parallel with that of the Churnet, over which it is carried by means of an aqueduct. The village is romantically situated on the banks of the river, which here flows through a fertile vale; on the summit of an adjacent eminence is a lofty tower, commanding extensive and varied prospects. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 5½.; net income, £151; patron, Earl of Shrewsbury, to whom and others the impropriation belongs: the glebe comprises 5 acres. The church, which displays a mixture of the Norman and English styles, was repaired and enlarged in 1831. There is a chapel at Cotton. The Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship; and a Roman Catholic chapel and school have been recently erected at Alton-Towers by the Earl. Anthony Wall, in 1721, founded and endowed a school for twelve boys, of which the endowment is £11. 15. per annum; and there are also three other schools. At Bunbury, in the parish, are the remains of a very extensive fortress, of an irregular form, ascribed to Ceolred, King of Mercia, about 715: it is defended on three sides by a double vallum, and on the fourth by a steep declivity.

ALVINGHAM (St. ADELWOLD), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. E.) from Louth; containing 313 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1600 acres, and is intersected by the Louth navigation. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Cockerington, St. Mary, annexed, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln, who, as appropriator, owns about 400 acres of land, allotted in lieu of tithes at the inclosure in 1819, and from the produce of which the incumbent's stipend of £58 per annum is paid. The church was rebuilt in 1826, and is a neat and commodious building, situated in the same churchyard as that of Cockerington, St. Mary. A national school has been just built. A priory of Gilbertine nuns and canons, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Adelwold, was founded here in the reign of Henry II., which, at the dissolution, was valued at £141. 15. per annum.

ALVINGTON, a parish, in the hundred of BLEDSL-LOE, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5½ miles (N. E.) from Chepstow; containing 340 inhabitants, and comprising by estimation 1550 acres. The abbot of Llantony, previously to the Reformation, exercised capital jurisdiction in this manor, which subsequently passed through various hands to the Highfords, of Dixton, from whose coheir it was purchased by the father-in-law of the present proprietor, who resides at Clanna House, in the parish. The road from Gloucester to Chepstow runs through Alvington, and the river Severn flows on the east. The living is consolidated with the rectory of Wollaston.

ALVINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of BRIMPTON, union of YEOVIL, hundred of STONE, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 65 inhabitants.

ALVINGTON, WEST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of STANBOROUGH, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 1 mile (W. S. W.) from Kingsbridge; containing 998 inhabitants. It comprises 3676 acres; the surface is very hilly, and the soil chiefly arable, and a large quantity of peculiarly fine cider is made. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of South Huish, Malborough, and South Milton annexed, valued in the king's books at £62. 16. 10½.; net income, £685; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The glebe comprises 2 acres here, and 1½ in each of the parishes of Malborough and South Milton. The church contains some good screen-work in carved oak, an ancient stone font, and a beautiful monument to some member of the Bastard family, whose ancient seat has been converted into a farm-house.

ALWALTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of PETERBOROUGH, hundred of NORMANCROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Stilton; containing 329 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Nene, which here separates the counties of Huntingdon and Northampton, and on the great north road, near its intersection with the road from Lynn to Northampton; it comprises 910*a.* 3*r.* 38*p.*, of which the soil is fertile, and the surface beautifully varied. On the banks of the Nene are found great blocks of grey fossil stone, susceptible of a very high polish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 5. 10., and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough: the tithes were commuted for 197 acres of land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1805. The church exhibits in the body of the building a singular combination of Norman and early English architecture: it has been new roofed in appropriate style, and the chancel restored to its pristine elegance by the rector, who has also built a handsome parsonage-house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Dr. Timothy Neve, Archdeacon of Huntingdon, was buried here in 1757.

ALWINGTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of BIDEFORD, hundred of SHEBBEAR, Great Torrington and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bideford; containing, with the hamlets of Fairy Cross, Ford, and Woodtown, 392 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 2603 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 4. 9½., and in the gift of the Rev. I. T. Pine Coffin: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £241, and there are 60 acres of glebe. In the church, over the door of the chancel, is a curious ancient monument to a member of the Coffin family. In Yeo Vale, so called from the river Yeo, which runs through it, are the remains of a chapel. There is a parochial school; also a place of worship for Wesleyans; and almshouses for three poor persons, endowed in 1696 by R. Coffin, Esq.

ALWOODLEY, a township, in the parish of HAREWOOD, Upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 5½ miles (N.) from Leeds; containing 281 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1250 acres, chiefly the property of G. L. Fox, Esq.; the ancient hall, formerly the seat of Sir Gervase Clifton, who died in 1666, is now a farm-house. The soil is fertile, and the lands are generally in good cultivation; the surface is undulated, and the surrounding scenery richly diversified. The township consists principally of irregularly built and widely detached houses.

AMASTON, with ROWTON, a township, in the parish of ALBERBURY, union of ATCHAM, hundred of FORD, S. division of SALOP.

AMBERLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of MARDEN, hundred of BROXASH, union and county of HEREFORD;

5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Hereford; containing 32 inhabitants, and comprising 378 acres.

AMBERLEY, a parish, in the hundred of WEST EASWRITH, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Arundel; containing, with Rackham hamlet, 722 inhabitants. The bishops of Chichester had a residence here, erected at the close of the fourteenth century by Bishop Rede, and which is said to have been plundered and dismantled in the parliamentary war by the army under Waller: the gateway is perfect, and, with other remains, has a bold and striking appearance in the views of the surrounding district. The parish comprises by measurement 2878 acres, and is bounded on the west by the river Arun: the village occupies an elevated situation on a sandstone rock, and towards the south rises a range of steep downs, above which is a large knoll called Amberley Mount. The living is a vicarage, with that of Houghton united, valued in the king's books at £7. 5. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £166; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Chichester. The tithes were commuted in 1813 for 117 acres of land in this parish, and 16 in that of Angmering. The church has a nave of Norman, and a chancel of early English, architecture, separated by a Norman arch much enriched.

AMBERSHAM, NORTH, a tything, in the parish of STEEP, union of MIDHURST, hundred of EAST MEON, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, though locally in the hundred of EASEBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Midhurst; containing 133 inhabitants.

AMBERSHAM, SOUTH, a tything, in the parish of STEEP, union of MIDHURST, hundred of EAST MEON, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, though locally in the hundred of EASEBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Midhurst; containing 189 inhabitants.

AMBLE, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9 miles (S. E.) from Alnwick; containing 724 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence near the mouth of the river Coquet, where a harbour has been formed under an act obtained in 1838, by which the value both of the soil and the minerals here has been greatly enhanced. The place was anciently of much greater importance, as is evident from the discovery of circular foundations of houses, of unhewn and uncemented stones of British origin, and of Roman coins: a paved causeway was also discovered, a few years since, extending in a direction towards the old bed of the Coquet. There are valuable and extensive mines of coal in the township, the produce of which is exported to France and other parts. Through the indefatigable exertions of Thomas Browne, Esq., of Amble House, the Trinity Board have been induced to build a light-house on Coquet Island, about two miles from the shore, at a cost of £14,000: it is of very great service, and is kept by a brother of Grace Darling. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges, amounting to £211. 8. 4., of which £170. 19. 6. are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, and £46. 8. 10. to the vicar of the parish. On Coquet Island was a monastery, subordinate to Tynemouth priory, near the ruins of which several human bones were found some time since.

AMBLECOAT, a hamlet, in the parish of OLD SWINFORD, union of STOURBRIDGE, S. division of the hundred of SEISDON and of the county of STAFFORD, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Stourbridge; containing 1623 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £220. A school, in which are about 150 boys and 85 girls, is supported by subscription.

AMBLESIDE, a market-town and parochial chapelry, partly in the parish of WINDERMERE, but chiefly in that of GRASMERE, KENDAL ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 25 miles (W. S. W.) from Appleby, and 274 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 1281 inhabitants. The name, anciently written Hamelside, is probably derived from the Saxon Hamol, signifying a sheltered habitation. The town is situated near the site of a Roman station of considerable extent, supposed by Horsley to have been the Dictis of the Notitia: the earth-works of the fortress remain, and various Roman relics and foundations of buildings have been discovered. It stands on the acclivity of a steep eminence, near the northern extremity of the lake Windermere, in a district pre-eminently distinguished for the beauty of its scenery, and consists chiefly of one street, lighted with oil, but not paved: the houses, though detached and irregular, are well built. Tourists frequently make this their headquarters, as many delightful excursions may be taken hence, to view the sublimely romantic and richly varied scenery of the lake district. There are a few manufactories for linsey-woolsey; and a peculiar kind of marble, of a dusky green colour, veined with white, is found in the vicinity. The market, granted in 1650 to the celebrated Countess of Pembroke, is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on Whit-Wednesday and the 13th and 29th of Oct., to which a court of pie-poudre is attached: the market-house was built about the year 1796, on the site of the former. The inhabitants received a charter in the reign of Charles II., under the authority of which they elect a mayor annually on Christmas-eve; but he does not possess magisterial authority, the town being entirely within the jurisdiction of the county justices, who hold a petty-session monthly. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £80; it is in the patronage of Lady Fleming, and the impropriation belongs to Sir R. Fleming, Bart. A rent-charge of £27, of which £14 are payable by Ambleside below Stock, and £13 by Ambleside above Stock, has been awarded to the rector of Windermere, as a commutation in lieu of tithes. The chapel, situated in that part of the town which is in the parish of Grasmere, was made parochial by the Bishop of Chester in 1675, and was rebuilt in 1812. The free grammar school was founded and endowed by John Kelsick, in 1721; the annual income is about £127. At the upper extremity of the town is a beautiful waterfall called Stockgill Force. Bernard Gilpin, surnamed "The Northern Apostle," was born at Kentmere, and Judge Wilson at Troutbeck, near the town.

AMBROSDEN (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bicester; comprising the chapelries of Arncott and Blackthorn, and containing 892 inhabitants, of whom 181 are in the hamlet of Ambrosden. This place is supposed by Bishop Kennet, who was formerly incumbent of the parish, to have derived its name from Ambrosius Aurelius, the celebrated British chief, who encamped here during the siege of Alchester by the Saxons. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 17.; net income, £228; patron, Sir G. O. P. Turner, Bart.; appropriator, Bishop of Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1814. The church is stated to have been built in the latter part of the reign of Edward I., on the site of the original Saxon, or Norman, edifice, the northern entrance to which still remains; it is in the early English style, with an embattled tower, on the east and west fronts of which are some curious devices in plaster, and among the rest one of the paschal lamb.

AMCOTTS, a chapelry, in the parish of ALTHORP, union of THORNE, W. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Glandford-Bridge; containing 417 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. The tithes were partially commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1779; and the impropriate tithes have been recently commuted for a rent-charge of £5. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

AMERSHAM, or AGMONDESHAM (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, partly in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, and partly in the hundred of DACORUM, in a detached portion of the county of HERTFORD, 33 miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and 25 $\frac{3}{4}$ (W. N. W.) from London; containing 3645 inhabitants. The town is situated in a pleasant valley, through which flows the Misburne, a stream falling into the Colne near Uxbridge: it is surrounded by wood-crowned hills, and consists principally of one street, well paved: there is a plentiful supply of water. In the reign of Henry V. several of the inhabitants were burnt at the stake for professing the tenets of the Lollards; and in that of Mary, many of them suffered a similar fate: a spot of ground, occupying a circle of about 24 feet, is pointed out on the east side of the town as the place on which they suffered, and on which, it was supposed, no vegetation could be matured; but, in 1842, the ground was opened by means of a subscription fund, and found to contain nothing but flints, which served as a sort of drainage, and impeded culture. A manufactory for silk crape has been for some time established, and many females are employed in the making of lace and straw-plat; wooden chairs are also made for exportation. The market is on Tuesday; and fairs are held on Whit-Monday and Sept. 19th. The town was a borough by prescription, and sent burgesses to parliament from the 28th of Edward I. to the 2nd of Edward II., but made no subsequent return until the 21st of James I., from which time it continued to send two members till it was disfranchised by the act of the 2nd of William IV. cap. 45. A constable and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The town-hall, situated in the centre of the town, is a handsome brick edifice resting on piazzas, erected by Sir Wm. Drake: the lower part is appropriated to the market; the upper, which is surmounted by a lantern turret, is used for transacting public business.

The parish contains by measurement 7855 acres of land, in general hilly, and resting upon a sub-soil of chalk, flint, and clay: the hamlet of Coleshill, locally in the county of Hertford, is connected with it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £48. 16. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Thos. Tyrwhitt Drake, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1500, and there are about 123 acres of glebe. The church is a spacious edifice of brick coated with stucco; the chancel and an adjoining mausoleum contain several interesting monuments, exhibiting some beautiful specimens of ancient and modern sculpture, some of which are by the hand of Bacon. There are two places of worship for Baptists, and one for the Society of Friends. The free grammar school was instituted by Dr. Robert Chaloner, canon of Windsor, who, by his will dated June 20th, 1620, endowed it with £20 per annum, since augmented to more than £80; and in an apartment adjoining the grammar schoolroom is a writing-school, established in 1699, by Lord Cheyne, and endowed with a rent-charge of £20, free for the instruction in writing and arithmetic of boys from the parishes of Amersham and Chesham-Bois, who pay for learning to read. An almshouse for six aged widows was founded by Sir Wm. Drake, Bart., and endowed by him in 1667: the income, arising from land and property in the funds, was augmented with a bequest of £300 by Wm. Drake, jun., in 1796, and now amounts to about £150. A fund of £87 per annum, arising from land and property in the three per cents., is applied, under the will of William Tohill, of Shardeloes, in apprenticing children, with sums of £15 or £20 each; and there are divers sums for distribution among the poor. The union of Amersham comprises 9 parishes or places in the county of Berks, and 1 in that of Herts, and contains a population of 18,207: the workhouse is a good building in the Elizabethan style of architecture, erected at a cost of nearly £7000; it stands on the road leading to Wycombe, and will accommodate 350 paupers.

AMERTON, a township, in the parish and union of STOWE, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of STAFFORDSHIRE; containing 120 inhabitants.

AMESBURY (St. Mary and St. Melorius), a town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of AMESBURY, S. division of WILTS, 7 miles (N.) from Salisbury, and 78 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 1171 inhabitants. This place was anciently called Ambresbury, and that name is probably derived, not from Aurelius Ambrosius, as hitherto generally supposed, but from the combined appellations of Stonehenge and an ancient camp, both situate in the parish and near the town; viz. Ambres, holy or anointed stones, and burg, or bury, a camp; the holy stones near the camp. A monastery for 300 monks is stated to have been founded here by Ambruis, a British monk, or, more probably, by Ambrosius, which was destroyed by Gurthurm, or Gurmundus, a Saxon chief. After the conversion of the Saxons to Christianity, a synod was held at Amesbury, in the reign of King Edgar, to adjust the differences that existed between the regular and the secular clergy, which had been previously discussed in an assembly held at Calne. About 980, Elfrida, widow of the same king, founded here a nunnery of the Benedictine order, which she dedicated to St. Mary and St. Melorius, a Cornish saint, in expiation, it is supposed, of the murder of Edward, her step-son, at Corfe Castle. In 1177, the abbess and nuns were expelled, on the ground of incontinence; and Henry II. made it a cell to the foreign abbey of Fontevrault. Queen Eleanor, widow of Henry III., assumed the veil in this convent, where she died in 1291. It was at length made denizen; and at the dissolution its revenue was valued at £558. 10. 2. The manor and principal estates of Amesbury originally appertained to the abbey, and at the Reformation were granted to the Lord Protector Somerset, and were carried by the marriage of a female descendant into the family of Bruce, subsequently Earls of Amesbury; they afterwards passed by sale to Lord Carlton, who left them by will to the Duke of Queensbury, husband to the celebrated duchess; and on the death of the last duke, they descended by entail to the late Lord Douglas of Bothwell Castle, by whom they were sold to Sir Edmund Antrobus, at whose decease they passed to his nephew, the present baronet. A mansion was built by the Somerset family nearly on the site of the ancient abbey; it has nearly been taken down by Sir Edmund Antrobus, who is replacing it by an extensive and elegant edifice, judiciously preserving the magnificent saloon of the former building. The town is situated in a valley on the banks of the Avon, and consists of two streets; it is neither paved nor lighted, but is well supplied with water. The market, which was on Friday, has been discontinued: fairs are held on May 17th, June 21st, and December 21st.

The parish comprises 5600 acres; the surface is undulated, and the soil a gravelly loam upon a chalky subsoil. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Windsor, with a net income of £141: about 5 acres of land in the parish of Hungerford, purchased by Queen Anne's Bounty, belong to it. The church, originally of Norman architecture, has recently undergone thorough repair; it is warmed by two very handsome stoves, which cost £189, and were presented by Sir Edmund Antrobus. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1677, John Rose bequeathed property for the establishment of a superior and a secondary school, the former for boys, and the latter for boys and girls: the endowment consists of a farm in the parish of Ditchett, county of Somerset, comprising 52½ acres, and of a messuage and garden at Amesbury, in the rent-free occupation of the master. Here is also a school founded under the will of Mr. Henry Spratt, in 1708, and endowed with land now let for £50 per annum; and other schools are supported by subscription. The poor law union of Amesbury comprises 23 parishes or places, and contains a population of 7698. To the west of the river is an ancient encampment, with a vallum and deep fosse, occupying an area of forty acres, commonly attributed to Vespasian, but undoubtedly of British origin: the road from Amesbury to Warminster is cut through its rampart. The poet Gay passed much of his time at Amesbury, under the roof of his generous patrons, the Duke and Duchess of Queensbury.

AMOTHERBY, a chapelry, in the parish of APPLETON-LE-STREET, union of MALTON, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from New Malton; containing 239 inhabitants. This chapelry, which is bounded on the north by the river Rye, is situated on the road from Malton to Kirkby Moorside; the surface is undulated, and the scenery highly picturesque; the soil in the upland parts is rich, and in the valleys inferior; limestone of fine quality is extensively quarried. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1776. There is a small chapel of ease, and a school is endowed with 20 acres of land, producing £16 per annum.

AMPFIELD, or ANFIELD, a hamlet, in the parish and union of HURSLEY, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Fawley and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Romsey. This pleasant village is situated on the high road to Winchester, and is inhabited by a considerable rural population. A district church has been erected, chiefly at the expense of William Heathcote, Esq.

AMPLEFORTH (St. HILDA), a parish, in the union of HELMSLEY, partly in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, and partly in that of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK; containing 446 inhabitants, of whom 207 are in the township of Ampleforth, 4½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Helmsley. The parish, anciently Ampleford, comprises by measurement 2270 acres. The village, which is long, and pleasantly situated, extends itself into the three townships of Ampleforth St. Peter, Ampleforth Birdforth, and Oswaldkirk-Quarter; it lies at the base of the hill which runs up to Hamilton, and on the south commands a beautiful view of the valley of De Mobrai, embracing on the south-east Gilling Castle, and on the south-west Newborough park, which give to the vicinity a rich and diversified appearance. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 6. 5½; net income, £261; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Ampleforth in the Cathedral of York. By an inclosure act in 1806, 199 acres were allotted in lieu of the vicarial tithes of the parish, and of all tithes for the township of Ampleforth. The church is an ancient structure, with a Norman doorway, beautifully carved and flowered. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. At Oswaldkirk-Quarter is situated Ampleforth College, a Roman Catholic establishment, founded in 1802 by the members of the college of Dieulouard, near Pont-à-Mousson, in Lorraine, whose property was confiscated in the French revolution; the students, about fifty in number, are instructed in the ancient and modern languages, mathematics, &c. The establishment, which has been several times enlarged, is situated in the midst of extensive pleasure-grounds, and commands some beautiful views of the surrounding country. National schools, for the instruction of children of both sexes, have been established. Half a mile north of the village are the remains of a Roman camp; and near it was discovered in March, 1808, by the Rev. Robert Nixon, a barrow, formed by a large circle of stones about ten feet in diameter, in which an urn and several ancient coins were found.

AMPNEY, or ASHBROOK (St. MARY THE VIRGIN), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3½ miles (E.) from Cirencester; containing 121 inhabitants. It is situated on the southern side of the road from Fairford to Cirencester, and has good quarries of limestone for building. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £72, derived from 57 acres of land; patron and impropiator, Colonel Beach. The church stands at a distance from the village, and is a small structure.

AMPNEY, or EASINGTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Cirencester; containing 196 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the London road, is of small extent, comprising by measurement 538 acres; quarries of stone are slightly worked for mending the roads, and for fences, and some tiles are made here. There is a canal to Cirencester. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £90; patron, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. On Rambury farm are the remains of a Roman camp, called Rambury Ring.

AMPNEY-CRUCIS (THE HOLY ROAD), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Cirencester; containing, with the hamlet of Hilcot End, 591 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 3088 acres; the soil is various, in some parts of very inferior quality, and in others tolerably fertile; stone suitable for repairing the roads is quarried. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 9. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £84; impropiator, G. G. Blackwell, Esq. The church has an embattled tower, and some portions of ancient architecture, among which is a handsome Norman arch, dividing the nave from the chancel. Here is a charity school, endowed, in 1719, by Robert Pleydell, Esq., with a rent-charge of £80.

AMPNEY, DOWN (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Fairford; containing 425 inhabitants. A portion of this parish lies in the northern division of the adjoining county of Wilts, and in the hundred of Highworth. The manor-house, a very interesting specimen of ancient architecture, was formerly one of the many seats of the Hungerford family, and is situated precisely on the border line of the two shires. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 5. 8.; net income, £116; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church was built about the year 1260, by the Knights Templars, to whom Edward I. granted the living; it is chiefly in the early English style, with a tower surmounted by a spire. A school is wholly supported by Lady Caroline Elliott, who also contributes to the maintenance of an infants' school.

AMPORT (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUDGERSHALL, hundred of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Andover; containing, with the tythings of East Cholderton and Sarson, 771 inhabitants, and comprising 3594 acres. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, with Appleshaw annexed, and valued in the king's books at £25. 7. 11.; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £830, and there are 70 acres of glebe. Pursuant to the will of the Rev. Thomas Sheppard, D.D., dated in 1812, a school, and an almshouse consisting of six tenements, were built here by his widow, who has vested in trustees the sum of £9000 for the maintenance of the widows, the schoolmistress's salary, medical attendance, and the repair of the buildings.

AMPTHILL (ST. ANDREW), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of REDBORNESTOKE, county of BEDFORD, 7 miles (S. by W.) from Bedford, and 45 (N. W. by N.) from London; comprising by computation 1882 acres, and containing 201 inhabitants. In the reign of Henry VI., Sir John Cornwall, created Lord Fanhope, built a castle on the manor of Ampthill, which, about the year 1530, came into the possession of the crown, and was made the head of an honour by act of parliament. Catherine of Arragon, while the business of her divorce was pending, resided here, where she received the summons to attend the commissioners at Dunstable, which she refused to obey; and in memory of this, the Earl of Ossory, in 1770, erected on the site of the castle a handsome column, with an appropriate inscription by Horace Walpole, Earl of Orford. The modern seat is chiefly remarkable for the number of very ancient oaks which ornament the park. The town, pleasantly situated between two hills, is irregularly built, paved with pebbles, and amply supplied with water; it has been of late considerably improved by the removal of old buildings, and the erection of a good market-house. The market is on Thursday; and fairs take place on the 4th of May and 30th of November, for cattle. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions for the hundred at this town; and a court for the honour of Ampthill is held in the moot-house, an ancient building, under the lord high steward, at which constables and other officers are appointed.

The LIVING is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Crown, with a net income of £330: the tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1806. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, in the decorated and later English styles, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre. There are places of worship for Independents, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyans. A charity school was endowed by Mrs. Sarah Emery, in 1691, with lands producing £30 per annum, half of which is given to the parish of Meppershall. There is a feoffee charity of about £100 per annum, derived from land and houses, for the benefit of the necessitous and industrious poor; and about a quarter of a mile from the town is an hospital, founded by John Cross, in 1690, which affords a comfortable asylum for nine men and four women, who each receive about £20 per year, with bedding, coal, &c. The interest arising from a legacy of £700, left by Mr. Arthur Whichelner, in 1687, for apprenticing children, is shared by this parish conjointly with those of Maulden, Milbrook, and Ridgement. The union of Ampthill comprises 19 parishes or places, and contains a population of 15,681.

AMPTON (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of THEDWESTRY, W. division of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 147 inhabitants. In this parish, which comprises 736a. 3r. 4p., is the seat of Lord Calthorpe, scarcely surpassed for beauty of situation by any mansion or grounds in Suffolk. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 2. 1., and in the gift of his lordship: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £120, and the glebe consists of 20 acres. Calthorpe's school, adjoining the churchyard, was founded and endowed in 1705, by James Calthorpe, Esq., and has property in land consisting of about 430 acres, and yielding a rental of £384; in addition to which Henry Edwards, in 1715, bequeathed £100, with which, and other accumulations, £1017 three per cent. consols was purchased, paying a dividend of £30. A school for girls, and an infants' school, are chiefly supported by Lord Calthorpe; and on Ampton green is an almshouse for four unmarried women, founded under the will of Mrs. Dorothy Calthorpe, dated 1693, and endowed with £700 Old South Sea Annuities.

AMWELL, GREAT (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WARE, hundred and county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Ware; containing 1545 inhabitants. The parish contains 2443a. 1r. 12p., situated between the river Lea and the road from Cambridge to London; and is supposed to take its name from "Emma's Well," which is now absorbed by the New River, which runs through, and greatly contributes to ornament the place. The village of Amwell, particularly that part of it adjacent to the church, is one of the most beautiful in the county; and within the limits of the parish is situated the East India College, founded in 1806, for the education of youths intended for the civil service of the company, and which contains accommodation for 105 students, who are superintended by a principal and several professors. A pleasure fair is held on Whit-Monday. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; patron, Rev. Mordaunt Barnard; impropiator, E. F. Whittingstall, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £418. 11. 6., and the vicarial for £232; the glebe consists of 35 acres, with a house in a fine situation, built in 1840. The chancel of the church is separated from the nave by three very ancient arches, supposed to be Saxon. Hoddesdon chapel, a handsome brick edifice, is in the parish. There is a national school for girls, which was endowed, about 1820, by Mrs. E. Jones, with £40 per annum; there is also a national school for boys; and another for boys and girls is supported by subscription. The remains of a Roman encampment are visible between the church and the vicarage-house. Great Amwell has been the residence of some celebrated literary characters, among whom were Izaak Walton, the noted angler; Mr. Scott, author of several poems and tracts; and Hoole, the distinguished translator of Tasso, and biographer of Mr. Scott. The remains of Warner, the historian, were interred in the churchyard.

AMWELL, LITTLE, a liberty, in the parish of ALL SAINTS, HERTFORD, union, hundred, and county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Ware; containing 461 inhabitants. Here is a chapel of ease to the vicarage of All Saints. The New River, which supplies the metropolis with water, has its source in a spring that rises in this liberty, called Emma's Well.

ANCASTER (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Grantham, on the road to Sleaford; containing, with the hamlets of West Willoughby and Sudbrook, 530 inhabitants. This place occupies the site of a Roman station on the line of the ancient Ermin-street, which Horsley conjectured to have been Causennæ, but the name of which has not been satisfactorily ascertained: it was formerly of much greater extent than it is at present, and various coins, foundations of buildings, vaults, and other relics of the Romans, have been discovered. During the civil war of the seventeenth century, the parliamentary forces were defeated here by the royalists, under the command of Col. Cavendish. The parish comprises about 3000 acres, of which 2780 are arable, 200 pasture, and 14 woodland; the soil is light, and the surface well wooded. The celebrated "Ancaster" quarries (which are really in the adjoining parish of Wilsford) yield beautiful building-stone. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. Mr. Warren; net income, £151, arising from 120 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient and handsome building, with a tower surmounted with a tall slender spire; the arches on the north side of the nave are of Norman, and those on the south of early English, architecture; the font is singularly elegant. There is a place of worship for a congregation of Wesleyan Methodists. Ancaster formerly gave the title of Duke to the family of Bertie.

ANCROFT, a parochial chapelry, in the union of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, ISLANDSHIRE, county of DURHAM, locally to the north of Northumberland (with the northern division of which it is connected for the purpose of parliamentary election), 6 miles (S.) of the town of Berwick, and containing 1670 inhabitants, of whom 491 are in the township. This place is situated in rich and pleasant ground, and comprises the villages of Ancroft, Cheswick, Haggerston, Scremerston, and Greenses, of which the first appears, from the numerous foundations of houses that have been discovered in the adjoining fields, to have been formerly of much greater extent than it is at present. The parish comprises 9622 statute acres, mostly arable, and is rich in mineral produce. Limestone is very abundant, and is quarried to a great extent for the supply of the neighbouring districts, and is also sent to Scotland; freestone and coal are likewise wrought in considerable quantities. The great north road from London to Edinburgh passes through the parish. The surrounding scenery is finely diversified, and enlivened with some handsome seats, among which is Ladythorn, in the village of Cheswick, occupying an elevated situation, and commanding a fine view of Holy Island, the Farn islands, the coast from Bambrough Castle to Berwick, and the Cheviot hills in the distance. Haggerston Castle, the residence of Lady Stanley, is an old family mansion, built on the site of a more ancient castle, which was burnt down in 1618, with the exception of one of the towers, still remaining, in which Edward II., in 1311, received homage of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, for the earldom of Lincoln: the present house, which has received several additions within the last century, is beautifully situated in an extensive park, ornamented with fine groves and thriving plantations; in the grounds and near the house is the domestic chapel. There is a large colliery at Scremerston, the village of which was destroyed by the Scots in 1386, but was soon afterwards rebuilt. The Scremerston estate belonged to the Earl of Derwentwater, on whose attainder it was forfeited to the crown, and now forms part of the possessions of Greenwich Hospital: the tithes of this property have been commuted for a rent-charge of £965. 2. 8.

The living of Ancroft is a perpetual curacy; net income, £131; patrons and appropriators, Dean and

Chapter of Durham. The church, a Norman structure, originally a chapel of ease to Holy Island, but now parochial, was enlarged in 1836, at an expense of £550, raised by subscription: the tower was so constructed that it served as a place of residence for the curate, and afforded him a protection from the Scottish marauders; it was, until lately, roofless, and an ash-tree, which had its root in the vaulted floor of the first story, spread over its battlements. At Haggerston is a Roman Catholic chapel; also a school, endowed with £10 yearly, and the master of which has a house rent-free. At Ancroft is a school in connexion with the National Society: the schoolroom and a cottage for residence were erected by Bishop Barrington, Archdeacon Bowyer, and the Dean and Chapter of Durham, in 1825. Sir Thomas Haggerston, who was created a baronet in 1643, and raised a regiment for the service of Charles I., was born at Haggerston.—See SCREMERSTON.

ANDERBY (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Alford; containing 243 inhabitants. The parish of Anderby comprises an area of about 1200 statute acres of land, by computation, and extends to the coast of the North Sea, which bounds it on the east; the village is scattered, and is in the manor of Bilsby, a neighbouring parish. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Cumberworth united, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £548; patrons, President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge. On the inclosure of the parish a fixed money payment of £65. 7., and 8 acres of land, were assigned to the rector of Anderby in lieu of tithes for the portion inclosed. The church is a plain edifice. There is a place of worship for a congregation of Wesleyan Methodists.

ANDERSTON, or ANDERSON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of COOMBS-DITCH, Blandford division of DORSET, 6 miles (S.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 43 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Winterbourne (here a comparatively insignificant stream) comprises by measurement 566 acres, of which 414 are arable, and 152 meadow and pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 19. 1., and in the gift of S. B. Tregonwell, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £120, and there are four acres of glebe. The church is an ancient edifice, and the place of sepulture of the family of the Tregonwells, whose former manor-house, a spacious building in the Elizabethan style, and in which is a chamber hung with decayed tapestry, is now the union workhouse.

ANDERTON, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of NORTHWICH, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by N.) from Northwich; containing 331 inhabitants. It is intersected by the river Weaver, on the northern bank of which there is an almost uninterrupted line of salt-works: the Grand Trunk canal also passes through it.

ANDERTON, a township, in the parish of STAN-DISH, union of CHORLEY, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chorley, on the road from that town to Bolton; containing 339 inhabitants.

ANDOVER (St. Mary), a borough, market-town, and parish, having exclusive jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 26 miles (N. by W.) from Southampton, and 64 (W. S. W.) from London; comprising the hamlets of Charlton, Hatherden, King's

Seal and Arms.

Enham, Little London, Smannell, Wildhern, and Woodhouse, and the chapelry of Foxcote, and containing 5013 inhabitants. Andover, or, according to the charter, seal, and official documents, Andever, is a corruption of the Saxon Andeafara, which signifies the passage of the Ande, denoting the proximity of the town to the small river Ande, or Anton. In the church at this place Anlaf, King of Norway, in 994, received the sacrament of confirmation, under the sponsorship of King Ethelred, promising that he would never more come in a hostile manner to England, which engagement he religiously performed. The town, situated on the border of the Wiltshire downs, and near the edge of an extensive woodland tract, forming the north-west portion of the county, is neat, airy, and well built; it consists principally of three long streets, and is well paved under an act obtained in 1815, lighted with gas, supplied by a company lately formed among the inhabitants, and plentifully supplied with water. The manufacture of silk has, of late, entirely superseded that of shalloons, which was formerly carried on to a great extent; and the construction of a canal from the town, through Stockbridge, to Southampton Water, has materially improved its trade, particularly in corn, malt, and timber, of which last a vast quantity is forwarded from Harewood Forest, for the supply of Portsmouth dockyard. The principal market is on Saturday, and there is a smaller one on Wednesday: the fairs are on Mid-Lent Saturday and Old May-day, for horses, cattle, cheese, and leather; on the 16th of November for sheep, and on the following day for horses, hops, cheese, &c. Three miles west of Andover, and within the out-hundred belonging to the town, is Weyhill, where an annual fair is held, which, originating in a revel anciently kept on the Sunday before Michaelmas-day, has gradually become the largest and best attended in England. It takes place on Oct. 10th and six following days, by charter of Queen Elizabeth, confirmed by Charles II. The first day is noted for the sale of sheep, of which the number sold has frequently exceeded 170,000; on the second the farmers hire their servants; after which hops, cheese, horses (particularly cart colts), cloth, &c., are exposed for sale. An additional fair, principally for sheep, was instituted in 1829, and is held on the 1st of August.

The inhabitants appear to have received charters of INCORPORATION from Henry II. and Richard I., but the oldest now in their possession is one bestowed in the 6th of King John's reign: several others were subsequently granted, and that under which the borough was until recently governed, is dated in the 41st of Elizabeth. By the act of the 5th and 6th of Wm. IV. c. 76, the government is now vested in a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, assisted by a recorder, town-clerk, and other officers: the municipal boundaries are co-extensive with those of the parish, which is about twenty-two miles in circumference, and includes the parish of Knights-Enham and the tything of Foxcote, both locally in this parish. The borough sent representatives to all the parliaments of Edward I., but made no return after the 1st of Edward II. till the 27th of Elizabeth, since which period it has continued to send two members: the right of election was formerly vested in the bailiff and corporation, in number about twenty-four, but was extended by the act of the 2nd of William IV. cap. 45, to the £10 householders; the mayor is the returning officer. Courts of session are held quarterly; courts leet occur at Easter and Michaelmas; and the county magistrates hold a petty-session every Monday for the neighbouring district. The town-hall was erected in 1825, at an expense of £7000, towards defraying which each of the then members for the borough, Sir J. W. Pollen, Bart., and T. A. Smith, Esq., presented £1000: it is a handsome and spacious building of stone, surmounted by a cupola; on the ground-floor is the market-house, over which are a council-room for transacting the business of the corporation, and a hall for holding the quarter-sessions.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 4. 3½; net income, £350; patrons and improvers, Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The church is an ancient building with a fine Norman doorway at the west end; the chancel is separated from the nave by a belfry. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. A grammar school was founded and endowed in 1569, by John Hanson, Esq., whose benefaction was subsequently increased by Richard Kemys, Esq. In 1719, John Pollen, Esq., one of the representatives of the borough, erected a school-house and endowed it with £10 per annum, for twenty children; in 1725, James Sambourne bequeathed £1000 for the instruction of twenty-four children of Hatherden, in the parish; and a national school, for which rooms have been erected, is supported by subscription. An hospital for eight poor men was founded by John Pollen, Esq.; and six unendowed almshouses for women were built with funds bequeathed by Catherine Hanson, who also gave an acre of ground, planted with trees, to be appropriated as a walk for the recreation of the inhabitants. The union of Andover comprises 28 parishes or places in the county of Hants, and 4 in that of Wilts, and contains a population of 16,990. The Roman road from Winchester to Cirencester passed near Andover, and is yet visible in Harewood coppice; and, besides two or three small encampments near the town, there is a large one, about a mile to the south-west, on the summit of Bury hill. Some beautiful specimens of Roman pavement have recently been discovered in the neighbourhood. Andover gives the inferior title of Viscount to the Earl of Suffolk.

ANDWELL, an extra-parochial district, in the union and hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (E.) from Basingstoke; containing 26 inhabitants.

ANGERSLEIGH (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-

DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Taunton; containing 42 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 411 acres, of which the arable and pasture land are in nearly equal portions. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 19. 4½; patron, Rev. Henry Tippetts Tucker: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £98, and there are 18 acres of glebe.

ANGERTON, HIGH, a township, in the parish of HARTBURN, union of MORPETH, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (W.) from Morpeth; containing 75 inhabitants. This place is noticed in the year 1262 as the residence of the Baroness Theophania, widow of Hugh de Bolbeck, who was sheriff of Northumberland, governor of several castles, and held other offices of importance: from the Bolbecks both High and Low Angerton went in regular descent to the Howards, with whom they continued until within the last few years. The township extends to the village of Hartburn, and comprises 1197 acres of rich loamy soil, whereof 550 are arable, 571 pasture, and the remainder woodland. The vicar of Hartburn receives £125. 9. for the tithes of this place.

ANGERTON, LOW, a township, in the parish of HARTBURN, union of MORPETH, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7½ miles (W. by S.) from Morpeth; containing 64 inhabitants. A branch of the Greys, of Howick, resided here in the 17th century, as tenants under the Earl of Carlisle. It comprises 1075 acres, of which 383 are arable, 646 pasture, and 45½ wood: the river Wansbeck runs through High and Low Angerton, and is bordered by rich pastures, and both townships are the property of Bradford Atkinson, Esq., who has just completed a handsome mansion in the Elizabethan style. The village stands on a dry ridge of gravelly alluvium, with the Wansbeck on the north, and flat marshy gullies nearly round the other three sides. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £106, payable to the vicar of Hartburn.

ANGLESEY, a newly-erected watering-place, in the parish of ALVERSTOKE, liberty of ALVERSTOKE and GOSPORT, Fareham and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Gosport. This interesting place occupies an elevated site at a small distance from Stoke's Bay, and nearly opposite to the town of Ryde, in the Isle of Wight. The mild temperature of the climate, the beauty and variety of the surrounding scenery, the facilities for sea-bathing, and the goodness of the roads in its vicinity, have united to render it eligible as a watering-place, and it has already obtained a considerable degree of patronage, which is rapidly increasing. The first building erected was Uxbridge House, the seat of Robert Cruickshank, Esq., the founder of the town, the first stone of which was laid in 1826, by the Earl of Uxbridge, for his father, the Marquess of Anglesey, from whom the place derives its name. The buildings, consisting of a noble terrace and crescent, are situated within a spacious area inclosed with iron-railing, and tastefully laid out and ornamented with shrubs and flowers: within the inclosure is a fine elevated terrace-walk, commanding a view of the Isle of Wight, Stoke's Bay, the Mother Bank, and St. Helen's, with the shipping passing between Spithead and Portsmouth harbour. A commodious hotel was built in 1830, but, being found too small for the accommodation of the increasing number of visitors, a house in the adjoining crescent was added to it: there are also reading-rooms and public baths. The bay affords good anchorage for vessels, and a communication is kept up with Portsmouth harbour, the dock-yard, and the other naval arsenals in the vicinity, by Haslar lake, a branch of the harbour, which flows up within a few yards of the north entrance into the town.

ANGLEZARKE, a township, in the parish of BOLTON, union of CHORLEY, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Chorley; containing 164 inhabitants. Here are several quarries which produce stone in great request for the paving of roads and streets; grey slate is sometimes obtained in small quantities; and some years since an attempt was made to procure lead-ore, but not proving sufficiently profitable, the search was abandoned. In the lead-mines carbonate of barytes was first discovered.

ANGMERING, EAST and WEST (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of PRESTON, (under Gilbert's Act), hundred of POLING, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 5 miles (S. E. by E.) from Arundel; containing 1002 inhabitants. This place comprises East and West Angmering and Bargeham, formerly all distinct parishes, which were consolidated in 1573, since which time they have formed one parish, containing 4229 acres; of these 1933 are arable, 1895 pasture, and the rest underwood. East Angmering had anciently a weekly market, and an annual fair on the 31st of July; but the former has been long discontinued, and the latter has degenerated into a mere pleasure fair. The living comprises the rectory of West Angmering, with the vicarage of East Angmering consolidated, valued jointly in the king's books at £21. 9. 8.; patron, Capt. Pechell; improprator of the vicarage, the Rev. J. Osborne. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £26, the rectorial for £290, and the vicarial for £8. 5. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and was repewed in 1837; it contains several monumental tablets to the Grateric family. A school was founded by William Older, who in 1679 endowed it with a cottage and garden, and 30 acres of land at East Angmering, now producing £90 per annum. On the lands of the church farm on the western borders of the parish a Roman bath was discovered in 1819.

ANGRAM, a township, in the parish of LONG MARSTON, W. division of AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Tadcaster; containing 78 inhabitants. The road from York to Wetherby passes at a short distance on the north. In 1705, Edward Randall bequeathed £200 to the poor of Marston, Hutton, and Angram, the produce of which is applied to the instruction of children.

ANGRAM-GRANGE, a township, in the parish of COXWOLD, union of EASINGWOLD, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Easingwold; comprising 438a. 3r. 24p., and containing 24 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £106, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge.

ANICK, a township, in the parish of St. JOHN-LEE, union of HEXHAM, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from HEX-

HAM; containing 146 inhabitants. It comprises 360 acres, of which 270 are arable, and 90 meadow and pasture; about 9 acres are on the south side of the Tyne, and the remainder, including an island of 13 acres of grass land, are on its northern bank, gradually and beautifully sloping to the river, which sometimes overflows the grounds in its vicinity; the soil is various, but rendered productive by means of artificial manure. The Newcastle and Carlisle railway skirts the township on the south. At Hexham Bridge End is a large brewery. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £104, of which £75. 13. 4. are payable to the impropriators, and £28. 6. 8. to the perpetual curate.

ANICK-GRANGE, a township, in the parish of St. JOHN-LEE, union of HEXHAM, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Hexham; containing 40 inhabitants. It formerly belonged to the monastery of Hexham; and is now the property of T. W. Beaumont, Esq., having a court baron attached. John Harbottle, Esq. resides here.

ANLABY, a township, partly in the parish of HESLE, but chiefly in that of KIRK-ELLA, county of the town of HULL, union of SCULCOATES, E. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Hull; containing 423 inhabitants. This place was anciently a possession of a family of the same name, and in 1100 a great part of the estate passed, by intermarriage with its heiress, into the family of Legard, of whom Sir Thomas D. Legard, of Ganton, in this county, is the present representative. The township comprises about 2020 acres, including the adjacent hamlets of Wolfreton and Trauby, the former of which, consisting of 355 acres, is partly in the township of Kirk-Ella. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ANMER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, 11 miles (N. E.) from Lynn; containing 175 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 0. 1., and in the gift of H. Coldham, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £194, and the glebe consists of 70 acres. The church, which is picturesquely situated in the grounds of the Hall, is chiefly in the decorated and later styles, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a chapel on the south side, and an embattled tower. On opening a tumulus a few years ago in the park, a fine Roman urn, containing bones and ashes, was discovered.

ANN, ABBOTTS.—See ABBOT'S-ANN.

ANNE (ST.), or BRIERS.—See OWRAM, SOUTH.

ANNESLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, N. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 10 miles (N. N. W.) from Nottingham; containing, with the hamlets of Annesley-Woodhouse and Wandesley, and the extra-parochial district of Felly, 315 inhabitants. This parish comprises 3030 acres by measurement: it is intersected by the road from Nottingham to Kirkby Sutton, and is irregular in its surface, which in many parts rises into mountainous ridges. The soil rests on red sandstone, of which there are some quarries supplying an inferior material used chiefly for walls and small houses. The village is picturesquely situated; several of its inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of stockings. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £52; patron and impropiator, J. Musters, Esq. The church is ancient, and has a tower with two bells.

ANNFIELD PLAIN, a colliery village, in the township of KYO, parish and union of LANCHESTER, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 11 miles (S. S. W.) from Gateshead. This place has risen into some importance, and increased its population to 500, in consequence of the opening of a coal-pit, which is now in operation by the Pontop and South Shields Company, and of which the produce is conveyed to the shipping by the Pontop and South Shields railway. Edward Smith, Esq., head viewer of the mine, has a neat residence here. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists; and a day school for the instruction of the pitmen's children is aided by £15 per annum from the company.

ANSLEY (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of ATHERSTONE, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Nuneaton; containing 701 inhabitants. It is intersected by the Oxford canal, and comprises by measurement about 2700 acres, of which 37 are woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £116; impropiator, D. S. Dugdale, Esq. A school in connexion with the National Society has been established. There are some remains of an ancient castle.

ANSLOW, or ANNESLEY, a township, in the parish of ROLLESTON, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Burton; containing 278 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ANSTAY, a hamlet, in the parish of HILTON, union of BLANDFORD, hundred of WHITEWAY, Blandford division of DORSET; containing 200 inhabitants.

ANSTEY (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of FOLESHILL, county of the city of COVENTRY, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Coventry; containing 224 inhabitants. This place is situated at the north-eastern extremity of the liberties of Coventry, and on the road from that city to Wolvey heath, and thence to Leicester; it was originally called Heanstige, from the Saxon hean, high, and stige, a pathway. It comprises by computation 1000 acres, and, with the exception of about 300 acres, is the property of the Dean and Canons of Windsor; the Oxford canal passes through the village. The living is a vicarage, not in charge, with a net income of £63; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the Dean and Canons are appropriators. The church is said to have been founded in the time of Henry I. There is a national school.

ANSTEY, a parish, in the union of BUNTINGFORD, hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, 4 miles (N. E.) from Buntingford; containing 497 inhabitants. It is situated on the road to Cambridge through Barkway, and comprises 2051a. 3r. 11p. A fair is held on July 15th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 13. 4.; net income, £504; patrons, Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge. Cornrents were assigned to the rector under a private act in 1826, as a commutation in lieu of tithes. The church is a cruciform edifice, with a central tower surmounted by a short spire supported by Saxon arches, and is said to have been built from the ruins of a castle erected by Eustace, Earl of Boulogne, soon after the Conquest, traces of which are still visible.

ANSTEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Leicester; containing 838 inhabitants. This place, formerly called Hanstigie, or Anstige, is situated between the forests of Charnwood and Leicester, and at the dissolution of religious houses belonged to the priory of Ulverscroft, with a reserved rent of 3s. 4d., and a pound of pepper, due to the Lord of Groby. The living is consolidated with the rectory of Thurcaston: the church is an ancient edifice. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1376, certain lands, described as "lying in the fields of Anstey in Wolfdale," were granted by John Lenerych, of Leicester; and in 1490 the "Brereyard" was devised by Thomas Martyn and William Haket, and vested in trustees for the repair of the church, bridges, and causeways of this place.

ANSTEY (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of TISBURY, hundred of DUNWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Hindon; containing 329 inhabitants. It comprises 1000 acres; the surface is hilly in some parts, and the soil chalky and sandy. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Lord Arundel; net income, £22. Here was a commandery of the Knights Hospitallers, founded by Walter de Turberville in the reign of John, the revenue of which at the dissolution was £81. 8. 5.; its remains have been converted into a farm-house. Dr. Richard Zouch, an eminent civilian, and judge of the court of admiralty, in the reign of Charles I., was a native of the place.

ANSTEY, EAST (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Dulverton; containing 240 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road to Barnstaple, comprises about 2170 acres; there are some quarries of stone, which are worked for building and other purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11; net income, £180; patron, Rev. A. Lloyd. The church is a plain neat edifice, with a tower; and the churchyard commands an extensive view.

ANSTEY PASTURES, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Leicester; containing 15 inhabitants. This place, formerly parcel of the "Ffrith of Leicestre," and of the ancient duchy of Lancaster, was granted in the 27th of Elizabeth to Thomas Martyn and others, on a lease of 31 years, and after the expiration of that term was purchased, in the 4th of James I., from Robert, Earl of Salisbury, lord treasurer of England, by Robert Martyn, of Anstey, whose descendants have a seat here. The sum of £40 per annum, arising from lands allotted under an inclosure act, is applied to the repairing of the highways and bridges; and £10, and a further sum from Lord Stamford, are annually distributed in bread and linen among the poor.

ANSTEY, WEST (ST. PETROCK), a parish, in the union and hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Dulverton; containing 279 inhabitants. In this parish are some quarries of stone for building. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 16. 8.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £76. 17., and the vicarial for £112; the glebe consists of 37½ acres. The church is a substantial edifice, with a tower, and is in good repair. A school is endowed with £3 per annum; and there is an endowed almshouse for the reception of aged and infirm poor.

ANSTON, NORTH and SOUTH (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of WORKSOP, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 6½ miles (W. N. W.) from Worksop; containing, with the township of Woodsetts, 1102 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Sheffield to Worksop, and comprises about 4000 acres, of which the surface is varied, and the scenery picturesque. Freestone of good quality and of a beautiful colour is extensively wrought, and from the quarries has been raised the stone for the new houses of parliament. The manufacture of malt, starch, and nails is carried on to a moderate extent. The villages, once called Church Anstan, and Chapel Anstan, respectively, are pleasantly situated on opposite eminences, between which flows one of the little streams that unite and form the Ryton; they are exceedingly neat and clean, and the rivulet after leaving their immediate vicinity, passes into a little glen, where stands Wood-mill, possessed of considerable rural beauty. The Chesterfield canal, which bounds the parish on the north, affords facility of conveyance. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Laughton-en-le-Morthen in York Cathedral, with a net income of £84: the tithes for the manor of North Anston were commuted, in 1767, for an allotment of land and a money payment. The church is a neat structure in the later English style, and consists of a nave, side aisles, and chancel, with a square tower surmounted by a small spire; it contains some monuments to the Lizour, Beauchamp, and D'Arcy families, with a finely sculptured figure of a lady bearing an infant in her arms. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. Between the villages is situated an endowed school.

ANTHONY (ST.) in MENEAGE, a parish, in the union of HELSTON, W. division of the hundred of KERRIER and of the county of CORNWALL, 7 miles (S. by W.) from Falmouth; containing 313 inhabitants. During the civil war of the seventeenth century, a small intrenchment here, called Little Dinas, was occupied by the royalists, for the defence of Helford harbour, but was captured by the parliamentary forces under Sir Thomas Fairfax, in 1646. The parish, which is situated on the estuary of the river Helford, and divided by a creek that runs into it from the Nase Point to Gillan, comprises by measurement 1510 acres; the high grounds command fine views. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; improprators, the family of Gregor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £210 for the great, and £140 for the vicarial, and the glebe comprises 62½ acres. The church, situated at the foot of the promontory of Little Dinas, within fifty yards of the sea, is an ancient and elegant structure, with a tower built of a very fine granite, said to have been brought from Normandy. There is a place of worship for Bryanites. At Conderra, in 1735, were found a very large number of Roman brass coins, chiefly those of the Emperor Constantine and his family. Here was anciently a cell to the priory of Tywardreth.

ANTHONY (ST.) in ROSELAND, a parish, in the union of TRURO, W. division of the hundred of POWDER and of the county of CORNWALL, 9¼ miles (S. W. by S.) from Tregony; containing 144 inhabitants. It lies at the extreme point of Roseland, a verdant and bold peninsular promontory, connected on the north by a narrow isthmus with the parish of Gerrans. The living is a donative, in the patronage of S. T. Spry, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £118. The church, beautifully situated on the border of a navigable lake, which separates this parish from St. Mawes, contains some handsome monuments to the Spry family, of which one, by Westmacott, is to the memory of Sir Richard Spry, Rear-Admiral of the White. An Augustine priory, subordinate to that of Plympton, in the county of Devon, existed here till the general dissolution; its remains have been converted into a private residence called Place House.

ANTHONY, WEST (St. ANTHONY AND St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of ST. GERMAN'S, S. division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL, 5½ miles (S. E.) from St. Germans; containing, with the chapelry of Torpoint, 2894 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 8½., and in the gift of the Rt. Hon. R. P. Carew, the improprator: the incumbent's tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £307. 3. 6., with a glebe of 6 acres, and the great tithes for one of £284. 13. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A small endowed school was founded in 1766, by Sir Coventry Carew, Bart.; and a national school was commenced in 1823.

ANTHORN, a township, in the parish of BOWNESS, union of WIGTON, CUMBERLAND ward, and E. division of CUMBERLAND, 8 miles (N. W. by N.) from Wigton; containing 207 inhabitants. Here is a school with a small endowment.

ANTINGHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N. W.) from North Walsham; containing 271 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from North Walsham to Cromer, and comprises 1509a. 3r. 36p., of which 1356 acres are arable, 33 pasture and meadow, 56 woodland, and 13 water, consisting of two lakes forming the principal source of the river Ant, which was made navigable to the eastern boundary of the parish in 1806. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 1½.; patron, Lord Suffield. Antingham, St. Margaret's, is also a discharged rectory, consolidated with North Walsham, valued at £5. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Bishop of Norwich as abbot of St. Benet's at Holme. The tithes of St. Mary's have been commuted for a rent-charge of £340, with nearly 16 acres of glebe; and those of St. Margaret's for a rent-charge of £28. 10. The church of St. Mary is chiefly in the decorated style, with an embattled tower: in the churchyard are the remains of the church of St. Margaret, consisting of its tower, and some of its side walls. Neat schoolrooms were erected by the late Lord Suffield, at a cost exceeding £2000.

ANTROBUS, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Northwich; containing 489 inhabitants. A school is supported principally by subscription.

ANWICK (St. EDITH), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Sleaford; containing 314 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united, with the rectory of Dunsby, to the rectory of Brauncwell, and valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 11½.; impropriator, S. Hazelwood, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1791.

APESTHORPE.—See APPLESTHORPE.

APETHORPE (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of OUNDLE, hundred of WILLYBROOK, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Wansford; containing 269 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from King's Cliff to Oundle, and on the Willybrook, at the border of Rockingham forest, and comprises 1669*a.* 15*p.*, a portion of which is occupied by Apethorpe Hall, the seat of the Earl of Westmorland. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £61; patron, Prebendary of Nassington in the Cathedral of Lincoln. The church contains a sumptuous monument to the memory of Sir Anthony Mildmay, Bart., and his lady; and another with the recumbent figure of an infant, the eldest son of Lord Burghersh, beautifully sculptured by a Florentine artist. The Earl of Westmorland, by indenture in 1684, charged a farm with the payment of £36 annually in lieu of certain rent-charges assigned by his ancestors, for apprenticing boys and girls of Apethorpe, Wood-Newton, Nassington, and Yarwell.

APETON, a township, in the parishes of BRADLEY and GNOSALL, union of NEWPORT, W. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD.

APLEY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGEOE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S. W.) from Wragby; containing 162 inhabitants. It comprises 1660 acres by measurement, of which 250 are woodland; the surface is flat, and the soil a cold clay, subject to inundation from a stream that divides Apley from the parish of Stainfield. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £20; patron and impropriator, T. Tyrwhitt Drake, Esq. Formerly there was a church, but at present there is only a small building erected on its site, in which the minister reads the funeral service, and the parishioners hold their vestries.

APPERLEY, a township, in the parish of BYWELL-ST. PETER, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Bywell; containing 34 inhabitants. It is situated at a short distance from the border of the county of Durham: the Roman Watling-street passes on the south-west; and a stream, tributary to the Tyne, flows at this place in nearly the same direction.

APPERLY, with WHITEFIELD, a hamlet, in that part of the parish of DEERHURST which is in the Lower division of the hundred of WESTMINSTER, union of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Tewkesbury; containing 420 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

APPLEBY MAGNA (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, partly in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, but chiefly in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of LEICESTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Ashby; comprising 2803*a.* 3*r.*, and containing 1075 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 9. 4½.; net income, £750, with a house; patron, George Moore, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1771. The church, which is in Leicestershire, was repaired and repewed in 1830, when some windows of painted glass were added by private donation; it contains a curious monument to Sir Stephen and Lady Appleby. The free grammar school was founded in 1699 by Sir John Moore, Knt., lord mayor of London in 1682, who endowed it with an estate at Upton, consisting of 228 acres of land, producing about £315 per annum; the buildings, forming a spacious and handsome structure, were erected by Sir Christopher Wren. There is also a national school.

APPLEBY (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIDGE, N. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Glandford-Bridge; containing, with the hamlet of Raventhorpe, 505 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 4.; net income, £150; patron, C. Winn, Esq. Sixteen children are instructed by means of a donation of £10 per annum from Mrs. Winn, and a contribution of £5 from the parish.

APPLEBY, an incorporated market-town (formerly a representative borough), having separate jurisdiction, locally in EAST ward, union of EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, of which it is the chief town, 274 miles (N. N. W.) from London; containing 1075 inhabitants. This place is thought, but on uncertain grounds, to have been a Roman station: Camden, from a similarity of name, erroneously calls it Aballaba; and Horsley considers it to have been the Roman Galacum. A Roman road passed near it from Langton, on the east, to Redland's Bank on the north-west; and some antiquities of the same people have been discovered in the vicinity. It has long been the head of a barony, sometimes called the barony of Westmorland; the rest of the county, which forms the barony of Kendal, having been anciently included in Lancashire and Yorkshire. It was granted by the Conqueror to Ranulph de Meschines, whose son Ranulph, having in his mother's right succeeded to the earldom of Chester, gave it to his sister, the wife of Robert d'Estrivers. It afterwards came into the possession of the Engains and Morvilles, and was seized by the crown, in consequence of the participation of a member of the latter family in the murder of Thomas à Becket. King John bestowed it, together with the "Sheriffwick and rent of the county of Westmorland," upon Robert de Veteripont, lord of Curvaville, in Normandy, whose grandson, Robert, joining the confederated barons, in the reign of Henry III., it escheated to the crown, but was restored to the two younger daughters of Robert, and subsequently, by marriage, came into the possession of the illustrious family of Clifford, whose descendants, the Tuftons, earls of Thanet, have ever since enjoyed it, with all its rights and dignities. The town was anciently of much greater magnitude than it is at present, as is evident from the situation of a township called Burrals (Borough Walls), a mile distant, and from the discovery of old foundations at the distance of more than two miles, to which the town and its suburbs formerly extended. An ancient record, about the period of the reign of Edward I., makes mention of a sheriff of Applebyshire; from which it appears that the town gave name to one of those districts into which Edward the Confessor divided the earldom of Northumberland. It retained its importance from the time of the Romans until the year 1176, when William, King of Scotland, surprised the castle, and destroyed the town; from which calamity, however, it had so far recovered in the reign of Henry III., that a court of exchequer was established here. A Carmelite monastery was founded at Battleborough, in the parish of St. Michael, in 1281, by the Lords Vesey, Clifford, and Percy, the site of which is now occupied by a neat modern mansion, called the Friary. In the year 1388 the town was again totally laid waste by the Scots, from the effects of which it never afterwards recovered: so that, in the reign of Philip and Mary, it was found necessary to reduce the ancient fee-farm rent, due to the crown, from twenty marks to two. In 1598 it was nearly depopulated by the plague, and its market was consequently removed to Gilshaughlin, a village, five miles distant. At the commencement of the parliamentary war, the castle was garrisoned for the king by the Lady Anne Clifford, Countess of Pembroke and Montgomery, and continued in his interest until after the battle of Marston-Moor, when all the northern fortresses fell into the possession of the parliament.

The town is pleasantly situated on the river Eden, by which it is almost surrounded, and on the great north road; it is well paved and amply supplied with water, and consists of one spacious street, intersected at right angles by three smaller, and terminated at one extremity by the castle, and at the other by the church of St. Lawrence; at each end also is a handsome stone obelisk, or cross. An ancient stone bridge of two arches, over the Eden, connects the suburb of Bongate with the borough. The castle stands on a steep and richly-wooded eminence rising from the river: it suffered much in the wars with Scotland, especially in the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. Of the original structure, said to be of Roman foundation, only a detached portion, called Cæsar's tower, and a small part of the south-east end, remain; the greater part of it was rebuilt by Lord Clifford, in the reign of Henry VI., and again by Thomas, Earl of Thanet, in 1686. The castle is of square form, and contains several apartments of noble dimensions, adorned with a large and valuable collection of ancient family portraits; the magnificent suit of gold and steel armour worn by George Clifford in the tilt-yard, when he acted as champion to his royal mistress Queen Elizabeth, is also preserved here, as too is the famous genealogical picture of the Veteriponts, Cliffords, and Tuftons. The shrievalty of the county of Westmorland is hereditary, and has descended lineally through the male and female line from the year 1066 to the present time. The castle has been from time immemorial the temporary residence of the judges travelling the northern circuit, who are entertained here at the expense of the Earl of Thanet. In the vicinity are lead-mines worked by the London Mining Company; also quarries of red freestone used for building; and at Coupland-Beck is a carding and spinning-mill, where yarn is spun for coarse woollen cloth, stockings, and carpets. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the Saturday before Whit-Sunday, for cattle; on Whit-Monday for linen cloth, and the hiring of servants; the second Wednesday in June (commonly called Brampton Fair), and the 21st of August, for horses, cattle, sheep, woollen cloth, cheese, and other articles. The market-house, or the cloisters, is a handsome structure near the church, rebuilt by the corporation in 1811, in the early style of English architecture, after a design by Mr. Smirke.

Appleby, which is a borough by prescription, received a charter of incorporation from Henry I., with privileges equal to those of York, which was confirmed by Henry II., King John, Henry III., Edward I., and Edward III.; the last monarch's charter reciting that the borough had been seized by Edward II. for an arrear of rent, and was then in the possession of the crown; and granting the town again to the burgesses, on the same terms as before. The officers of the corporation are a mayor, deputy-mayor, twelve aldermen, and sixteen common-councilmen, assisted by a recorder, town-clerk, two coroners, two chamberlains, a sword-bearer, mace-bearer, two sergeants-at-mace, and two bailiffs; the mayor is a justice of the peace, but exercises only a limited jurisdiction. Petty-sessions are held here by the county magistrates every Saturday; the assizes for the county also take place here; and the general quarter-sessions are held alternately at Appleby and Kendal, the Easter and Michaelmas at the former, and the Epiphany and Midsummer at the latter. The town-hall is a large ancient edifice in the principal street. The county gaol and house of correction has been adapted to the radiating plan: adjoining it is the shire-hall, built in 1771. The borough sent members to parliament from the 23rd of Edward I., but was disfranchised by the act of the 2nd of William IV. cap. 45: the right of election was vested in the holders of burgage tenements, in number about 200; and the mayor was the returning officer. Appleby is the place of election of knights of the shire, for which also it has been constituted a polling-place.

The town is situated in the parishes of St. Lawrence and St. Michael, that portion of it which is in the latter being named Bongate: St. Lawrence's contains a population of 1354, and St. Michael's one of 1165. The LIVINGS of both are vicarages. That of St. Lawrence is valued in the king's books at £9. 5. 2½, and has a net income of £306: it is in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle, and attached to it are 51 acres of ancient glebe, and 252 allotted in lieu of tithes. That of St. Michael is valued at £20. 13. 9.; net income, £175; patron, Bishop of Carlisle. The tithes of the manor of Appleby were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1772: the Dean and Chapter are appropriators of both parishes. The church of St. Lawrence is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later style of English architecture; it contains the remains of Anne, the celebrated Countess of Pembroke, Dorset, and Montgomery, who died in 1675, and of her mother, the Countess of Cumberland, to the memory of each of whom there is a splendid marble monument. The church of St. Michael is situated about three-quarters of a mile south-east of the town; and about three miles and a half from it, between the villages of Hilton and Murton, is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The free grammar school, founded by the burghers, existed long before the dissolution of religious houses, but was established on its present foundation in the 16th of Elizabeth, when the management was vested in ten governors, who are a corporate body: the endowment, arising from different sources, is about £200 per annum. It has five exhibitions, of £8 per annum each, to Queen's College, Oxford, founded by Thomas, Earl of Thanet, in 1720, and is entitled to send candidates for one of Lady Elizabeth Hastings' exhibitions to the same college. Dr. Bedel, Bishop of Kilmore; Dr. Barlow, Bishop of Lincoln; Drs. Smith and Waugh, Bishops of Carlisle; and Dr. Langhorne, the translator of Plutarch, were educated in the school. Other schools on the national plan have also been established; and there is an endowment in land, producing about £7 per annum, which is applied in aid of a school in the township of Murton, called Thwaite school. St. Ann's hospital, for 13 aged widows, was founded and endowed in 1653, by Anne, Countess of Pembroke; the revenue arising from lands is about £490, and it has a considerable funded property. The building, which is quadrangular, comprises 13 distinct habitations and a neat chapel; the chaplain and sisters are appointed by the Earl of Thanet, as heir of the Countess, who left also various lands at Temple-Sowerby, in this parish, for repairing the church, school-house, town-hall, and bridge. In the neighbourhood were two ancient hospitals for lepers, dedicated respectively to St. Leonard and St. Nicholas; the estate of the latter was applied by the countess towards the endowment of her almshouse. There was also a chapel at the western end of the stone bridge of St. Lawrence; and the ruins of another have been found at Chapel hill. About a mile north of the village of Crackenthorpe, on the ancient Roman way, was a Roman encampment; and a little further to the north was discovered, on sinking the foundation of a new bridge, in 1838, between the parish of St. Michael and Kirkby-Thore, a variety of Roman coins and other antiquities. At Machill bank, near the Roman way, urns have been found in circular pits of clay, apparently dug for their reception. Thomas de Appleby, Bishop of Carlisle, and Roger de Appleby, Bishop of Ossory, were natives of the town.

APPLEDORE, a small sea-port town, in the parish of NORTHAM, union of BIDEFORD, hundred of SHEB-

BEAR, Great Torrington and N. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (N.) from Bideford; containing 2174 inhabitants. This spot is celebrated in history for the many battles between the Saxons and the Danes which took place in the immediate vicinity, more especially for the decisive and important victory obtained, by Earl Odun and the men of Devon, over a large army of Danes under the command of Hubba, who, in the reign of Alfred, landed here with thirty-three ships. The invaders were repulsed with great slaughter and the loss of their leader, who, being taken prisoner, was beheaded on a hill in the neighbourhood, on which a stone has been erected to mark the spot, and which still retains the name of Hubberstone hill. The town is pleasantly situated on the shore of Barnstaple bay, and, from its facilities for sea-bathing, the mildness of its climate, and the romantic beauty and variety of the surrounding scenery, has been gradually growing into importance as a favourite watering-place. The beach, which is from two to three miles in length, is a firm level sand, affording an excellent promenade; and there are some agreeable walks and rides in the vicinity. The streets are for the greater part narrow and inconvenient, but, leading down to the beach, they are ventilated by a current of pure air; and the atmosphere, impregnated with saline particles from the sea, and softened by the adjacent hills, is considered very favourable for invalids. The market is well supplied with fish, and with every other kind of provisions. The Burrows, a fine tract of land, on which every inhabitant householder has the right of common, is defended from the sea by an embankment called Pebble-ridge, which is nearly two miles in length, 150 feet broad at the base, and considerably higher than high-water mark. The parish church at Northam, being about a mile and a half distant, a chapel of ease has been lately erected here by subscription, containing 550 sittings, of which 275 are free. There is a place of worship for Independents, and there was formerly a Roman Catholic chapel.

APPLEDORE (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of TENTERDEN, partly in the liberties of ROMNEY MARSH, but chiefly in the hundred of BLACKBOURNE, lathe of SCRAY, W. division of KENT, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Tenterden; containing 561 inhabitants. Some trade is carried on in coal, timber, and other merchandise, by means of the Royal Military canal, which passes close to the village. The living is a vicarage, with Ebony annexed, valued in the king's books at £21; net income, £185; patron and appropriator, Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is a spacious edifice, in various styles, with a Norman tower, which appears to have formed part of the ancient castle, on the site of which the church is built. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

APPLEDRAM (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of BOX and STOCKBRIDGE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 1½ mile (S. W.) from Chichester; containing 156 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the harbour of Chichester, and is of very small extent. Considerable business is done in the timber and coal trade at Dell Quay harbour. The manor-house, crowned with turrets, and surrounded by a moat, is a good specimen of the style of domestic architecture of the reign of Henry VIII.: near it are the remains of another ancient house, now occupied by a farmer. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £14; net income, £34; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church is in the early English style.

APPLEFORD, a chapelry, in the parish of SUTTON-COURTNEY, union of ABINGDON, hundred of OCK, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Abingdon; containing 187 inhabitants, and comprising 820 acres. The chapel is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £344. 10., payable to the Dean and Canons of Windsor. A free school was founded and endowed by Edmund Bradstock, for the education of twenty poor children, seven from the chapelry of Appleford, and the remainder from the parish of Sutton.

APPLESHAW, a parish, in the union and hundred of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Andover; containing 372 inhabitants. Fairs for the sale of sheep are held on May 23rd, Oct. 9th, and Nov. 4th and 5th. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Ampport: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £206. The church, erected in 1832 at an expense of £1300, is a neat edifice, containing 270 sittings, of which 86 are free. There is a school with a small endowment.

APPLESTHORPE, or APESTHORPE (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (N. by E.) from East Retford; containing 109 inhabitants. It comprises 783a. 3r. 27p., and is bounded on the east by the river Trent; the surface is flat, and the soil a stiffish clay; the land is rich meadow, near the Trent. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £81; patron, Prebendary of Apesthorpe in the Cathedral of York. The tithes were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1795. The church has been more than a century in ruins, and the inhabitants therefore attend that at North Leverton: there is, however, a burial-ground, which was inclosed in 1833.

APPLETHWAITE, a township, in the parish of WINDERMERE, union and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Ambleside; containing 436 inhabitants. In the township are several beautiful villas, among which is Calgarth park, commenced in 1789 by Dr. Watson, Bishop of Llandaff, who occupied it till his death in 1816, when his remains were interred at Bowness. Two hobbin-mills afford employment to a portion of the population. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £27.

APPLETON (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of OCK, county of BERKS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Abingdon; comprising 1981a. 2p., and containing, with the township of Eaton, 496 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north-west by the river Thames, which separates it from the county of Oxford, and on the south-east by a small stream called the Ouse. The surface undulates gently from the banks of the Thames, and the scenery is pleasingly diversified; the soil near the river is of a clayey quality, and in the more elevated lands a rich and fertile loam. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 5., and in the gift of Magdalene College: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £455, and the glebe comprises 32 acres. The church contains a few monuments to the Fettiplace family. A school was endowed with about 8 acres of land by Sir R. Fettiplace and other benefactors. There are some remains of two ancient manor-houses, each surrounded by a moat. Dr. Edmund Dickinson, author of a work entitled Delphi Phœnicizantes, tracing to the Bible the origin of the heathen mythology, was born here in 1624.

APPLETON, with HULL, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Warrington; containing 1753 inhabitants.

APPLETON, with WIDNESS, a township, in the union and parish of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Warrington. The navigable river Mersey runs on the south. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Roman Catholics.

APPLETON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Lynn; comprising 876a. 1r. 7p., of which 508 are arable; and containing 25 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; patron, I. Motteux, Esq.: the inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £10, and the vicarial for £8. The church has fallen into ruins.

APPLETON, a township, in the parish of CATTERICK, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 2 miles (S. by W.) from Catterick; containing 91 inhabitants. It comprises about 1480 acres, and includes the small hamlets of East and West Appleton.

APPLETON-LE-MOORS, a township, in the parish of LASTINGHAM, union of PICKERING, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Kirkby-Moorside; containing 322 inhabitants. It comprises about 2570 acres, of which nearly 1300 are open moorland: the river Seven passes on the east, and the road from Kirkby-Moorside to Pickering on the south. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. John Stockton, in 1839, left £10 a year for the instruction of children.

APPLETON-LE-STREET (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MALTON, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Amotherby, Appleton-le-Street, Broughton, Hildenley, and Swinton; and containing 944 inhabitants, of whom 185 are in the township of Appleton-le-Street, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from New Malton. This parish, which is bounded on the north by the river Rye, is situated on the road to Thirsk; the surface is undulated, and the scenery richly diversified; limestone of excellent quality is abundant, and extensively quarried. The living is a vicarage, with the chapel of Amotherby, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 6½; net income, £515; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. J. Cleaver; impropiators, the Earl of Carlisle, F. Cresswell, Esq., and others. The church is in the Norman style, with a square tower.

APPLETON-ROEBUCK and NUN-APPLETON, a township, in the parish of BOLTON-PERCY, W. division of AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from York; containing 564 inhabitants. This place comprises by computation 2800 acres, chiefly the property of the Milner family, whose splendid mansion, Nun-Appleton Hall, stands in an extensive and finely wooded park, near the confluence of the rivers Ouse and Wharfe, and was built by Thomas, Lord Fairfax, on the site of a Cistercian priory for nuns, founded by Alice de St. Quintin at the commencement of the thirteenth century, and suppressed at the dissolution. The village is situated in the vale of a rivulet, and contains several dwelling-houses. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school, built by subscription in 1817, is supported by the rector and Sir William M. S. Milner, Bart.

APPLETON-UPON-WISK, a parish, in the union of NORTH-ALLERTON, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Yarm; containing 600 inhabitants. The manor, at the time of the Domesday survey, was in the hands of the Conqueror, and was then styled Apeltune: it was afterwards granted by that monarch to Robert de Brus, lord of Skelton, who gave it to the abbey of St. Mary at York; and with that institution it continued till the dissolution, when it was bestowed by Henry VIII. upon Sir Charles Brandon, Knt. The parish, which is bounded on the south by the river Wisk, is about two miles in length from east to west, and a mile and a half broad, and comprises 1827*a. 2r. 25p.*, of which 1101 acres are arable, 666 grass land, 27 wood, and 32 cottages, gardens, roads, and waste; the soil is a strong clay, and the fields, which adjoining the river are low, rise from it by a gradual and easy ascent towards the north. The manufacture of linen is carried on to a considerable extent, and affords employment to about 100 of the inhabitants. The village is situated at the southern extremity of the parish, in the most westerly part of Cleveland, and is intersected by the roads between Richmond and Stokesley and North-Allerton and Yarm. The living is annexed to the rectory of Great Smeaton; net income, exclusively of Great Smeaton, £185; impropiator, Rev. J. Hewgill. The church is a small ancient building. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans; and three small schools are partly supported by the parents of the children, and partly by subscription.

APPLETREE, a hamlet, in the parish of ASTON-LE-WALLS, union of BANBURY, hundred of CHIPPING-WARDEN, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Banbury; containing 92 inhabitants, and comprising 526*a. 30p.* It is situated on the borders of Oxfordshire, which bounds it on the south-west.

APPLETREE-WICK, a township, in the parish of BURNSALL, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWROSS, W. riding of YORK, 9 miles (N. E. by N.) from Skipton; containing 467 inhabitants. This township, which forms the eastern side of Wharfedale, and includes the hamlets of Gateup and Skireholm, comprises by computation 7740 acres, chiefly the property of the Earl of Craven, and W. H. F. Cavendish, and John Yorke, Esqrs., which last is lord of the manor: the lands are chiefly a high moorland district affording tolerable pasture. The village is pleasantly situated; and a fair for horses and cattle is held annually on the 25th of Oct. under a charter granted in the reign of Edward III. Christ-church in Skireholm was erected in 1837 by subscription, at a cost of £240, as a chapel of ease to the mother church: it is a neat small edifice. William Craven, lord mayor of London in 1611, and whose son was created Baron Craven in the 2nd, and Earl of Craven in the 16th, of Charles II., ancestor of the present earl, was a native of this place.

ARBORFIELD (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the union of WOKINGHAM, hundred of SONNING, county of BERKS, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Reading; comprising 1468*a. 2r. 25p.*, and containing 300 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of Lord Braybrooke: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £398. A school is supported by subscription. The village of Arborfield Cross, about a mile from the church, is partly in this parish, and partly in that of Hurst.

ARBURY, with HOUGHTON and MIDDLETON, a township, in the parish of WINWICK, union of WARRINGTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Warrington.

ARCLEBY, a hamlet, in the parish of PLUMBLAND, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Cockermouth. There are some coal-works in the vicinity.

ARCLID, a township, in the parish of SANDBACH, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Sandbach; containing 121 inhabitants. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £29. 0. 6., and the vicarial for one of £39. 3. 8.

ARDEN, with ARDEN SIDE, a township, in the parish of HAWNBY, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 8 miles (N. W. by W.) from Helmsley; containing 137 inhabitants. A small Benedictine nunnery in connexion with Rivaulx abbey, about four miles distant, was founded here about 1150, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £12: Arden Hall is built upon its site. In 1757, John Smales and Gregory Elsley bequeathed £120. 5., directing the produce to be applied to the instruction of six poor boys.

ARDINGLEY, or ERTHINGLEY, a parish, in the union of CUCKFIELD, hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 6 miles (N. E. by N.) from Cuckfield; containing 742 inhabitants. It is situated on the road to Brighton through Linfield, and is intersected by the London and Brighton railway. In the hamlet of Hepsted Green a pleasure fair is held on the 30th of May. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 5. 10.; net income, £498; patron, J. W. Peyton, Esq. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated English style, and contains several ancient monuments to the Culpepper family.

ARDINGTON (The Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union and hundred of WANTAGE, county of BERKS, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Wantage; containing 405 inhabitants. It contains by computation 2190 acres, and is intersected by the Wilts and Berks canal: the surface is flat, except at the northern extremity, which contains a portion of the chalk hills extending through this county and Wiltshire. The northern part has some good meadow lands, and the middle is a rich loam well adapted for corn. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 7. 9., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford: the church has a narrow south aisle divided from the nave by pointed arches, and at the east end a small transept. There are two schools. The Roman Ikeneld-street passed through the parish.

ARDLEIGH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Colchester; containing 1605 inhabitants. The parish, which comprises 4953 acres, is situated on the road from Colchester to Harwich, and a fair is held on Sept. 29th. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £258; appropriator, Archdeacon of Colchester. The church is an ancient structure, partly rebuilt of brick, with the original square embattled tower of stone. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1571 William Littlebury bequeathed a farm called Wrabnass, now let for £250 per annum, for the instruction of boys of Ardleigh, Dedham, and other places adjacent.

ARDLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Bicester; containing 168 inhabitants. It contains by measurement 1469 acres, and is situated on the road from Oxford to Northampton. Lace is manufactured here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Duke of Marlborough; the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £283, and the glebe comprises 60 acres. The main body of the church was rebuilt in a plain style about fifty years since. In Ardley wood are the foundations of an ancient castle, built by the Normans, in the reign of Stephen, on the site of a fortification which had been raised by Offa, King of Mercia: they are nearly circular, and comprise an area about sixty yards in diameter, surrounded by a moat.

ARDSLEY, a township and chapelry, in the parish of DARFIELD, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Barnsley; containing 1226 inhabitants. Hand-loom weaving of linen, and the manufacture of fancy drills, are carried on here: a coal-pit is in operation, and there is a valuable stone-quarry from which grindstones of a very superior quality are supplied to the Sheffield and Birmingham manufacturers. The Dearne and Dove canal runs through the township. The church, dedicated to Christ, a cruciform structure in the Norman style, was erected in 1841, on a site given by Sir George Wombwell, Bart., at an expense of £1200, of which £400 were contributed by the lord of the manor, £200 by the Incorporated Society, £120 by the vicar of Darfield, and the rest by private individuals: it contains 500 sittings, one-third of which are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, at present endowed with £50 per annum by the Pastoral Aid Society; George Maude, Esq. has also contributed towards the endowment, and the remainder is supplied by the vicar of Darfield, who is patron: a parsonage-house has been lately built. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £203. 1. s., half of which is payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, and half to the Rector. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The sum of £50, bequeathed by John Micklethwaite in 1742, has been applied in erecting a house for the residence of a schoolmaster, in consideration of which he teaches two children gratuitously; and a new school-house has been completed in connexion with the church.

ARDSLEY, EAST, a parish, in the union of WAKEFIELD, Lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Wakefield; containing 900 inhabitants. This parish, which is in the honour of Pontefract, comprises about 1600 acres of fertile land: B. Dealtry, Esq. is lord of the manor. The village is situated on the road to Bradford, and the surrounding scenery is pleasing: there are extensive coal-mines. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £369; patron and impropiator, Earl of Cardigan. The tithes for East and West Ardsley were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1826. The church is a small edifice, with a square tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school is partly supported by a small endowment, and there are some bequests for distribution among the poor.

ARDSLEY, WEST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WAKEFIELD, Lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Leeds; containing 1420 inhabitants. This place, in some documents called Woodkirk, from its ancient church of wood, formerly belonged to Nostal priory, subordinate to which was a cell of Black Canons founded here, and endowed with land by one of the family of the Soothills, in expiation of the murder of a child: its revenue at the dissolution amounted to £17, and the foundations of the building may still be traced. The parish comprises by measurement 2300 acres of fertile land: the substratum abounds with coal of excellent quality, of which there are some extensive mines in operation. Tingley House is the handsome residence of George Ellis, Esq.: the village is pleasantly situated, and the surrounding scenery pleasingly diversified. Fairs for horses, &c. are held on Aug. 24th and Sept. 17th. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £265, derived from land; patron and impropiator, the Earl of Cardigan, who is lord of the manor. The church, an ancient structure in the early English style, having fallen into dilapidation, was partly rebuilt in 1832, and the chancel in 1834; the ancient stalls and monuments have been preserved in the present structure, and among the latter is a monument to Sir John Topcliffe, chief justice and master of the mint in the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII., who resided at Topcliffe Hall, now a farm-house. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. There is a small bequest by Mr. Joshua Scholefield for the instruction of children; and some trifling benefactions have been left for distribution among the poor.

ARDWICK, a chapelry, in the parish of MANCHESTER, union of CHORLTON, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 1 mile (S. E. by E.) from Manchester; containing 9906 inhabitants. Owing to its proximity to Manchester, Ardwick participates extensively in the trade of that place. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £294; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Manchester. The chapel is dedicated to St. Thomas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ARELEY-KING'S, or LOWER ARELEY (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, the Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. W. by W.) from Stourport; containing 423 inhabitants. It comprises 1449 acres by a late admeasurement, and is separated from Stourport by the river

Severn. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Rector of Martley: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £358, and there is a glebe of 41 acres, with a house. The church is situated on a considerable eminence commanding a fine prospect, and nearly overhanging the river, which flows through a rich valley at the base. In the burial-ground is a singular sepulchral monument, of the date of about 1690, supposed to commemorate Sir Harry Coningsby, of Hampton Court, who lived in seclusion in this parish, in consequence of the loss of his only child. Here is a national school; and an estate of the value of £16 per annum, given by Wm. Stevens in 1653, is vested in trustees, for the repair and maintenance of the church.

ARELEY, UPPER (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of KIDDERMINSTER, S. division of the hundred of SEISDON and of the county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Kidderminster; containing 667 inhabitants. The village occupies a romantic situation near the margin of the river Severn, and the parish comprises 3803*a.* 3*r.* 12*p.*: a thin stratum of coal is worked, and there are quarries of red freestone, of which large blocks are raised for building, and which is also used for grindstones and millstones. Areley Hall is the residence of the Earl of Mountnorris, who, when Viscount Valentia, published his interesting travels in the east. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron and impropiator, Lord Mountnorris. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £391. 7., and those of the incumbent for £305: the impropriate glebe consists of 199 acres; the glebe belonging to the incumbent contains only about a quarter of an acre, on which the glebe-house stands. The church is situated on an eminence commanding a fine prospect. A school is supported by subscription.

ARGAM, or ERGHAM (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Bridlington; containing 30 inhabitants. The parish is situated near the road leading from Bridlington to Malton, and comprises by computation 510 acres of land, occupied in farms. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of C. Grimston, Esq., with a net income of £21. The church was one of the chapels of Hunmanby, until it was appropriated to the abbey of Bardensey; but few traces of it now remain.

ARKENDALE, a chapelry, in the parish of KNARESBOROUGH, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. E.) from Knaresborough; containing 261 inhabitants. This place comprises 1516*a.* 2*r.* 35*p.*, of which more than two-thirds are arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture, with about $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres of wood; the soil is partly sand, but mostly clay, producing good crops of wheat, barley, oats, and turnips; the surface is hilly, and varied and picturesque, the higher grounds commanding extensive views. The village is situated at the distance of a mile from the Boroughbridge and Wetherby, and the Boroughbridge and Knaresborough roads. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Knaresborough, with a net income of £90: the tithes for the manor were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1773, and a rent-charge of £107 has been lately awarded as a commutation for the impropriate tithes. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, was rebuilt in 1836, at a cost of about £750, raised by subscription, aided by a grant of £100 from the Incorporated Society: it is a handsome edifice of white brick and stone, in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains 210 sittings, of which 144 are free. A parsonage-house, pleasantly situated on an eminence, was built in 1841, at an expense of £544, also raised by subscription, aided by a grant of £200 from the Ripon Diocesan Society. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A day school for boys, and a Sunday school for children of both sexes, are supported by subscription.

ARKENGARTH - DALE, or ARKENDALE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 12 miles (W. by N.) from Richmond; containing 1243 inhabitants. This is a large moorland parish, the most interesting part of which is its picturesque dale, about eight miles long, and beautifully studded with rural hamlets, whereof the principal are Arkle, Booze, Esleylith, Langthwaite, Whaw, Seal-houses, and Dale-head: it comprises by computation 14,256 acres, of which 3200 are pasture and meadow, 5 arable, 51 wood, 50 public roads, and 10,950 common land. The district abounds in lead-ore, lying principally in high and bleak moors, in the vicinity of the Arkle rivulet, on whose south side the mountain called Water Crag rises 2186 feet above the level of the sea: these lead-mines are of great antiquity, some of them having been worked in the reign of King John, and they are still very productive. There are also extensive smelting-works, where more than 1000 tons of lead are made into ingots yearly; and two excellent slate-quarries are in operation. The road leading from Reeth, in Swaledale, to Kirkby-Stephen and Brough, in Westmorland, passes through the whole length of the parish.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Sir John Lowther, Bart., the impropiator, with a net income of £123. The present church, built in 1818, stands about half a mile from the site of the old edifice, and is a small but neat stone structure capable of accommodating from 500 to 600 persons; the cost of its erection, between £2000 and £3000, was defrayed, partly by money bequeathed by the late George Brown, Esq., lord of the manor, and partly by the Rev. John Gilpin, the present lord. A neat parsonage-house was built in 1838, by subscription, aided by £200 Queen Anne's Bounty, and a contribution from Sir John Lowther of £100. At Langthwaite are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans. George Brown, Esq., in 1813, built a free school, of which the master has a salary of £60, including £16 per annum bequeathed by John Bathurst, Esq. M.D., in 1659, with a house and garden, and a small plot of land rent-free. Dr. Bathurst also left £12 per annum for the instruction of children in the manor of New Forest, for which the school at Helwith, in that district, is now kept; and two sums, each of £4 per annum, for apprenticing children of that place and Arkengarth-dale.

ARKESDEN (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SAFFRON-WALDEN, hundred of UTTLERSFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (E.) from Newport, and 9 miles (N.) from Bishop Stortford; containing 498 inhabitants. It comprises 2297*a.* 2*r.* 28*p.*, of which the surface is undulated, and the soil a heavy and tenacious clay; the scenery is varied, and the adjacent country of interesting aspect. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £181; patron and impropiator, R. B. Wolfe, Esq. It was formerly endowed with a portion of the great tithes, which were commuted for land and a corn-rent, under an inclosure act, in 1814. The church, a spacious and handsome structure with a square embattled tower, in the later English style, is finely situated on the slope of a hill; the north aisle was built by Thomas Alderton, of London, who founded a chantry here in the reign of Henry VII. There is a school supported by subscription.

ARKHOLME, with CAWOOD, a chapelry, in the parish of MELLING, union of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale; containing 407 inhabitants. It comprises 2756 acres, of which 2466 are meadow and pasture, 160 arable, and 130 waste, forest, &c. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £51; patron, Vicar of Melling.

ARKLESIDE, a hamlet, in the township of CARLTON-HIGHDALE, parish of COVERHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 8 miles (S. W.) from Middleham. It is chiefly the property of M. Errington, Esq., and the tithes belong to the incumbent of Coverham, the monks of which place had lands here, producing £6. 13. 4. per annum.

ARKSEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFORTH, and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Doncaster; containing 1056 inhabitants, of whom 266 are in the hamlet of Arksey, and 697 in that of Bentley. The parish comprises the hamlets of Stockbridge, Almholm, Shaftholme, Bodles, Doncaster, Bridge-End, and Scawthorpe; and consists of about 5220 acres of fertile land in a champaign district of rich loam: it is bounded on the east by the river Don, and watered by two of its tributary streams. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 6., and in the patronage of Sir William Bryan Cooke, Bart., the impropiator, with a net income of £113: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in the 7th and 8th of George IV. The church consists of a nave, chancel, side aisles, transepts, and a tower with a low spire rising from the centre: the interior is rich in heraldic insignia, and the windows have much stained glass in good preservation. The free grammar school was built in pursuance of the will of Sir George Cooke, and has an endowment of £40 per annum, left by Sir Bryan Cooke in 1660. An almshouse for 12 poor inhabitants is endowed with £120 per annum.

ARLECDON (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WHITEHAVEN, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent; W. division of CUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Whitehaven; consisting of the townships of Arlecdon, Frizington, and Whillymoor, and containing 558 inhabitants, of whom 211 are in Arlecdon township. It comprises 5311*a.* 3*r.* 15*p.*, and possesses coal, iron-ore, limestone, and freestone. Fairs for cattle are on April 24th, the first Friday in June, and Sept. 17th. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the bishop of the diocese, to whom also the impropiation belongs; net income, £94. The tithes for the township of Arlecdon were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1819. The church has been rebuilt, and was consecrated Aug. 25th, 1829; and divine service is also performed in a Sunday school, lately erected, which is licensed by the bishop. On an estate called Cringlegill is a chalybeate spring, the water of which is stated to possess similar properties to that of Harrogate.

ARLESCOTE, a township, in the parish of WARMINGTON, union of BANBURY, Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Kington; containing 43 inhabitants.

ARLESTON, with SYNFIN, a liberty, in the parish of BARROW, union of SHARDLOW, hundred of APPLE-TREE, though locally in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Derby; containing 85 inhabitants.

ARLESTON, a hamlet, in the parish and union of WELLINGTON, hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 181 inhabitants.

ARLEY (ST. WILFRID), a parish, in the union of NUNEATON, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 6 miles (E. by N.) from Coleshill; containing 265 inhabitants. It comprises 1929*a.* 29*p.*, and is traversed by the road from Coventry to Tamworth. Lime in considerable quantities, and stone for the roads, are obtained here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 0. 7½.; patron and incumbent, Rev. R. R. Vaughan: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £336. 8., and the glebe consists of 74 acres. A free school is endowed with land, producing £20 per annum, left by William Avery, and by £21 per annum from John and Francis Holmes.

ARLINGHAM (ST. MARY THE VIRGIN), a parish, in the union of WHEATENHURST, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by E.) from Newnham; containing 793 inhabitants. The parish is situated on a nook of land, formed by a curvature of the river Severn, by which it is bounded on three sides, and across which is a ferry to Newnham: from an eminence called Barrow hill is a very extensive and pleasing view. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 7. 3½., and in the patronage of Mrs. Hodges, to whom also the impropiation belongs; net income, £193. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents, by an inclosure act, in 1801. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Mrs. Mary Yate, in 1765, endowed a school for boys and girls with a rent-charge of £40; she also gave an additional rent-charge of £40 for the benefit of the poor.

ARLINGTON (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of SHERWILL, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Barnstaple; containing 206 inhabitants. The parish comprises 4000 acres, and is intersected by the river Yeo. Arlington Court, a spacious and handsome mansion in the Grecian-Doric style, is situated here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 18. 1½.; net income, £272; patron, J. P. Chichester, Esq. The church, which has lately been rebuilt by the patron, contains a beautiful monument in marble to one of the Carey family, and the figure of a female crowned.

ARLINGTON, a tything, in the parish of BIBURY, union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S-BARROW, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Fairford; containing 371 inhabitants.

ARLINGTON (St. PANCRAS), a parish, in the union of HAILSHAM, hundred of LONGBRIDGE, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Hailsham; containing 686 inhabitants. A priory of Black Canons was founded at Michelham, in this parish, in honour of the Holy Trinity, by Gilbert de Aquila, in the reign of Henry III., which continued to flourish till the dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £191. 19. 3.; the remains have been converted into a farmhouse, on the north side of which are various pillars and arches, still in tolerable preservation. The parish comprises 5100 acres by admeasurement. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 11.; net income, £156; patron, the Prebendary of Woodhorne in the Cathedral of Chichester; impropiator, Mrs. Attree. The church is an ancient structure in the decorated English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by subscription. In the hamlet of Milton is the site of Barlow Castle, overlooking the river Cuckmere.

ARLSEY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, 6 miles (S.) from Biggleswade; containing 820 inhabitants. This place is in the Domesday survey noticed as a market-town, and in 1270 Stephen Edworth, then lord of the manor, obtained a confirmation of the grant for its market, and a grant of a fair on the festival of St. Peter and St. Paul, both of which have been long discontinued. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Ivel, and on the west by the Hiz, both of which unite in the north-west extremity; it is intersected by the road from Baldock to Bedford, and comprises by measurement 2303 acres, of which about 1600 are arable, 500 pasture, 20 wood, and 50 common; the sub-soil is gravel and clay. The women and children are employed in the straw-plat manufacture. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1764 to the rectory of Astwick, valued in the king's books at £8 per annum; it is in the patronage of Miss Dove. At the inclosure of the parish, 255 acres were allotted in lieu of tithes, and there are 15 acres of grass land round the glebe-house. The church is a neat edifice. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. At Etonbury, near the road to Baldock, are the remains of a Roman encampment; and a spot, still called the Hermitage, was the site of an ancient religious house.

ARMATHWAITE, a chapelry, in the parish of HESKET-IN-THE-FOREST, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. W.) from Kirk-Oswald. The village is beautifully situated on the western bank of the Eden, over which is a good stone bridge of four arches. The castle, a handsome modern edifice, built on the site of an ancient fortress, occupies a rocky elevation, at the foot of which flows the Eden; in the reign of Henry VIII. it was, with the estate, the property of John Skelton, the poet-laureat. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £50; patrons, the Trustees of Mr. Milbourne, in whom also the impropriation is vested. The chapel was rebuilt by Richard Skelton, Esq., in 1668, having for some time previously been used as a shed for cattle.

ARMIN, a chapelry, in the parish of SNAITH, union of GOOLE, L. division of the wapentake of OSGOLD-CROSS, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Goole; containing 593 inhabitants. This chapelry, the name of which signifies the "mouth of the Aire," is bounded on the north-west by that river, and is situated on the road from Doncaster to Hull. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £71; patrons, Earl of Beverley and N. E. Yarburgh, Esq.; impropiator, Earl of Beverley. The chapel is dedicated to St. David. A very commodious Sunday school was erected by the Earl in 1834; and a school, in which 20 of the children are instructed gratuitously, is supported by the lord of the manor and principal inhabitants.

ARMINGHALL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of HENSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Norwich; comprising by computation 650 acres, and containing 79 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £66; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Norwich, whose tithes have been commuted for £229. 10. The church is chiefly in the early English style, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower. An old house near the church has a very rich and curious porch, on the door of which is written, in ancient characters, "Pray for the soul of Master William Ely, who caused this to be made an hospital in the year 1487."

ARMITAGE (St. JOHN), with HANDSACRE, a parish, in the union of LICHFIELD, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Rugeley; containing 987 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected by the Grand Junction canal, and skirted by the river Trent, lies on the main road from Lichfield to Uttoxeter, in a beautiful and fertile part of the county exceedingly well wooded. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Bishop of Lichfield, with a net income of £91: tithes belonging to the treasurer of Queen Anne's Bounty have been commuted for a rent-charge of £336: the glebe comprises $1\frac{1}{2}$ acre. The church is an old building, principally in the Norman style. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school was established in 1833.

ARMLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. PETER, liberty of the borough of LEEDS, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Leeds; containing 5676 inhabitants. This chapelry comprises 939*a.* 1*r.* 18*p.*; the soil is tolerably fertile, and excellent building stone abounds; the surface is boldly undulated, and from the east side, looking towards Headingley, the scenery is picturesque. Armley House, the seat of John Gott, Esq., lord of the manor, is a noble mansion of the Ionic order, situated in an extensive and richly-wooded park. Wyther and Armley Grange are also pleasing residences. The old hall, anciently the residence of the Hoptons, lords of the manor, is now a farm-house; and Cartleton Lodge, the seat of the late Benjamin Sadler, Esq., M. P., has been converted into a retreat for insane persons. The village is situated on the west side of the river Aire, and extends for a considerable distance along the acclivities of the vale. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes in a direction nearly parallel with the river, and also the new road from Stanningley to Leeds, completed in 1836. The inhabitants are employed in extensive woollen-mills.

The chapel, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, originally erected in the reign of Charles I., was rebuilt in 1835, at an expense of £1000, of which £300 were granted by the Incorporated Society, and the remainder raised by subscription; it contains 930 sittings, of which 300 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Leeds, with a net income of £204, and a glebe-house. A Sunday evening lecture was established in 1841, and is supported at the sole expense of Mr. Gott; the lecturer has a liberal income, and a commodious house. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Methodists of the New Connexion. Almshouses for 12 poor widows, and a national school-room for 500 children, were erected near the chapel in 1832, by the late Benjamin Gott, Esq.; they form a handsome range of buildings in the Elizabethan style. There is also a town's school, in connexion with the Established Church, the master of which receives £12. 6. per annum from land allotted at the inclosure, for which he teaches six scholars gratuitously. Above the village is a lofty eminence, named Giant's hill, on which are the remains of some works, supposed to have been a Danish fort; and there were also some others on two eminences, called the Red and White War hills, but which were destroyed in the formation of the canal.

ARMSCOTT, a hamlet, in the parish of NEWBOLD, union of SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR, Upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Blockley and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, lying in a detached portion surrounded by Warwickshire, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Shipston; containing 139 inhabitants.

ARMSTON, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of POLEBROOK, union of OUNDLE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Oundle; containing 26 inhabitants, and comprising 784 acres. It is situated near the right bank of the river Nene, and in the south-western part of the parish.

ARMTHORPE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, S. division of the wapentake of STRAF-FORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Doncaster; containing, with the hamlet of Nutwell, 449 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book called Ernulfestorp, was the property of the monks of the abbey of Roche, who had a grange here, at which the official resided who managed this part of the estates of that establishment, and who was sometimes a brother of the house: they had also an officer called their forester. The parish comprises 3810 acres, and includes the farms of Holm-Wood and Waterton, the latter of which was long the seat of the ancient family of its own name, of whom several served the office of high sheriff, and one was master of the horse to Henry V. The village consists of scattered houses, and is situated on a declivity. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 18. 9., and is in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £366: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, by an inclosure act, in 1775. The church is a small building, with an octagonal turret, and exhibits a good specimen of the original country churches for small parishes. The Primitive Methodists have a place of worship. Ann Holmes, in 1689, bequeathed a rent-charge of £2. 10. for teaching six children, and apprenticing boys, which endowment has been augmented by Sir George Cooke, Bart., and now produces £5. 13. per annum.

ARNCLIFFE (St. Oswald), a parish, partly in the union of SKIPTON, and E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, but chiefly in the union of SETTLE, and W. division of that wapentake, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Kettlewell; comprising the townships of Buckden, Hawkeswick, and Litton, and the chapelry of Halton-Gill; and containing 834 inhabitants, of whom 182 are in the township of Arncliffe. This parish consists by estimation of 35,860 acres, nearly all in grass, including 5800 in Arncliffe township, and is bounded on the west by Pennyngent, a mountain 2270 feet high, and on the north by Camm Fell, 2245 feet high. The district consists of two valleys, separated by an almost impassable mountain; one of these, called Langstrothdale, is watered by the Wharfe, which noble river has its rise here; and the other, called Littondale, by the Skirfare, which forms a junction with the Wharfe at the bottom of the valley. The air is for the greater part of the year piercing, owing to the vicinity of the high hills just mentioned, which being often capped with snow, render the winds cold and sharp. There is a cotton-mill in the village, but grazing forms the chief occupation of the inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £50, with an excellent glebe-house; patrons and appropriators, the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £483. 7. 2. The church, with the exception of the tower, was taken down and rebuilt in 1805; the chancel has just been again rebuilt by subscription, and in the same style as the tower; and several windows of that character have been inserted in the body of the edifice. At Halton-Gill and Hubberholme are chapels of ease, the livings of which are in the patronage of the Vicar of Arncliffe. There are some small bequests, the interest of which is applied to the relief of the poor and the repair of the church; and 13s. are annually paid for a sermon on the 5th of Nov., agreeably with the will of William Fawcett, dated 1630.

ARNCLIFFE-COTE, a hamlet, in the township and parish of ARNCLIFFE, union of SETTLE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK. This place is tithe-free, being named in a charter, 9th Richard II., as belonging to the monks of Fountains, in whose possession it was at the dissolution.

ARNCLIFFE, INGLEBY (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Stokesley; containing 329 inhabitants. There appears, from Domesday book, to have been anciently two manors in the parish, Ingleby and Arncliffe, which after the Conquest were held by King William, when they were styled Engelebi and Erneclive: the estates were subsequently granted to Robert de Brus, as parcel of the barony of Skelton, to be held of the king in capite; and among the families which have at different periods owned property here, occur those of Bruce, Fauconberge, Ingelram, Colville, and Mauleverer. The parish is in the district called Cleveland, and its greatest extent is three miles from east to west, and its breadth about two miles; it comprises 1850 acres, of which about 1200 are arable, 300 woodland and plantations, and the remainder meadow and pasture; the lands are chiefly the property of William Mauleverer, Esq., the descendant of the Norman baron who came over with the Conqueror from Normandy, and whose family have continued here since that period. The surface is undulated, and the high grounds command fine views of the vale of Cleveland, the distant hills of Richmond, and the sea; the hills are richly wooded, and the scenery in many parts is beautifully picturesque; the soil is a strong clay; and freestone of good quality is plentiful; but as there is little demand, it is not wrought to any great extent. The village of Ingleby, the only one in the parish, is neatly built, and occupies a retired situation on the summit of a gentle ridge, at a short distance from the road between Stokesley and Thirsk. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Bryan Abbs, Esq., the impropiator, with a net income of £49: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £125. The church is a neat plain structure with a campanile turret, erected in 1822, at an expense of £500, raised by subscription. A small school is partly supported by voluntary contributions.

ARNCOTT, a chapelry, in the parish of AMBROSDEN, union of BICESTER, hundred of BULLINGTON, though locally in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bicester; containing 331 inhabitants.

ARNE, a parochial chapelry, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of HASILOR, Wareham division of DORSET, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Wareham; containing 168 inhabitants, and comprising 1068a. 2r. 21p. The village is situated on the shore of Poole harbour, between Wareham and Brownsey Island. On the summit of an eminence connected with a bank of gravel or pebbles, extending north-eastward into the harbour, is a large barrow, which was formerly used as a beacon. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Wareham. The chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a plain structure of ancient date.

ARNESBY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Leicester; containing 505 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Leicester to Welford, and comprises about 1250 acres, nearly all pasture; the soil is chiefly a clay of a strong quality. The population is principally employed in the stocking manufacture. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 8.; patron, John Sherwin, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £60, and the glebe comprises 25 acres. The church is a substantial edifice in good repair, containing about 400 sittings. There is a place of worship for Baptists. Two allotments of land, comprising together $16\frac{1}{2}$ acres, producing £50. 13. 9. per annum, are appropriated to the benefit of the poor. The Rev. Robert Hall, the distinguished theological writer, was born here in 1764; the building in which he preached his first sermon is now a barn.

ARNFORD-CUM-NEWTON, a hamlet, in the township of HELLIFIELD, parish of LONG PRESTON, union of SETTLE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK. This place, of which mention is made in one of the oldest Craven charters, formerly belonged to the monks of Fountains, with whom it continued till the dissolution, when it became the property of the Greshams: it is now chiefly owned by Earl de Grey.

ARNOLD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, N. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Nottingham; containing, with part of the hamlet of Daybrook, 4509 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 4349 acres, of which 2610 are arable, 1330 meadow and pasture, 294 wood and plantation, and the remainder roads, waste, &c.; the soil in the eastern part is clay, but elsewhere it is of a sandy nature. The village, which is remarkably healthy, and well supplied with water, is about three-quarters of a mile long, and a quarter broad, situated in the midst of the ancient forest of Sherwood, and surrounded by a beautifully undulated neighbourhood. The inhabitants are principally employed in the manufacture of cotton hose, gloves, &c.; and the cotton stockings made here are as fine as those produced at any other place in England. A small fair is held on the first Wednesday after Sept. 19th. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 8., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire; impropiator, T. Holdsworth, Esq. The small tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £210, and there are 90 acres of glebe. The church is a large handsome edifice in the later English style, with a tower; a tablet in the interior records various charitable bequests amounting to about £150 per annum. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Wesleyans of the New Connexion, Baptists, and Independents; and a Chartist meeting-house. A parochial school is endowed with £20 per annum. On Cockliff hill, the highest ground in the county, are the remains of a Roman encampment.

ARNOLD, a township, partly in the parish of LONG RISTON, and partly in that of SWINE, union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Beverley; containing 154 inhabitants. This place, in the 13th century, belonged to the family of de Roos; the Hildyards afterwards held the lands for a considerable period, and among other proprietors occurs the abbot of Meaux. The township belongs, in nearly equal moieties, to the two parishes, and comprises by computation 2000 acres: the village, which is long and scattered, is situated to the north of the Lamwith stream. There are places of worship for Independents and Primitive Methodists.

ARNWOOD, a tything, in the parish of HORDLE, union of LYMINGTON, hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ly-mington and S. divisions of HAMPSHIRE; containing 543 inhabitants.

ARRAM, a township, in the parish of LECKONFIELD, union of BEVERLEY, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Beverley; containing 117 inhabitants. This is a long scattered village, situated to the east of Leckonfield, and near the right bank of the river Hull.

ARRAM, with ATWICK and SKIRLINGTON, a township, in the parish of ATWICK, union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Beverley; containing 50 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book styled Argun, and in other records Ergham, came at an early period into the possession of Mcaux abbey, to which institution Sir Steven Ergham gave some land here about 1190: the canons of Bridlington also had some interest in the property. The manor comprises about 500 acres, tithe-free: the manor-house, a neat residence, was built about the time of James I., but has been much modernised.

ARRAS, a hamlet, in the parish of MARKET-WEIGHTON, union of POCKLINGTON, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 3 miles (E.) from Market-Weighton. It is situated on the wolds, and on the road from Market-Weighton to Beverley: it is supposed there was a village here during the conflicts of the Saxons and Danes, if not at the time of the Romans, as, in a field, the foundations of buildings have been discovered, as have also fragments of chariot wheels, and the heads of arrows.

ARRETON (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. E.) from Newport; comprising by computation 9000 acres, and containing 1964 inhabitants. It abounds with limestone, which is extensively quarried for building purposes, and for burning into lime. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £21; net income, £220; patron and impropiator, J. Fleming, Esq.: the small tithes have been commuted for £245 per annum, and there are 20 acres of glebe. The church, an ancient building, with a heavy embattled tower, contains a brass effigy of a Knight Templar. Two schools, one for boys and the other for girls, are endowed by a bequest of Mr. Mann in 1688, and are also supported by subscription.

ARRINGTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of CAXTON and ARRINGTON, hundred of WETHERLEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Caxton; containing 317 inhabitants, and comprising about 1300 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. 3.; net income, £69; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, who have commuted the tithes for a rent-charge of £390. There are 22 acres of glebe.

ARROW, a township, in the parish of WOODCHURCH, union and Lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Great Neston; containing 122 inhabitants. About one-half of the land belongs to the grammar school at Warrington.

ARROW (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of ALCESTER, partly in the Alcester, and partly in the Stratford, division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 1 mile (S. W.) from Alcester; containing, with Ragley and the hamlet of Oversley, 543 inhabitants. The parish is situated in the western part of the county, on the border of Worcestershire, which bounds it on the west; and consists of 3983 acres, a considerable portion of which is attached to the beautiful demesne and interesting grounds of Ragley Park. Its surface is agreeable, diversified with hill and dale, the river Arrow flowing through it from north to south, with other streams in different directions, and the whole is thickly covered with timber, the rateable annual value of which is returned at £600. The roads from Alcester to Stratford and Evesham intersect the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 10. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £248; patron, the Marquess of Hertford. The church is an ancient structure, the tower of which was rebuilt in 1760.

ARROWTHORNE, a township, partly in the parish of HORNBY, but chiefly in that of BROMPTON-PATRICK, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Catterick; containing 81 inhabitants. It is situated to the west of the river Swale, and comprises about 850 acres of land.

ARTHINGTON, a township, in the parish of ADDLE, Upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Otley; containing 336 inhabitants. This place is situated in the beautiful valley of Wharfdale, and abounds with interesting scenery; and Arthington Hall, the seat of T. W. Carruthers, Esq., of Dormont, N. B., is in the township. A school is supported by subscription. A convent of Cluniac nuns was founded here, in the twelfth century, by Piers de Ardington, which was valued at the dissolution at £19: the site is occupied by a farm-house now called the "Nunnery."

ARTHINGWORTH (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of ROTHWELL, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Harborough; containing 242 inhabitants. It comprises 1593 acres, of which 1293 are pasture, 245 arable, and 55 woodland; the soil is of various qualities, a great part being a strong clay; the grazing grounds are very fine. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £323; patron, L. Rokeby, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1767; the glebe consists of 215 acres. The church is an ancient structure, with a handsome well-proportioned tower of later date. A school is endowed with a house and about 24 acres of land, the latter let for £36 per annum.

ARTHURET (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of LONGTOWN, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S.) from Longtown; comprising the townships of Breconhill, Lyneside, Longtown, and Netherby, and containing 2859 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the border of Scotland, where, in 1337, a Scottish army crossed, and, marching eastward, destroyed about twenty villages; and at the chapel of Solom, a small oratory, which anciently stood near the spot called the Chapel Flosch, commissioners from England and Scotland met, in 1343, to settle the boundaries of the respective countries. On Solom Moss, in 1542, the Scots, 10,000 in number, but discontented with their commander, Oliver Sinclair, a favourite of the Scottish monarch, allowed themselves to be defeated by a small body of about 500 English troops, under the command of Dacres and Musgrave, and it is said that 1000 of them were made prisoners, amongst whom were 200 noblemen, esquires, and gentlemen. The parish comprises about 11,000 acres, and there are quarries of white and red freestone within its limits. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 2. 1.; net income, £687; patron, Sir J. R. G. Graham, Bart. The church was rebuilt in 1609, with the exception of the tower, which was not erected till 1690: in the churchyard is a rude cross, with a pierced capital, near which were interred the remains of Archibald Armstrong, court jester to James I. and Charles I., and a native of the parish. An artificial tumulus, in the form of a prostrate human figure, near the church, is said to have been raised over the body of a chieftain slain in the above-mentioned battle.

ARTILLERY-GROUND, OLD, a liberty, in the union of WHITECHAPEL, locally in the Finsbury division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX; containing 1558 inhabitants. It forms one of five divisions of the liberty of the Tower which has a peculiar jurisdiction, and is detached.

ARTINGTON, a tything, in the parish of St. NICHOLAS, GUILDFORD, union of GUILDFORD, First division of the hundred of GODALMING, W. division of SURREY, 1 mile (S. by W.) from Guildford; containing 687 inhabitants.

Arms.

ARUNDEL (HOLY TRINITY), a borough, market-town, and parish, having exclusive jurisdiction, locally in the hundred and rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 10 miles (E. by N.) from Chichester, and 55 (S. by W.) from London; containing 2624 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from its situation in a dale watered by the river

Arun, is first noticed in the will of Alfred, who bequeathed the castle and a few adjacent residences to his nephew Athelm. The castle, rebuilt by Roger de Montgomery, at the time of the Conquest, was, in the reign of Henry I., besieged and taken from his son, Robert de Belesme, who had rebelled against his sovereign, and settled by that monarch on his second wife Adeliza, who by a subsequent marriage conveyed it to William D'Albini, Lord of Buckenham, in the county of Norfolk. Matilda, daughter of Henry I., asserting her claim to the throne in opposition to Stephen, landed at Littlehampton in 1139, and was received and protected for several days in this castle against the forces of her opponent, in recompense for which service, her son, Henry II. on his accession, granted the castle and honour of Arundel to William D'Albini and his heirs for ever. William, the fourth earl, dying without heirs male, the property was divided among his four sisters, and the castle and manor of Arundel descended to John Fitzalan, son of the second sister, in whose family they continued till 1580, when they passed to Philip Howard, Earl of Surrey, descendant of another of the sisters, who had married Thomas, Duke of Norfolk; but on his attainder in 1589, the castle and manor of Arundel reverted to the crown, and continued to form part of the royal possessions till the death of Queen Elizabeth. The property was restored by James I. to Thomas, son of Philip, from whom, in uninterrupted succession, it has descended to its present proprietor, Henry Charles, Earl of Arundel and Duke of Norfolk. During the civil wars the castle was garrisoned for the parliament, but in 1643 was taken by the royalists under the command of Lord Hopton, who placed in it a garrison of 200 men, and appointed Col. Ford, high sheriff of the county, governor: being, however, afterwards besieged by Sir William Waller, it finally surrendered after a defence of seventeen days, and was dismantled as a place of defence, and so far destroyed as to unfit it for a baronial residence.

The CASTLE is situated on the summit of a high hill, and defended on two sides by the precipitous acclivity of the ground, and on the other by deep fosses: the walls inclosed an area of 950 feet in length, and 250 feet in width, in the centre of which was the keep, a circular tower of great strength, and 100 feet in height, built on an artificial mound, and evidently of Norman origin. After remaining in a ruinous state till 1720, Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, restored part of the buildings, and erected others of modern style, which he made his occasional residence. Charles, the 11th duke, in 1791, made considerable additions: the north-west front was built in 1795, and the wing which contains the library and other apartments was completed in 1801. The entrance, which is by a deeply recessed Norman arched doorway, leads to the grand staircase and gallery, the latter of which, 195 feet in length, opens into the Barons' hall, erected in commemoration of the triumph of the barons in obtaining Magna Charta. The library is a strikingly magnificent apartment, 117 feet in length and 35 feet wide, panelled throughout with mahogany and cedar exquisitely carved, with a richly ornamented roof. The chapel is an elegant structure in the decorated English style, the walls of which are strengthened with slender enriched buttresses, terminating in crocketed pinnacles; and the interior is lighted by windows of excellent design. The banquetting-room, formerly the ancient chapel, the saloon, and all the state apartments of this magnificent structure, are of corresponding splendour: the entire range of building occupies three sides of a quadrangle, and the expense of restoration and the erection of new portions has already amounted to £400,000. The pleasure-grounds and gardens are tastefully laid out, and the park, which abounds with stately timber, comprises 1200 acres; the surrounding country abounds with richly varied and picturesque scenery, and from the higher grounds within the park, and especially from the towers of the castle, are obtained extensive and beautiful prospects. The castle is the head of the honour of Arundel, and confers on its possessor the title of Earl without creation, a feudal right, which was adjudged by parliament, in the 11th of Henry VI., to an ancestor of the present Duke of Norfolk.

The town is pleasantly situated on rising ground within four miles of the sea, and chiefly on the north bank of the river Arun, over which is a neat stone bridge of three arches: the houses are in general well built, and many of them are modern and of handsome appearance; the streets, which are lighted with gas, are paved under an act of the 25th of George III., and the inhabitants plentifully supplied with excellent water. A considerable coasting trade is carried on: the imports are chiefly butter, bacon, pork, lard, grain, and starch from Ireland; grain and cheese from Holland; grain, oilcake, wine, fruit, and eggs from France; timber, chiefly from the Baltic; and coal from Newcastle and Scotland. The exports are principally oak-timber, corn, flour, and bark to the west of England and Liverpool, and to Ireland. The port, which has a custom-house with the usual officers, also affords a facility of intercourse between London and the Mediterranean, enabling the fruit ships from the latter to perform two voyages in the season: ships drawing sixteen feet of water can enter the port. A canal, connecting the Arun with the Thames and with Portsmouth, affords a medium of conveyance to various parts of the kingdom. There are two breweries on a large scale for the supply of the neighbourhood. The market is on Tuesday, chiefly for corn, the sale of which is considerable, and on every alternate Tuesday there is a large cattle market: a few years since, a building was erected by subscription on the quay, for the purpose of a corn-market. The fairs are held on May 14th, Sept. 25th, and Dec. 17th, chiefly for cattle and pedlery; but, since the cattle markets were established, they have been but little attended. Arundel is a BOROUGH by prescription, and has had a corporation from the time of the Conquest: the government is vested in a mayor, three aldermen, and twelve councillors, and the mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace: the municipal and parliamentary boundaries of the borough are the same, and are co-extensive with those of the parish. Petty-sessions are held by the county magistrates every alternate Tuesday, and an elegant town-hall was lately erected by his Grace the late Duke of Norfolk, at an expense of £4000. The borough returned two members to parliament from the time of Edward I. to the 2nd of William IV., when it was destined thenceforward to send only one: the right of election is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot; the mayor is the returning officer.

The parish comprises by computation about 1800 acres. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 0. 10.; net income, £199; patron and impropiator, Duke of Norfolk. The church, situated at the upper end of the town, was greatly damaged by the forces of Sir William Waller, who occupied it during the siege of the castle; but it was restored by the late Duke. It is a large and ancient cruciform structure, with a low but well-built central tower, surmounted by an obtuse leaden spire painted white; it is chiefly in the later English style, and the interior is very neatly fitted up. At the east end is the Norfolk chapel, consisting of a nave and north aisle, divided by three fine arches, and lighted by windows of elegant design: this is the burial-place of the noble family of Howard, and it contains some grand and interesting monuments. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a parochial school, in which are 300 children, is conducted in an appropriate building erected in 1818 by the 11th Duke. Robert de Montgomery founded the Benedictine monastery of St. Nicholas, to which William D'Albini, the second earl, annexed the then vacant rectory of Arundel; the establishment flourished for two centuries, but was so greatly impoverished by Edward III., that it was neglected till the reign of Richard II., when the Earl of Arundel dissolved it, and founded in its place the College of the Holy Trinity, for a master, twelve chaplains, two deacons, two sub-deacons, and four choristers. This college continued to flourish till the dissolution, when its revenues were estimated at £168. 0. 7.; part of the original building was converted by Charles, Duke of Norfolk, into a Roman Catholic chapel and a residence for his chaplain, the Rev. M. A. Tierney, author of the "History and Antiquities of the Castle and Town of Arundel." The same earl founded also the hospital of the Holy Trinity for a master and poor brethren, the revenue of which at the dissolution was valued at £93. 18. 6 $\frac{3}{4}$.: on the rebuilding of the bridge over the Arun, in 1724, a considerable portion of the edifice was removed to furnish materials for that structure. The learned Chillingworth, who had joined the royal army, was taken prisoner during the siege of the castle by the parliamentarians, and confined in the episcopal palace of Chichester, where he died.

ARVANS, (ST.) a parish, in the union and division of CHEPSTOW, partly in the hundred of RAGLAN, but chiefly in the Upper division of the hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Chepstow; containing, with the hamlet of Portcasseg, 354 inhabitants. The parish, which is bounded on the north-east by the river Wye, and situated on the road from Monmouth to Chepstow, comprises by computation 2840 acres, and abounds in richly picturesque and romantic scenery, which, in many situations, is of great beauty and diversity. From Piercefield Park, the splendid seat of Nathaniel Wells, Esq., the views are remarkably magnificent, and embrace many reaches of the Wye, the Severn, and a great range of the surrounding country. The mansion, situated on an eminence, in the midst of fine plantations, is a superb elevation of freestone, consisting of a centre and two wings, and much admired for its elegance, and tasteful architecture: on the spacious staircase are four beautiful pieces of Gobelin tapestry, which belonged to Louis XVI., representing many subjects in the natural history of Africa. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £53; patron and impropiator, Duke of Beaufort: about 50 acres of land of indifferent quality, contained in two small farms in other parishes, belong to the curacy. The church is in the early English style, with a square tower, erected in 1821. Here are a parochial school and two others, all supported by subscription. Remains exist of two ancient chapels, dedicated respectively to St. Kingsmark and St. Lawrence: in the park, where is a chalybeate spring, are the remains of an encampment; and there is a small intrenchment in the hamlet of Portcasseg.

ARYHOLME, with HOWTHORPE, a township, in the parish of HOVINGHAM, union of MALTON, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 7 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from New Malton; containing 36 inhabitants.

ASBY, GREAT (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union and division of EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Appleby; containing, with the townships of Asby-Windewath, Asby-Coatsforth, and Little Asby, 407 inhabitants, of whom 222 are in the first, with the hamlet of Garthern; 129 in the second; and 56 in the third, with the hamlet of Asby-Overgrange. It comprises by computation 6500 acres, and is bounded on the south by the parish of Crosby Garret and by Orton Fells; the surface is diversified with hills and valleys, and is intersected by numerous rivulets, near the margin of one of which, in the hollow called Asby Gill, is Plate hole, a remarkable cavern, intersected by a small stream, and which has been explored to an extent of more than 500 yards. The substratum is principally limestone, and on the common belonging to the manor has been lately discovered a very valuable fossil marble. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 13. 4.; patron, John Hill, Esq.; net income, £205. The church is a very ancient structure with lofty gables, and strengthened by massive buttresses: the parsonage-house occupies the site of a nunnery, of which the chapel and prison are still partly remaining, the latter being used as a cellar. There was formerly a chapel at Little Asby, dedicated to St. Leonard. A school-house was built in 1688, by George Smith, citizen and merchant-tailor of London; to which Dr. Thomas Smith, Bishop of Carlisle (who was born at Whitewall, near the village), gave £100; and an almshouse was founded in 1812 for four poor widows. Near the church is St. Helen's well, supposed to have been a bath belonging to the nunnery.

ASCOTE, CHAPEL, an extra-parochial liberty, in the S. division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 2 miles (N. W. by N.) from Southam; containing 10 inhabitants, and comprising 600 acres.

ASCOTT, a hamlet, in the parish of WING, union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 98 inhabitants.

ASCOTT UNDER WYCHWOOD (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Burford; containing 463 inhabitants. The parish is divided into two portions, Earl's Ascott and Ascott-Regis; and the village is pleasantly situated in a valley on the bank of the river Evenlode, near the border of Wychwood Forest. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £55; patron, Vicar of Shipton; appropriator, Prebendary of Ascott in the Cathedral of Salisbury. The church is a neat ancient building. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; also a school, established by Lady Churchill.

ASCOTT, a hamlet, in the parish of GREAT MILTON, union and hundred of THAME, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Bensington; containing 29 inhabitants.

ASCOTT, a hamlet, in the parish of WHICHFORD, union of SHIPSTON-ON-STOUR, Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Shipston.

ASENBY, a township, in the parish of TOPCLIFFE, wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Boroughbridge; containing 261 inhabitants. It is situated on the south-western acclivities of Swaledale, and comprises by computation 1131 acres, mostly occupied in farms. A bed of gravel affords excellent material for repairing the roads; and a bed of coal-shale shows itself on the eminences of the dale. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £334. 10., of which £250 are payable to the impropiator, £64. 10. to the vicar of Topcliffe, and £20 to the Dean and Chapter of York.

ASGARBY (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Sleaford; containing, with the hamlet of Boughton, 77 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, united in 1737 to the rectory of Kirby-le-Thorpe, and valued in the king's books at £10. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church is in the later English style, with a lofty tower surmounted by a fine crocketed spire.

ASGARBY (ST. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, W. division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Bolingbroke; containing 131 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1950 acres, two-thirds of which are pasture, and one-third arable; the soil is a sandy loam. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln; but in consequence of the suppression of the prebend of Asgarby, the bishop presents pro hac vice under the act of parliament; net income, £34, with three acres of glebe. The church is a small plain edifice, rebuilt about forty years ago. In 1667, Henry Pell bequeathed a rent-charge of £10 for the instruction of poor children of Asgarby, Howell, and Eveden, in the charity school at Ewerby. There are some vestiges of an encampment, probably formed during the civil wars, and near which human skeletons are frequently dug up.

ASH, a hamlet, in the parish of SUTTON-ON-THE-HILL, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Derby. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £83. 3.

ASH, a hamlet, in the parish of THROWLEY, union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of WONFORD, Crockernwell and S. divisions of DEVON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Oakhampton. John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, the celebrated statesman and general, was born here, in 1650.

ASH, county of DURHAM.—See ESH.

ASH, (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of DARTFORD, hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 9 miles (N. E.) from Seven Oaks; containing 663 inhabitants. It comprises 3022 acres, of which 1780 are arable, 180 meadow, 624 woodland, 244 cinque-foil, 169 hop-grounds, and 21 furze and waste; the surface is hilly and well wooded, and the soil is in some parts chalky, but chiefly a stiff loam. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 4., and in the gift of the family of Lambard: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £675, and there are 20 acres of glebe. A school containing 30 boys is endowed with £20 per annum, and a girls' national school was erected in 1814.

ASH, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of MAR-TOCK, union of YEOVIL, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 322 inhabitants.

ASH (ST. PETER), a parish, under Gilbert's act, partly in the First division of the hundred of GODLEY, and partly in the First division of the hundred of WOKEING, W. division of SURREY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Farnham; containing, with Frimley chapelry and Normandy tything, 2236 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the Basingstoke canal and the South-Western railway, and comprises by computation 4000 acres, of which one-half is under cultivation: a species of sandstone, dug out of the common, is used for building; and pebbles are found, susceptible of a bright polish, which are commonly called Bagshot diamonds. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 18. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £473; patrons, Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The church is a plain structure, and previously to the dissolution of monasteries was attached to the abbey of Chertsey. There is also a church at Frimley, of which the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector; and a national school is supported by subscription. Dr. Young is said to have written a portion of the "Night Thoughts" at the rectory-house, then the residence of Dr. Harris, who married a sister of the poet, and was incumbent from 1718 to 1759.

ASH-BOCKING (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Needham-Market; comprising by measurement 1398 acres, and containing 321 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 6½.; it is in the patronage of the Crown. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £375, and £3 per annum are paid to the rector of Hemingstone; the glebe consists of about 11 acres.

ASH, CAMPSEY (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of PLOMESGATE, hundred of LOES, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (E.) from Wickham-Market; containing 374 inhabitants. In the reign of Richard I., Theobald de Valoins gave his estate here to his two sisters, that they might build a nunnery in honour of the Virgin Mary: it was of the order of St. Clare, or the Minoreesses, and at the dissolution had a revenue of £182. 9. 5.: a portion of the buildings still remains. A collegiate chapel, in honour of the Annunciation, was also founded here, by Maud, Countess of Ulster, for a warden and four secular priests, in 1347, seven years after which the establishment was removed to Bruisyard. The parish comprises by measurement 1813 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 5., and in the gift of Thellusson's Trustees: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £430, and there are 9½ acres of glebe. A school is conducted on the national plan.

ASH-GILL, a hamlet, in the township and parish of COVERHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANGWEST, N. riding of YORK, 1¼ mile (W.) from Middleham. Here is a noted training-ground for horses, the property of the Lister family.

ASH, GREAT, a township, in the parish of WHITCHURCH, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 2¼ miles (S. E. by E.) from Whitchurch; containing 204 inhabitants.

ASH, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of WHITCHURCH, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 2¾ miles (S. E. by E.) from Whitchurch; containing 208 inhabitants. A church, erected by subscription, was consecrated Aug. 31st, 1837.

ASH NEAR SANDWICH (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of EASTRY, hundred of WINGHAM, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 3 miles (E.) from Wingham; containing 2077 inhabitants. This place is by most antiquaries identified with the Rutupium, or Urbs Rutupia, of the Romans, one of the earliest stations, if not the first, in the island, and supposed by Camden to have been established by that people for the protection of their haven called Portus Rutupensis, the landing-place of their fleets, and the most usual passage into Britain. According to Bede, the station was called by the Saxons Reptaceastre, and subsequently, by Alfred of Beverley, Richeberg, from which its present name Richborough is derived. Of the ancient city every vestige has disappeared, and the site is now covered with corn-fields: part of the citadel alone remains, consisting of portions of the walls, about 200 feet in length, varying from ten to thirty feet in height, and about twelve feet thick, forming one of the most interesting relics of Roman antiquity in the kingdom. The parish, which is intersected by the road from London to Deal, and bounded on the north by the river Stour, over which are two ferries, comprises 6872a. 1r. 36p., of which 3128 acres are arable, 3258 meadow, 331 orchards and gardens, 100 hop grounds, 49 wood, and 6 rectorial glebe; the soil is rich and fertile. Pleasure fairs are held on April 5th, and Oct. 11th. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £147; patron and appropriator, Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is a handsome building in the early and later English styles; and there is a chapel of ease, erected in 1841, in the early English style, partly by subscription and partly by aid of a grant from the Church Building Society. There are two small places of worship for Wesleyans; and a free school, founded and endowed with £75 per annum, in 1714, by the Cartwright family, affords instruction to 100 children.

ASH-PRIORS (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, W. division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, and of the county of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Taunton; comprising by computation 600 acres, and containing 226 inhabitants. The name of this place is a corruption of Esse Prioris, the property of the prior, which related to a house here, anciently used for a country residence by the prior of Taunton. The parish comprises by computation 500 acres, and the church and principal parts of the village are beautifully situated on rising ground, commanding a fine view of Taunton Dean. There are some quarries of red sandstone, which is of good quality for building, and is also burnt for manure. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of Sir Thomas Buckler Lethbridge, Bart., with a net income of £70: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £110. The church, a neat structure in the later English style, has recently been enlarged by the addition of a new aisle, and beautified at the sole expense of Sir T. B. Lethbridge. A national school is supported by subscription. Priory House, of which a small portion yet remains, was once the residence of the celebrated Admiral Blake.

ASHAMPSTEAD (ST. CLEMENT), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, 10 miles (N. W. by W.) from Reading; containing 404 inhabitants. It comprises 1666a. 1r. 32p., of which 1350 acres are in cultivation; there are 70 acres of beech wood, 250 of coppice, and 100 common. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Basildon; improprator, R. Hopkins, Esq. A school is supported by subscription.

ASHAMPSTEAD, a chapelry, in the parish and hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, 3¾ miles (N. W.) from Great Marlow. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary de More.

ASHBOURN (ST. OSWALD), a market-town and parish, comprising the townships of Hulland, Hulland-Ward, Hulland-Intacks, Sturston, and Yeldersley, in the hundred of APPLETREE; the township of Clifton and Compton, in the hundred of MORLESTON and LIT-CHURCH; and the chapelry of Alsop-le-dale and Eaton, the hamlet of Newton-Grange, and the liberty of Offcote-Underwood, in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY; and containing 4884 inhabitants, of whom 2246 are in the town, 13½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Derby, and 140 (N. W. by N.) from London.

This place, which at the time of the Conquest was held in royal demesne, is in Domesday-book called Esseburn. In 1644 a battle was fought here between the royalists and the parliamentarians, in which the former were defeated with considerable loss. Charles I. was at Ashbourn during the battle, and again, in 1645, on his march to Doncaster, at the head of 3000 horse, when a skirmish took place, in which the royalists defeated Sir John Gell, the leader of the parliamentary forces in this part of the country: during his stay the king attended divine service at the church. Charles Edward Stuart, accompanied by the Dukes of Athol and Perth, on their return from Derby in 1745, remained for one night in the town, taking forcible possession of the manor-house, from which they expelled Sir Brooke Boothby and his family. On Sir Brooke's return, he found the names of the officers written in chalk upon the doors of the apartments which they had severally occupied: of these inscriptions, which were overlaid with white paint, some are preserved, and the bedroom in which the Pretender slept is still shown.

The town is beautifully situated in a deep vale, on the eastern bank of the river Dove, over which there is a bridge of stone: the houses are principally built of red brick, and roofed with slate; the streets are partly paved, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The entrance from London is highly picturesque, commanding a fine view of the beautiful vale on the left, and of Ashbourn Hall, the seat of Sir William Boothby, Bart., on the right: the vicinity abounds with pleasing and richly varied scenery. The reading and news-rooms, and the libraries, are respectably supported. The manufacture of cotton and tambour lace is carried on to a considerable extent, and a great quantity of cheese and malt is sent to the metropolis and other towns; but the principal support of the town is derived from its market and numerous fairs. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the first Tuesday in Jan. and Feb. 13th, for horses and cattle; the second Monday in March, for horses, cattle, and cheese; April 3rd, May 21st, and July 5th, for horses, cattle, and wool; Aug. 16th, and Sept. 20th, for horses and cattle; the third Monday in Sept. for horses, cattle, and cheese; and Nov. 29th, for horses. Ashbourn is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Courts leet and baron are held annually under the lord of the manor, at which constables and other officers for the town are appointed.

The parish comprises 7043 acres. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Mappleton united, valued in the king's books at £5. 4. 7.; net income, £134; patron and appropriator, Dean of Lincoln. The church, erected in 1240 by Hugh de Patishull, Bishop of Coventry, is a spacious cruciform structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a central tower surmounted by a lofty and richly ornamented octagonal spire: the interior has lately undergone extensive repairs and embellishments. The northern part of the chancel, appropriated as a sepulchral chapel to the Boothby family, contains, among others, an exquisitely sculptured monument by Banks, to the memory of Penelope, only child of Sir Brooke Boothby, who died at the age of five years, which is said to have suggested to Chantrey the design of his celebrated monument in Lichfield cathedral. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, and the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion. The free grammar school was founded in 1585, under a charter of Queen Elizabeth, and endowed with estates purchased by the inhabitants, from the proceeds of which £131. 10. per annum, with a house and garden, are given to the master, and £65. 15. with a house, to the usher. An English school was founded in 1710, and endowed with £10 per annum, by Mr. Spalden, for the instruction of thirty boys, till they should be fit to enter the grammar school: he also endowed a school for thirty girls under twelve years of age, the mistress of which has £10 per annum. In addition to these, a national school is carried on; and there are several almshouses, founded at various periods, and some of them endowed with considerable funds. In the neighbourhood formerly stood a chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, which, previously to its being taken down some years ago, was used as a malt-house.

ASHBRITTLE (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, hundred of MILVERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Wellington; containing 540 inhabitants, and comprising 2489a. 2r. 10p. The parish is situated on the borders of the county of Devon, and includes the tything of Greenham. Fairs are held in Feb. and Oct. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 3. 11½., and in the gift of J. Quick, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, and the glebe consists of 80 acres.

ASHBURNHAM (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BATTLE, hundred of FOXEARLE, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Battle; containing 790 inhabitants. The manor, with the exception only of a few years, has been, from a time anterior to the Conquest, in the continued possession of the noble family of Ashburnham, whose mansion-house is beautifully situated, and surrounded by a fine park: the parish comprises about 3600 acres, and was once noted for the smelting of iron-ore. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Penhurst annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 4.; patron and impropiator, the Earl of Ashburnham. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £260, and the vicarial for £239; the glebe consists of 6 acres. A lectureship was founded in 1631 by R. Bateman, Esq., and others, with an endowment of £40 per annum for two sermons every week; it is in the gift of the co-heiresses of the late Sir Hugh Bateman, the last surviving trustee. The church, situated behind Ashburnham House, is a neat cruciform edifice, in the decorated English style, with a tower; the south transept contains a gallery for the family, and in the north are handsome monuments to William and John Ashburnham and their wives; and, in a glass case, lined with red velvet, are preserved the watch of Charles I., and portions of the dress which he wore when he was beheaded. The Earl of Ashburnham supports a school for thirty girls; and an almshouse for six aged widows, supposed to have been originally erected by General William Ashburnham, and which was rebuilt by the late earl in the year 1817, is supported by the present earl, who allows a certain sum to each of the inmates. There are several mineral springs in the parish.

Seal and Arms.

ASHBURTON (St. Andrew), a borough, market-town, and parish, in the union of NEWTON-ABBOT, hundred of TEIGNBRIDGE, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, 19 miles (S. W.) from Exeter, and 192 (W. by S.) from London, on the road to Plymouth; containing 3841 inhabitants. This town, anciently called Aisbertone, in the time of Edward the Confessor belonged to Brietric, and at the Conquest to Judael de Totnais. It seems by Domesday book to have then been part of the demesne of the crown, being therein described as "Terra Regis." The place was subsequently annexed to the see of Exeter; and, in 1310, Bishop Stapylton obtained for it a grant of a market and four fairs; and, in 1672, another market, chiefly for wool and yarn spun in Cornwall, was procured by Mr. John Ford, which has long been discontinued. It was made a stannary town by charter of Edward III., in 1328, being then noted for the mines of tin and copper which abounded in the neighbourhood. Henry IV., in the 3rd year of his reign, granted a charter, declaring that "the men of the manor of Aisbertone, which is ancient Demesne of our Crown," should be free from paying toll throughout the kingdom. It also appears that it belonged to the crown in the time of Charles I., as that king bestowed the manor upon his son Charles, when he created him Prince of Wales. How it was alienated by the crown is unknown; but in the reign of Charles II. it was the property of Sir Robert Parkhurst and Lord Sondes, Earl of Feversham, the former of whom sold his moiety to Sir John Stawell, of Parke, in South Bovey, by whose executors it was sold to Roger Tuckfield, Esq., from whom Lord Clinton, the present proprietor of one moiety of the borough, claims. The other moiety was, about the same time, purchased by Richard Duke, Esq., and is now vested in Sir L. V. Palk, Bart. Ashburton, in the parliamentary war, having been previously occupied by the royal troops under Lord Wentworth, was taken by Sir Thomas Fairfax, on his march westward, in Jan. 1646.

The town is situated about a mile and a half from the river Dart, and consists principally of one street of considerable length: the houses are built of stone and roofed with slate, the latter of which is obtained from quarries in the vicinity. The inhabitants are well supplied with water; the river Yeo, a rapid stream, runs through the town, and turns several mills. There is a book society; and card and dancing assemblies, and music meetings, are frequently held in a handsome suite of rooms at the Golden Lion inn. The environs abound with objects of interest, and the scenery on the banks of the river is celebrated for its picturesque and romantic beauty. The manufacture of serge and other woollen goods for the East India Company is carried on to a very great extent in the town and neighbourhood; there are some mills for fulling cloth and for the spinning of yarn, and, in addition to the slate-quarries, mines of tin and copper are still worked in the neighbourhood. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the first Thursdays in March and June, the first Thursday after the 10th of Aug. and the 11th of Nov., which last is a great sheep fair. Ashburton is a borough by prescription: a portreeve, bailiff, constables, and subordinate officers are appointed annually at a court leet held by the steward of the borough, but they have no magisterial authority: a stannary court is held occasionally. The borough made two returns to parliament, in the 26th of Edward I. and the 8th of Henry IV., but none subsequently until 1640, when the franchise was restored by the last parliament of Charles I., and until the passing of the Reform Act it continued to return two members; it now returns only one, the elective franchise being in the resident freeholders and the £10 householders of the entire parish: the portreeve is the returning officer.

The LIVING is a vicarage, with Bickington and Buckland-in-the-Moor annexed, valued in the king's books at £38. 8. 11½; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £390, and the vicarial for £528; the glebe consists of 60 acres. The church, which was formerly collegiate, is a venerable and spacious cruciform structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded in the 3rd of James I. by William Werring, Esq., and endowed with lands, a portion of which belonged to the dissolved chantry of St. Lawrence, a fine ancient building with a tower and a small spire, now appropriated to the use of the school, and for public meetings: the original endowment has been augmented by subsequent benefactions, and two scholarships, each of £30 per annum, in Exeter College, Oxford, were recently founded in favour of boys educated at the school, by the late Mr. Gifford. The free school, in which 180 children are educated, was endowed in 1754, by Lord Middleton and John Harris, Esq., then representatives of the borough, in gratitude for the liberality of their constituents; and in 1831 an excellent school-house was built at the expense of £500. Inconsiderable vestiges of a chapel, which belonged to the abbot of Buckfastleigh, are still discernible in the walls of a house occupied by Mr. Parham. John Dunning, Baron Ashburton, the eminent lawyer, was born here, Oct. 18th, 1731; he died Aug. 18th, 1783, and was interred in the church. Dr. Ireland, Dean of Westminster, and the late Mr. Gifford, editor of the Quarterly Review, were also natives of the place. The title of Baron Ashburton was revived, in 1835, in the person of Alexander Baring, Esq., nephew, by marriage of his father's sister, of the celebrated lawyer above noticed.

ASHBURY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of FARRINGTON, hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 6¼ miles (N. W. by W.) from Lambourn; containing, with the tythings of Idstone and Odstone, and the hamlet of Kingstone-Winslow, 819 inhabitants. It comprises 5600 acres, a large portion of which is appropriated to dairy farms. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 8. 1½; net income, £375; patron, the Rector, who presents one of three candidates nominated by Magdalene College, Oxford; impropiator, Rev. Dr. Sandyford. The rectory is a sinecure, valued at £30. 12. 6.; net income, £567; patron, the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The tithes were commuted for land, valued at about £500 per annum, and a money payment, by an inclosure act, in 1770; the glebe consists of 25 acres. A school is supported by subscription. The Roman road called the Ikeneld way passes near the village; and in the parish is an intrenchment, named Alfred's camp, near which are two barrows. Here are also a tumulus and cromlech, popularly designated "Wayland Smith," with which is connected a tradition, introduced by Sir Walter Scott, in his romance of "Kenilworth."

ASHBURY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Black Torrington and Shebbear, and N. divisions of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Hatherleigh; containing 65 inhabitants. It contains about 1450 acres, in general of a clayey soil. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £96. There are about 120 acres of glebe. A school is conducted on the national plan.

ASHBY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Great Grimsby; containing, with Fenby, 211 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the old road from Great Grimsby to Louth, and on the borders of the wolds, comprises, together with the hamlet of Fenby, 1637 acres by admeasurement; the soil is fertile, and the sub-soil is generally chalk; the surface undulated, and the scenery picturesque. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 10. 10., and in the gift of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £252, and the glebe comprises 45 acres. The church, a very ancient structure, in the early English style, with a square tower, contains an oak pulpit richly carved, and an elegant octagonal font, supported on a clustered pedestal, and panelled in quatrefoil: there are also two handsome monuments, of which one is to the memory of Sir William and Lady Frances Wray. There is a chapel of ease at Fenby; and a place of worship in the parish for Wesleyans. In 1641 six almshouses were built by Dame Wray, and endowed by her son Sir Christopher Wray, with a rent-charge of £30, to which the present incumbent has added the interest of £100; there is also a rent of £4 distributed among the poor.

ASHBY (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Spilsby; containing 160 inhabitants. It comprises 906 acres by measurement, exclusively of roads. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £157, arising from 185 acres of land allotted in 1811 in lieu of tithes by an inclosure act; patrons, the Representatives of the late Dr. Fowler, Bishop of Ossory. The church was rebuilt in 1841.

ASHBY, a township, in the parish of BOTTESFORD, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 429 inhabitants. The village is large and pleasant, and the township comprises about 2100 acres, extending over the western ridge of the wolds to the river Trent, near which is a tract of moory land that has just undergone the process of warping. There is a decoy, abounding in wild duck and other aquatic birds; in the immediate vicinity of which a handsome mansion was built in 1841, by H. Healey, Esq. Forty acres of land were awarded to the vicar of the parish at the inclosure. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists.

ASHBY (St. MARY), a parish, in the EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of WEST FLEGG, E. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N.) from Acle; containing, with the parish of Oby, 85 inhabitants, of whom 16 are in Ashby. This parish, which was consolidated with those of Thirne and Oby in 1604, comprises about 1900 acres, of which 800 are marsh and meadow land. The three places form one rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of the Bishop of Norwich: the tithes have been commuted for £690. Ashby consists of only one farm; and had formerly a church, of which there are very slight remains: the parsonage-house, a respectable residence, is in that part called Oby, and has a glebe of about 23 acres.

ASHBY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of LODDON, E. division of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Norwich; containing 263 inhabitants. The waste lands were inclosed under an act passed in 1837. The living is a rectory, united to that of Carleton, valued in the king's books at £6; patrons, alternately, Sir W. B. Proctor and Sir Charles Rich, Barts. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower; the entrance on the south is through a rich Norman doorway.

ASHBY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (N. W.) from Lowestoft; containing, with the chapelry of Adstone, 53 inhabitants, and comprising 1003 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the gift of the Rev. George Anguish: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £205, and the glebe consists of about 22 acres. The church is a small thatched building, having a tower circular at the base, and octangular above.

ASHBY, CANONS (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of GREENS-NORTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Towcester; containing 252 inhabitants. The parish consists of 3070*a.* 29*p.*, of which 1715*a.* 29*p.* are in the division of the parish, exclusively of the chapelry of Adstone, and a portion is occupied by a well-wooded park. Here was anciently a priory of Black canons, founded about the time of John, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £127. 19.: in the alienation no endowment was reserved for the service of the church, and consequently there is now no incumbency.

ASHBY, CASTLE (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of HARDINGSTONE, hundred of WYMMERSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Northampton; containing 172 inhabitants. It appears to derive the prefix to its name from an ancient castle which is thought to have stood near the site of the present magnificent mansion of the Marquess of Northampton, where the foundation stones of a large building have been discovered. The parish comprises 1889*a.* 2*r.*, of which the greater part is arable; the soil is a strong clay, the sub-soil limestone, in some parts gravel. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 9. 7., and in the gift of the Marquess: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £237. 18. 2., and the glebe consists of 120 acres. The church forms a picturesque object in his lordship's grounds, and is principally in the decorated style of English architecture; the north entrance is through a beautiful Norman arch in good preservation. Some skeletons and warlike weapons of an early date have been dug up in the neighbourhood.

ASHBY, COLD (St. DENIS), a parish, in the union of BRIXWORTH, hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 11½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Northampton; containing 443 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by computation 2077 acres, is situated on a verdant tract of elevated ground, and bounded on the north-east by the road from Northampton to Leicester; and from the bold declivity terminating the lofty ridge upon which the village stands, extensive and beautiful prospects are obtained of the surrounding country. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 0. 5.; net income, £230; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. Mousley; improPRIATORS, the family of Buxton: the glebe consists of about 120 acres of good arable land. The church was repaired and repewed in 1840, at which time the incumbent presented a new organ and two stained-glass windows. Here is a school endowed with £18 per annum. Richard Knolles, the historian of the Turkish Empire, was born here in 1540.

ASHBY-DE-LA-LAUNDE (St. HYBALD), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 6¼ miles (N. by W.) from Sleaford; containing 157 inhabitants. It comprises 2580a. 3r., of which 2296 acres are arable, 222 grass, and 62 woodland, &c. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 8. 4.; net income, £299; patron and improPRIATOR, Rev. John King. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1807.

ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH (St. HELEN), a market-town, parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 18 miles (N. W. by W.) from Leicester, and 115 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing, with part of the chapelry of Blackfordby, 5652 inhabitants. The name appears to be derived from the Saxon Asc, an ash, and bye, a habitation: it received the adjunct, by which it is distinguished from other towns of the same name, from the family of La Zouch, in whose possession it continued from the latter part of the twelfth to the close of the fourteenth century. Sir William Hastings, created Baron Hastings by Edward IV., and who was beheaded by Richard III., built a strong castle here in the reign of the former monarch, in which Mary, Queen of Scots, while in the custody of the Earl of Huntingdon, was for some time kept in confinement; and in this castle also Anne, consort of James I., and her son, Prince Henry, were magnificently entertained by the Earl of Huntingdon, on their journey from York to London in 1603. At the commencement of the parliamentary war, the Earl of Huntingdon was one of the first that appeared in arms for the king in Leicestershire, and Ashby Castle was garrisoned for his majesty by the earl's second son, Col. Henry Hastings, who was made general of the king's forces in the midland counties, and, for his services to the royal cause was, in 1643, created Baron Loughborough. The king was here, on his march to and from Leicester, in May and June 1645. After sustaining a siege of several months from the army under Fairfax, Lord Loughborough surrendered the castle to Col. Needham, in February 1646, on honourable terms, the garrison being allowed to march out with all the honours of war. The castle was one of the fortresses demolished by order of a committee of the house of commons, about the end of the year 1649: the remaining portions form an extensive and interesting mass of ruins, consisting of the great tower, the chapel, the kitchen tower, and a part evidently of much earlier date than the tower, as some portion of it was standing in the time of Richard I. The Marquess of Hastings has lately expended a considerable sum in repairing parts of these ruins, and arresting the progress of decay; and on the site of a building which stood to the north of the castle, and at right angles with it, erected for the accommodation of the suite of James I., when on a visit to the Earl of Huntingdon, he has erected a handsome structure in the later English style, designated the manor-house.

THE TOWN, a great part of which was destroyed by fire in 1753, is pleasantly situated on the banks of the small river Gilwisthaw, at the north-western extremity of the county, and consists principally of one very spacious street, with two smaller streets extending in a parallel direction, and containing several substantial and well-built houses: it is lighted with gas, and measures have been lately taken for supplying it with water. The Ivanhoe baths, a splendid building erected in 1826, of the Doric order of architecture, are supplied from the neighbouring collieries with water, strongly impregnated with muriate of soda, containing, by ten or twelve degrees, a greater proportion of salt than sea water: the building consists of a centre, comprising the spacious pump-room, finished with rich architectural decorations, and over-arched with an elegant and lofty dome, and of two wings, one for gentlemen and the other for ladies, in each of which is a range of six baths, with douche, vapour, and shower varieties. There are lodging-houses, a handsome hotel, a neat theatre, and other sources of attraction, requisite in a place of fashionable resort. The manufacture of the coarser kinds of hosiery is carried on here: bricks are made to a considerable extent; and in the neighbouring wolds, which abound with iron-stone and excellent coal, and which are now inclosed and populous, extensive collieries have been opened by the Marquess of Hastings, and there is also a furnace for smelting the iron-ore. A canal passes within three miles south-westward of the town, with which it is connected by a railroad, and, after continuing a course of more than thirty miles, unimpeded by a single lock, forms a junction with the Coventry canal. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on Shrove-Monday, Easter-Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, the last Monday in Sept. and the 10th of Nov. for horses and cattle: this is stated to be the best market for strong horses in England. A court of requests has been established, under an act passed in 1838, which is held monthly, on Mondays, or oftener if necessary, before the ordinary commissioners, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, and once in every three months, or oftener, before a barrister of six years' practice, appointed under the act, for debts above that amount and not exceeding £15. A constable and two headboroughs are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

The parish comprises about 7000 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 10. 4.; net income, £417; patron and improprator, Marquess of Hastings. 150 acres of land belong to the living in this parish, and 33 in that of Whitwick. The church is a spacious structure, in the decorated English style, and contains, in an adjoining sepulchral chapel, several monuments of the Huntingdon family, among which is one to the memory of Francis, Earl of Huntingdon, and his countess, deserving particular notice. A church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has been erected at an expense of £3000, on a site given by the marquess, and was consecrated on the 13th of Aug. 1840; it is a handsome structure, and contains 900 sittings, of which 600 are free. In the township of Blackfordby is a chapel of ease; and there are places of worship for Baptists, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded in 1567, by Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, and others, and endowed with 120 houses and 75 acres of land: it provides instruction to about 120 boys, and has, jointly with the school at Derby, ten exhibitions of £10 each per annum to Emanuel College, Cambridge, founded by Francis Ash, merchant and citizen of London, a native of this town, with preference to the founder's relations. The Blue-coat school was instituted in 1669, and endowed with £25 per annum, by Isaac Dawson; and a Green-coat school was established and endowed by Alderman Newton, of Leicester: they are now united, and contain about 50 boys. The Rev. Simeon Ash, a native of this town, gave £50 per annum, directing that £10 should be appropriated to the apprenticing of two boys yearly in some corporate town, and that the remainder should be distributed among the poor; and there are other schools, besides those already mentioned, carried on for the benefit of poor children. The union of which Ashby is the head comprises seventeen parishes or places in the county of Leicester, and eleven in the county of Derby, and contains a population of 14,234. A great number of Roman coins has been found here. Bishop Hall, an eminent divine and satirist, and Dr. John Bainbridge, a celebrated astronomer and mathematician, were born at the town, the former in 1574, and the latter in 1582.

ASHBY-FOLVILLE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing, with the chapelry of Bardsby, 437 inhabitants. It comprises 2829*a. 1r. 13p.*, of which 2298 acres are pasture, 461 arable, and 70 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £170; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Brown; improprators, the family of Johnston. Lord Carrington, in 1673, founded and endowed an almshouse for seven poor men or women, the endowment of which produces £135 per annum.

ASHBY, ST. LEDGER'S (St. Mary and St. Leodegare), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of FAWLSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (N.) from Daventry; containing 257 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 1902*a. 2r. 4p.*, is bounded on the east by the Roman Watling-street, and is situated near the London and Birmingham railway and the Union canal. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Mrs. Gaitskell and Lady Senhouse; net income, £130, which chiefly arises from 66 acres of glebe. The church is in the later English style, and contains a richly ornamented screen and rood-loft, and in the windows are some remains of ancient painted glass. Sir William Catesby, favourite of Richard III., and owner of the manor, was buried here within the altar-rails under a marble slab, with a rich brass in fine preservation; and Robert Catesby, the conspirator, of the time of James I., resided here, where he had property.

ASHBY, MAGNA (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Lutterworth; containing 337 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 2000 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 11½.; net income, £120; patron and improprator, Earl of Aylesford. The glebe consists of 49 acres.

ASHBY-MEARS (All Saints), a parish, in the union of WELLINGBOROUGH, hundred of HAMFORDSHOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Wellingborough; containing 496 inhabitants. It comprises 1500 acres, of which more than two-thirds are arable land, and is beautifully situated about a mile from the road between Wellingborough and Northampton, and two miles distant from the navigable river Nene. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 9.; net income, £235; patrons, alternately, Sir James Langham, Bart. and Dr. Hardy, master of Winchester College: the glebe consists of about 20 acres, with a house in good repair. The south side of the church has been rebuilt; the tower is very ancient. A free school is endowed with land assigned, on the inclosure of waste grounds, in lieu of property purchased with a bequest of £200 by Sarah Kinloch, in 1720; the rental is about £60. Land, also, producing about £30 per annum, is appropriated to the repair of highways and bridges.

ASHBY, PARVA (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Lutterworth; containing 179 inhabitants. It comprises about 750 acres, of which three-fourths are pasture land; the soil is clay and gravel. Within a mile and a half is a station on the Midland Counties' railway. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £98: the glebe consists of 34 acres. Mrs. Goodacre, in 1830, bequeathed the whole of her property, amounting to £6574, after payment of all debts and legacies, to her niece, Mrs. Bowyer, in trust for charitable uses; who, in pursuance of the testator's will, expended a part of the money in erecting almshouses for eight widows, and two schoolrooms with dwelling-houses; and laid out the residue of the property in the purchase of estates producing £150 a year for their endowment. On the inclosure of the parish in 1665, fourteen acres of land, yielding £28 per annum, were allotted to the reduction of the poor-rates, and three acres, producing £7 per annum, to the repair of the church.

ASHBY-PUERORUM (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Horncastle; containing, with the hamlet of Stainsby, and Holbeck, extra-parochial, 111 inhabitants. Ashby Puerorum, which comprises 1500 acres, chiefly arable, derives its affix from its connexion with the singing boys of Lincoln Cathedral, for whose benefit the great tithes are received. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 2.; net income, £118; patrons and improprators, Masters of the Choristers of Lincoln Cathedral.

ASHBY, WEST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and soke of HORNCastle, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N.) from Horncastle; containing, with the hamlets of Farthorpe and Middlethorpe, 534 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated at the foot of the wolds, on the road from Horncastle to Louth, and is intersected in the western part by the river Bane, and in the eastern by the river Waring. The whole extent by measurement is 2900 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and one-third meadow and pasture; the soil is extremely fertile. The village is one of the most pleasing in the county, remarkable for the neatness of its buildings, the excellence of the roads leading to it, and the beauty of the surrounding scenery. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £54; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Carlisle. The church is a handsome edifice in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and partly mantled with ivy.

ASHCHURCH (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union, and Lower division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Tewkesbury; containing, with the tythings of Aston-upon-Carron, Fiddington with Natton, Northway with Newton, and Pamington, 743 inhabitants. This parish, of which the name was originally East-church, from its relative situation to the church of Tewkesbury, is on the road from Tewkesbury to Stow, and comprises by computation 3150 acres. One of the first-class stations on the Birmingham and Gloucester railway is situated close to the village. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £48; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. B. Skipper. The tithes were partially commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1811; the glebe consists of about 25 acres. The church is a handsome edifice, chiefly in the English style, with a square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles; the south entrance is by a Norman porch of elegant design. Mrs. Smithsend bequeathed £400, appropriating £7. 7. per annum to the Sunday school, and the remainder to the purchasing of blankets for distribution annually among the poor. A spring resembling the Cheltenham waters was discovered a few years since.

ASHCOMBE, a parish, in the union of St. THOMAS, hundred of EXMINSTER, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Chudleigh; containing 297 inhabitants. This parish, situated near the sea-coast, comprises 2000 acres by survey, of which 500 acres of common and waste have recently been planted; the remainder is arable, pasture, and orchard; the soil is a red loam. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £242, and the glebe comprises 30 acres. The church, a cruciform structure, in the early and decorated English styles, was dedicated 22nd Nov. 1259; it contains many ancient stalls of carved oak. During the recent repairs part of an old breviary was found between the ceiling and the roof, written in the reign of Richard II.; it is now in the British Museum. Here are two charity schools.

ASHCOTT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Glastonbury; containing, with the hamlet of Pedwell, 843 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the south by the Polden hills, and intersected by the road from Glastonbury to Bridgwater, formerly belonged to the abbey of Glastonbury. A fair for cattle is held on Jan. 9th. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Shapwick: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £158. 16., and the vicarial for £155, and £9. 10. are paid to the rector of Walton-cum-Street; the glebe consists of 45 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1737 Richard Miles bequeathed a sum of money, since vested in land, now producing £70 per annum, which is distributed among the poor.

ASHDON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SAFFRON-WALDEN, hundred of FRESHWELL, N. division of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Saffron-Walden; comprising by computation 3681 acres, and containing, with the hamlet of Little Bartlow, 1164 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £28. 3. 4.; net income, £691; patrons, Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church, situated on an eminence, is a spacious and ancient structure, with a low square tower surmounted by a small spire covered with lead: the parsonage-house, a handsome residence, about a quarter of a mile to the north, is pleasantly situated on rising ground. There is a national school, built in 1833, at an expense of £316. There are four large barrows, commonly called Bartlow-hills, and three small ones in front of them, in the parish.

ASHE, a tything, in the parish of STOURPAIN, union of BLANDFORD, hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford division of DORSET; containing 64 inhabitants.

ASHE (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of WHITCHURCH, hundred of OVERTON, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Whitchurch; comprising by computation 1667 acres, and containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £350; patron, W. H. Beach, Esq.: the glebe consists of about 32 acres.

ASHELDHAM (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of MALDON, hundred of DENGIE, S. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (N. E.) from Southminster; containing 219 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the sea-shore, comprises an area of about 3 square miles. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 13. 4.; patron, Bishop of London; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £408. 10., and there are 40 acres of glebe. The church is a plain building, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a low square tower.

ASHELWORTH (St. ANDREW, or St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of GLOUCESTER, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, though locally in the hundred of DUBSTONE and KING'S BARTON, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Gloucester; containing 594 inhabitants. It is skirted on the south-east by the navigable river Severn, and comprises about 1600 acres, of which two-thirds are pasture, and one-third arable. Several parts of the manor-house display considerable antiquity; and the parsonage, now a farm-house, affords a peculiarly fine specimen of wood-work. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 2. 11.; net income, £187; patron, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The tithes were commuted for land and an annual money-payment, under an inclosure act, in 1797. The church consists of a nave, south aisle, and two chancels, with a tower and spire, chiefly in the later English style.

ASHEN, a parish, in the union of RISBRIDGE, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Clare; comprising by measurement 1574 acres, and containing 321 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on elevated ground, commanding fine prospects; and the parish is richly wooded. John Elwes, celebrated for his great wealth and penurious habits, was proprietor of the manor of Ashen, to which he succeeded on the decease of his uncle, Sir Harvey Elwes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £390, and there are 16 acres of glebe. The church, consisting of a nave and chancel, is an edifice of small dimensions, chiefly of stone, with a square embattled tower, and contains several monuments of great antiquity. According to Bishop Tanner, here was a priory of Augustine Friars, in the seventeenth of Edward II.

ASHENDON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of AYLESBURY, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Thame; containing, with the hamlet of Pollicot, 312 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Dorton annexed; net income, £106; patrons, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church formerly contained several lofty and elegant marble monuments to the ancient family of Falconer, of Ashendon, which have long since been removed: in a large recess of the south wall, under an ornamented arch, to the left of the communion table, is the recumbent effigy of a crusader with chain mail.

ASHERIDGE, a hamlet, in the parish of CHESHAM, union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 129 inhabitants.

ASHFIELD, with RUTHALL, a township, in the parish of PRIOR'S-DITTON, union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of MUNSLow, S. division of SALOP, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Bridgenorth; containing 55 inhabitants.

ASHFIELD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, hundred of THREDLING, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Debenham; comprising 1565*a.* 2*r.* 19*p.*, and containing, with the hamlet of Thorpe, 343 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £53; patron and improprator, Lord Henniker, who has commuted the tithes for a rent-charge of £465. The glebe comprises three acres, with a small cottage. The church has long been dilapidated, though parts of the walls and of the steeple remain: the cemetery is still used for interment. There is a chapel of ease at Thorpe, in the English style, with a round tower, which is very old; it was repaired by George Pitt, Esq., in 1739. There is also a burial-ground at Thorpe.

ASHFIELD, GREAT (All Saints), a parish, in the union of STOW, hundred of BLACKBURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Ixworth; containing 396 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £54; patron and improprator, Lord Thurlow, whose ancestor, the lord chancellor, was born here in 1732. The church is in the early and decorated styles, and consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a square tower, surmounted by a small spire. Nicholas Firmage, by his will dated in 1620, gave, for a minister to preach a sermon every Sunday forenoon, lands of which four-fifths of the rents are now paid to a lecturer.

ASHFORD, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Bakewell; containing 950 inhabitants, and comprising 2562*a.* 1*r.* 13*p.* The village is pleasantly situated in a vale watered by the river Wye, over which are three stone bridges. Mills for sawing and polishing marble, being the first established for that purpose in England, were erected on its banks in 1786, and are supplied from the celebrated quarries of black marble in the vicinity. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £102; patron, Vicar of Bakewell; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is in various styles, part being early English; the first erection was a chantry, established here by Godfrey, son of Wenun Wyn, in 1257. There is a place of worship for General Baptists; another, originally founded by the nonconformist divine, William Bagshaw, styled "the Apostle of the Peak," has been subsequently used by different sects. A school endowed with £8. 13. 4. per annum, is further supported by a donation of £20 from the Duke of Devonshire. Edward Plantagenet, Earl of Kent, resided in a mansion near the church, of which there are no vestiges, except the moat that surrounded it.

ASHFORD (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of BRAUNTON, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (N. W.) from Barnstaple; containing 174 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the navigable river Taw, by which it is bounded on the south, comprises by measurement 330 acres, two-thirds of which are arable, and the remainder grazing, meadow, and orchard. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 9.: it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £85, with a glebe of 7 acres. A school is supported by voluntary contributions.

ASHFORD (St. Mary), a market-town, parish, and the head of the union of WEST ASHFORD, in the hundred of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 20 miles (S. E. by E.) from Maidstone, and 54 (E. S. E.) from London; containing 3082 inhabitants. This place, originally Asscheford, rose from the ruins of Great Chart, an ancient market-town, which gave name to the hundred, and was destroyed during the Danish wars. The town, which is a liberty of itself, is situated on an eminence rising from the northern bank of the small river Stour, over which is a bridge of one arch:

the houses are modern and well built, and the principal street, which is nearly half a mile long, is lighted. The turnpike-roads from London to Hythe, and from Canterbury to Rye, in the county of Sussex, pass through it. A suite of assembly-rooms has been erected on the site of the ancient manor and market-house, in which assemblies occasionally take place; there are two subscription libraries, and races are held annually for one day. The only branch of manufacture is that of linen, which is carried on to a small extent. The market is on Tuesday and Saturday; there is a cattle-market on the first and third Tuesday, in every month; and fairs are held on May 17th, Sept. 9th, and Oct. 24th, for general merchandize, and in the first week in Aug. for wool. A new turnpike-road, in a more direct line than the old road, has lately been completed between the place and Canterbury; and the South-Eastern railway passes near it. A court leet is held annually, at which a constable, borough-holder, and other officers are appointed.

The parish comprises 2800*a.* 3*r.* 17*p.*, of which about 92 acres are roads, waste lands, and the town. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 4. 2.; net income, £460; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Rochester: the glebe comprises about 14 acres. The church, formerly collegiate, is a spacious and handsome cruciform structure, in the later English style, with a lofty and elegant tower rising from the centre, and having at the southern entrance a fine Norman arch: it was rebuilt in the reign of Edward IV., by Sir John Fogge, Knt., who erected the beautiful tower, and founded the college for a master, two chaplains, and two secular clerks. In a small chapel adjoining the south-western transept are three sumptuous monuments of variegated marble, to the memory of the Smyths of Westenhanger, and one to the Duchess of Athol. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded in 1636, by Sir Norton Knatchbull, who endowed it with £30 per annum, and vested the appointment of a master in his own family; and national schools are supported by subscription, and by a bequest in land, producing £35 a year, from Dr. Turner, in 1702. The poor law union of West Ashford comprises 12 parishes and places, and contains a population of 11,329. A mineral spring was discovered, a few years ago, in a field called Sparrows gardens. Robert Glover, an industrious antiquary of the sixteenth century; his nephew, Thomas Miller, eminent as a herald and genealogist; and Dr. John Wallis, the celebrated mathematician, were natives of the place. Ashford confers the inferior title of Baron on the family of Keppel, Earls of Albemarle.

ASHFORD (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of STAINES, hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Chertsey; containing 524 inhabitants. It comprises 1378*a.* 3*r.* 14*p.*, of which the greater portion is arable, and about 100 acres meadow and pasture; the surface is generally flat, and the soil a gravel resting on blue clay; the surrounding scenery is pleasing, and is enlivened by several handsome residences. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Staines; impropiator, J. Irving Esq. The great tithes were commuted in 1809 for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act; and the vicarial tithes have since been commuted for a rent-charge of £100; there is a glebe of 26½ acres. The church is a small edifice, built in 1796, at the expense of the principal inhabitants. A Sunday school is endowed with the interest of £438. 3. 8½., three and a half per cent. consols.

ASHFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of ILTON, union of CHARD, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 13 inhabitants.

ASHFORD-BOWDLER (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Ludlow; containing 96 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the river Teme, and intersected by the road from Ludlow to Worcester, comprises about 370 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and the remainder pasture. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £55; patron, C. Walker, Esq., of Ashford Court.

ASHFORD-CARBONELL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, partly in the hundred of MUNSLOW, but chiefly in that of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 3¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Ludlow; containing 266 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Little Hereford.

ASHFORDBY, or ASFORDBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (W.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 482 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1800 acres, of which two-thirds are grazing, and one-third arable land, and is situated on the river Wreak, which communicates with the Leicester and Melton-Mowbray navigation, and over which is a bridge. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. A. Burnaby, the present incumbent, and his two sisters, with a net income of £455: the tithes were commuted for land in 1761, under an inclosure act. In 1769, Morris Cam left £100 towards the support of a school; and from other bequests a small sum is distributed among the poor.

ASH-HOLM, a township, in the parish of LAMBLEY, union of HALTWHISTLE, W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 19½ miles (W. by S.) from Hexham. This place, which is snugly seated under banks clothed with luxuriant woods, and where the course of the Tyne is suddenly intercepted by a high promontory called the Shafthill, was the seat of the ancient family of Wallace, whose honourable career and success in life have enabled them to extend their property in the county far beyond the limits of their patrimonial estate: James Wallace was attorney-general in 1780, and his son Thomas also filled offices of state, for which he was, in 1828, created Baron Wallace of Knaresdale. The Romans had a signal station here, the area of which is rectangular, but only 35 yards by 24, being defended on three sides by steep escarpments, and on the east, and partly on the south, being cut off from the main land by a ditch 60 feet wide and 25 deep. Here is a good mill-stone quarry.

ASHILL (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of WAYLAND, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. W.) from Watton; containing 637 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2991 acres, of which 2367 are arable, and 584 meadow and pasture; the soil is in some parts light and gravelly, and in others strong and clayey. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 13. 6½; patron and incumbent, Rev. B. Edwards. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £979; a rent-charge of £21 is paid to the rector of Great Cressingham; and there are 30 acres of glebe, with a good glebe-house. The church is chiefly in the later style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. At the time of the inclosure 73 acres of land were allotted to the poor.

ASHILL, a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. W.) from Ilminster; containing 438 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the road from Bridport to Taunton and Tiverton, belonged in the reign of Edward II. to Thomas de Multon, who obtained for the inhabitants the grant of a weekly market on Wednesday, and of fairs on the festivals of the Virgin Mary, St. Simon, and St. Jude. A portion of ground, which for many years has been contested by the parishes of Ashill and Broadway, was in 1685 the scene of a conflict between Monmouth on his retreat from Sedgemoor and a party of the king's forces. The parish comprises by admeasurement 1790 acres of profitable land, under good cultivation; the scenery is pleasantly diversified, and in some parts enriched with wood. A fair is still held in the village on the Wednesday in Easter-week. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 0. 10.; patron, the Prebendary of Ashill in the Cathedral of Wells, whose appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £204. 10. 8., and who has a glebe of 60 acres; the vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £118. 13. 4., and there are 24 acres of land attached, at Bewley Down, Dorset. There are some remains of an ancient seat of Nicholas Wadham, founder of Wadham College, Oxford; and a chalybeate spring is carefully preserved.

ASHINGDON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 2¼ miles (N. by W.) from Rochford; containing 119 inhabitants. This place is thought by the best writers to have been the scene of the battle of Assandune, in 1016, in which Canute the Dane, after a sanguinary contest, vanquished the Saxons under Edmund Ironside. The parish comprises 1165*a. 1r. 11p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 4.; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Nottidge, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £285, and who has 20 acres of glebe. A national school for Ashingdon and South Fambridge was established in 1832.

ASHINGTON, with SHEEPWASH, a township, in the parish of BOTHAL, union of MORPETH, E. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4½ miles (E. by N.) from Morpeth; containing 76 inhabitants. The persons who are first named in the records as connected with the property here, are the Morwicks, Lumleys, and Fitzhughs; the family of Essendon (the modern Ashington) are mentioned as lords of the manor at the close of the 13th century; and the most important landowners since that period have been the families of Coventre and Fenwick, from whom the place has descended to the Duke of Portland. The township comprises 583 acres of land, of which 444 are tillage, 112 grass, and 27 wood; the grounds are very beautiful in some places by the side of the river Wansbeck, which is navigable for keels and small boats as far as Sheepwash, where it is crossed by a bridge. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £109. 6.

ASHINGTON (St. Vincent), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of STONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Ilchester; comprising by computation 560 acres, and containing 71 inhabitants. The parish is finely wooded and fertile, the land rising gently from the river Yeo, which bounds it on the east and north; and looking over a rich and extensive vale, the view is terminated at unequal distances by a bold and beautiful range of hills from the south-east to the north-west. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Williams: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £125, and there are 32 acres of glebe, with a house. The church is a small neat structure, having a turret with two bells; at the eastern end, on the outside, is a small niche, wherein are three human figures, which admit a conjecture that they refer to the history of St. Vincent, who was burnt alive at Valentia, in Spain, in the year 304.

ASHINGTON cum BUNCTON (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of THAKEHAM, hundred of WEST GRINSTEAD, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 5 miles (N. W.) from Steyning, on the road from London to Worthing; containing 282 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 5.; net income, £189; patron, Duke of Norfolk. The church is in the later English style, and has some fragments of stained-glass in its windows. At Buncton is a chapel of ease, with remains of Norman arches on the outside of the chancel.

ASHLEY cum SILVERLEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of CHEVELEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3¼ miles (E. by S.) from Newmarket; containing 417 inhabitants. These parishes, which are consolidated into one, comprise 2143*a. 3r. 25p.* At Silverley are only a farm-house and two cottages, with the tower of the ruined church; and at Ashley are the ruins of an old church situated in the burial-ground. The living is a rectory, with the vicarage of Silverley annexed, valued in the king's books at £8; patron, Marquess of Bute; net income, £150, arising out of 272 acres of land allotted in lieu of tithes on the inclosure. The church is a small plain edifice.

ASHLEY, a township, in the parish of BOWDON, union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of CHESHIRE, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Nether Knutsford; containing 377 inhabitants. Ashley Hall, the ancient manorial mansion, which is approached by a fine avenue of stately walnut trees, is remarkable for containing eleven original portraits of gentlemen of this county, ancestors of the Grosvenors, Cholmondeleys, and other families, who formed a club during the progress of the Pretender through the north, in 1715, when the expediency of joining his standard was debated, and the casting vote against the measure was given by Thomas Asheton, the owner of the mansion. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges, amounting to £205, of which £197 are payable to the Bishop of Chester, and £8 to the vicar of the parish.

ASHLEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Rockingham; containing 323 inhabitants. On the north the parish is bounded by the river Welland, which separates it from Leicestershire; and it consists of 1182*a. 2r. 20p.*, of a rich and fertile soil. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17; net income, £320; patron and incumbent, Rev. Richard Farrer. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1806. The produce of an estate, amounting to £14 per annum, is applied towards repairing the church and highways, and the relief of the poor.

ASHLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of STOCKBRIDGE, hundred of KING'S SOMBOURN, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (S. S. E.) from Stockbridge; containing 102 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1857 acres, of which 1270 are arable, 400 wood, and 187 pasture, waste, &c.; the soil rests chiefly on chalk. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 16. 3.; patron and incumbent, Rev. R. C. Taunton, who supports a school. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £350, and the glebe comprises about 40 acres. The church is an ancient and curious, but small structure, in the early English style. There are vestiges of several Roman camps, and a circular intrenchment of considerable dimensions, supposed to be British, or Danish.

ASHLEY, a tything, in the parish of MILTON, union of LYMINGTON, hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Lymington and S. divisions of HANTS; containing 552 inhabitants.

ASHLEY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of MARKET-DRAYTON, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Market-Drayton; containing 853 inhabitants. It comprises 2800*a. 3r. 32p.* of fertile land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of Thomas Kinnersley and H. C. Meynell, Esqs.; the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £370, and the glebe comprises 40 acres. The church is a handsome structure in the early English style, and contains splendid monuments and effigies of the six Lords Gerard, the last of whom died in 1807; and also an elegant monument by Chantry to Thomas Kinnersley, Esq., father of the present patron. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Roman Catholics. A national school is supported by subscription, and there is a school in connexion with the Roman Catholic chapel.

ASHLEY, (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of TETBURY, hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Malmesbury; containing 96 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 16. 5½., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £210, and there are 34 acres of glebe. A school is chiefly supported by Mr. Bucknall Estcourt and the rector.

ASHLEY GREEN, a hamlet, in the parish of CHESHAM, union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 536 inhabitants.

ASHLEY-HAY, a township, in the union of BELPER, parish of WIRKSWORTH, hundred of APPLETREE,

S. division of the county of DERBY, 1¼ mile (S.) from Wirksworth; containing 272 inhabitants.

ASHLEY LODGE, an extra-parochial liberty, with those of Godshill Wood and New Grounds, in the union and hundred of FORDINGBRIDGE, Ringwood and S. divisions of HANTS, 3½ miles (E.) from Fordingbridge, on the borders, and partly within the limits, of the New Forest; containing 265 inhabitants.

ASHLEY, NORTH, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of RINGWOOD, Ringwood and S. divisions of HANTS; containing 237 inhabitants.

ASHLING, EAST, a tything, in the parish of FUNTINGTON, union of WESTBOURNE, hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 310 inhabitants.

ASHLING, WEST, a tything, in the parish of FUNTINGTON, union of WESTBOURNE, hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 455 inhabitants.

ASHMANHAUGH (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of TUNSTEAD and HAPPING, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Coltishall; containing 180 inhabitants. It comprises 665*a. 2r. 23p.*, of which 571 acres are arable, 29 pasture and meadow, and 37 woodland. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Lady Preston; net income, £42; appropriator, Bishop of Norwich, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £145, and who has a glebe of 5½ acres. The church, which is chiefly in the early style, was thoroughly repaired and new-pewed, and the tower rebuilt, in 1840. The Misses Preston support a school.

ASHMANSWORTH (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of KINGSCLERE, hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Newbury; comprising 1798 acres by measurement, and containing 220 inhabitants. The soil is strong clay, mixed with flint stones, and rests on chalk, the district being a portion of the high range of chalk hills which form the northern boundary of the South Downs. The living is annexed to the rectory of East Woodhay: the tithes have been commuted for £371. 3. 4., and the glebe comprises 26 acres. A national school is supported by subscription.

ASHMORE (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of SHAFTESBURY, hundred of CRANBORNE, Shaston division of DORSET, 5 miles (S. E.) from Shaftesbury; containing 242 inhabitants. It comprises 2342 acres, of which the soil is heavy and flinty, and the ground elevated, rising 720 feet above the level of the sea. The living, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 19. 9½.; net income, £389; patron, Rev. C. Chisholme. The glebe consists of about 30 acres. The church, erected in 1433, is a plain edifice of stone and flint.

ASHOLT, county of SOMERSET.—See AISHOLT.

ASHORN, a township, in the parish of NEWBOLD-PACEY, union of STRATFORD-ON-AVON, Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 6½ miles (N. N. W.) from Kington; containing 274 inhabitants.

ASHOVER (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CHESTERFIELD, partly in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, but chiefly in that of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Chesterfield; containing, with the chapelry of Dethwick-Lea, and the hamlet of Holloway, 3482 inhabitants. This place, formerly a market-town, occupies a pleasant site near the rivers Amber and Milntown, and within three miles of the North-Midland railway, and, according to Domesday-book, had a church at the time of the Conquest. The parish comprises 9700*a.* 2*r.* 37*p.*, of which 62 acres are waste; the soil is various, and the lands are in good cultivation. Coal, iron-stone, mill-stone, grit-stone, and lead-ore are found; and the Gregory lead-mine, 300 yards deep, is said to have once been the richest in the kingdom, though its present produce is inconsiderable. The manufacture of stockings is carried on to a small extent, and the working of tambour lace affords employment to the greater part of the female population. Fairs for cattle and sheep are held on the 25th of April and the 15th of Oct. Ashover is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40*s.*: constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 3. 1½; net income, £481; patron, the Rev. Joseph Nodder. The tithes were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1776, and the glebe comprises 150 acres. The church is a spacious edifice, built in 1419, with a very handsome spire, and contains a Norman font of curious design, and several monuments to the family of Babington. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and a school is endowed with £23 per annum.

ASHOW (St. MARY), a parish, in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, union, and S. division of the county of WARWICK, 2½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Kenilworth; containing 172 inhabitants. The parish contains by measurement 1000 acres, of which about 800 are arable and pasture, and 200 woodland; the soil is chiefly red sand and clay. It is intersected by the river Avon. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 1., and in the patronage of Lord Leigh: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £216. 17., and the glebe consists of about 12 acres.

ASHPERTON (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of LEDBURY, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 5¼ miles (N. W. by W.) from Ledbury; containing 604 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1741 acres, and is intersected by the road from Leominster to Ledbury, and the new canal from Ledbury to Hereford. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Stretton-Grandsome: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £350. 15.; and there is a quarter of an acre of glebe, on which a school-house for boys has been built by the present vicar. The parliamentary army was stationed at a place in the parish, still called Cromwell's Walls.

ASHPRINGTON (St. DAVID), a parish, in the union of TOTNES, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (S. E.) from Totnes; containing 588 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises about 2380 acres, is intersected by the old road to Dartmouth, and washed by the Hareburne and the Dart, which latter river brings up colliers and coasters: ochre and iron are frequently met with;

and slate, dunstone, and limestone abound. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £29. 1. 8.; net income, £520; patron, Rev. G. T. Carwithen. The glebe consists of 25 acres.

ASHREIGNEY, or RING'S ASH (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of TORRINGTON, hundred of NORTH TAWTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Chulmleigh; containing 1088 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. T. Johnson: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £450, and there are 70 acres of glebe. A national school is endowed with £10 per annum.

ASHSTED, a hamlet, in the parish and union of ASTON, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEM-LINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK. This place, which adjoins the town of Birmingham on the north-east, consists of several good streets of well-built houses, and some pleasant detached cottages and villas. At the extremity of Great Brooke-street are the Vauxhall gardens, where concerts and displays of fireworks take place during the summer; and in the same street are the barracks, erected soon after the Birmingham riots in 1791, a handsome range of building, with a riding-school, hospital, and magazine, also a spacious area for the exercise of cavalry, and a smaller for parade. From its proximity to Birmingham, the hamlet participates in the trade and manufactures of that town; there are also a large glass-house, flour-mills, and various other works, with several wharfs on the line of the Birmingham canal. Adjoining the barracks is a proprietary episcopal chapel, dedicated to St. James, formerly the dwelling-house of Dr. Ash, from whom the hamlet takes its name. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £210; patrons, the Bishop of Lichfield and others, as trustees. Here is a national school, towards the erection of which the Society granted £200.

ASHTHEAD (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of EPSOM, Second division of the hundred of COPTHORNE, W. division of SURREY, 2 miles (S. W. by S.) from Epsom; containing 618 inhabitants. It comprises 2516*a.* 25*p.*, and is pleasantly situated on the road from London, by Dorking, to Bognor and Worthing. A small fair is held on the 4th of May. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Hon. Fulk Greville Howard and Hon. Mrs. Howard: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £549. 12. 6., and there are 12½ acres of glebe. The church is a very neat building, beautifully situated in Ashtead Park. A charity school is endowed with £10 per annum, and a school on the national plan is chiefly supported by the Hon. Col. and Mrs. Howard. An hospital for six poor widows was founded by Lady Diana Fielding, and endowed with property producing £32. 7. per annum. Here is a mineral spring, the water of which is similar to that of the Epsom wells. A Roman encampment may be traced round what is now the churchyard and part of Ashtead Park; and the great Roman road by Noviomagus (now Woodcote Park) passes along the south side of the parish, and is called the "Stane-street causeway." Sir Robert Howard, the poet, resided here in the time of Charles II., by whom, it is said, he was often visited.

ASHTON, a township, in the parish of TARVIN, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Chester; containing 401 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £190. 10., of which £109 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, and £81. 10. to the vicar of the parish.

ASHTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of St. THOMAS, hundred of EXMINSTER, Teign-bridge and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Chudleigh; containing 319 inhabitants. It comprises 1726a. 3r. 5p., of which about 200 acres are furze and fir plantations. The sudden inundations of the river Teign, which bounds the parish on the east, frequently occasion much damage. Several mines of manganese are worked by contractors from Cornwall, who pay to the lord of the manor a duty on the tonnage, and large quantities of the mineral are supplied to the Manchester and other manufacturers, for bleaching their goods. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and incumbent, Rev. George Ware, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £256, and who has a glebe of 50 acres. The church contains a very finely-carved wooden screen and rood-loft.

ASHTON, with EYE-MORETON, a township, in the parish of EYE, union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Leominster; containing 294 inhabitants.

ASHTON, with LEA, COTTAM, and INGOL, a township, in the parish and union of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Preston; containing 710 inhabitants.

ASHTON, with STODDAY, a township, in the parish and union of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Lancaster; containing 185 inhabitants. Ashton Hall, the property of the Duke of Hamilton, is a quadrangular edifice, with a projecting wing to the east, and a square tower with angular turrets on the west; it was probably erected in the fourteenth century, but the numerous alterations and additions which it has undergone, have left little of the ancient baronial mansion: the surrounding scenery is highly beautiful. The improper tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £22. 2. 1. A free school has an income of nearly £50 per annum.

ASHTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of POTTERS PURY, hundred of CLELEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 7 miles (S. by E.) from Northampton; containing 417 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the south by the river Tow, comprises by measurement 1100 acres of highly fertile land, and is situated near the Grand Junction canal, and intersected by the London and Birmingham railway. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £275, arising from 235 acres of land, allotted in lieu of tithes on the inclosure of the parish. The church is a very ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

ASHTON, a hamlet, in the parish of UFFORD, union of STAMFORD, soke of PETERBOROUGH, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Stamford; containing 101 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1796.

ASHTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of OUNDE, hundred of POLBROOK, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by N.) from Oundle; containing 172 inhabitants; and comprising 1308a. 3r. 20p. It is situated on the right bank of the river Nene, and is intersected by the road from Oundle to Peterborough. A school was erected in 1708, by Elizabeth Creed, under the will of her daughter Jemima, who endowed it with land producing £44 per annum; and it has also a fund of £200 in the three per cent. consols.

ASHTON, BLANK.—See ASTON BLANK.

ASHTON, a tything, in the parish and hundred of BISHOP'S-WALTHAM, union of DRXFORD, DRXFORD and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 310 inhabitants.

ASHTON, COLD (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING, hundred of PUCKLE-CHURCH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Bath; containing 414 inhabitants. In the memorable battle of Lansdown, the parliamentarians, who had marched from Bath to attack the royalist forces entrenched on Furze hill, were, after a severe conflict, defeated and driven up the valley of Ashton lodge, where in the hour of victory, the gallant Sir Beville Granville, who commanded the royalists, received a mortal wound, of which he expired in the rectory-house of this place. The parish is situated on the road from Bath to Gloucester, and contains by measurement 2400 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 1. 8.; net income, £492; patron, Rev. Edward Batchelor. The glebe consists of 88 acres. The church was erected in 1406, by Thomas Key, Esq., to perpetuate the memory of the founder, and keys of a durable material are carved over every window and door, and on many parts of the interior of the building. A school is partly supported by subscription. The venerable Bishop Latimer was incumbent of the parish prior to his advancement to the episcopal dignity, and in the church is an ancient stone pulpit, in which he preached. The descendants of the celebrated Sir Richard Whittington, lord mayor of London in the years 1397, 1406, and 1419, reside here, in an old mansion bearing date 1664.

ASHTON-GIFFORD, a township, in the parish of CODFORD-ST. PETER, union of WARMINSTER, hundred of HEYTESBURY, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Heytesbury; containing 141 inhabitants.

ASHTON-IN-MACKERFIELD, a chapelry, in the parish of WINWICK, union of WIGAN, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Warrington; containing 6706 inhabitants. This chapelry comprises the townships of Ashton and Haydock, the former of which contains 5557a. 2r. 5p., with a population of 5410, and the latter 3105a. 39p., with a population of 1296: one of the great lines of road from London to Edinburgh runs through the village, and other facilities for communication are furnished by the Sankey canal, the Leeds and Liverpool canal, and the Liverpool and Manchester railroad. The place has been long famous for the manufacture of locks and hinges, and employment is also afforded to the inhabitants in several cotton and other manufactories, and in the working of extensive and valuable coal-mines. A fair is held on the 21st and 22nd of Sept. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the rector of Winwick, with a net income of £181, partly arising from 24 acres of glebe: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £600. The chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas, was rebuilt in 1715, enlarged in 1784, and again in 1815; and an additional chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has been lately erected at Downall Green, to which a district was assigned in 1838. There are places of worship for Roman Catholics, Unitarians, Quakers, Independents, and Wesleyans. The Sexeley Green free grammar school was founded, in 1588, by Robert Byrchall, and is endowed with £50 a year. Many curious fossils are found in the coal-mines.

ASHTON-KEYNES (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of CRICKLADE and WOOTTON-BASSET, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Cricklade and N. divisions of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Cricklade; containing, with the chapelry of Leigh, 1332 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16; net income, £325; patron and impropriator, J. Pitt, Esq. There is a chapel of ease at Leigh; and a Lancasterian school, commenced in 1823, is partly supported by contributions.

ASHTON, LONG (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bristol; containing, with the hamlets of Kingcot, Providence, Yanleigh, Bower-Ashton, and Rounham, 1926 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 4112 acres, of which 1132 are arable, 2328 pasture, and 428 woodland, waste, &c. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 17. 11.; net income, £117; patrons and impropriators, Sir J. Smyth, Bart. and W. G. Langton, Esq. There were formerly a chapel and a hermitage at Rownan Ferry, in the parish. In 1661, Francis Derrick gave a piece of land producing about £8 per annum; in 1760, Anne Smyth left a rent-charge of £10; and, in 1822, John Stanton gave £100; which funds are applied towards the support of a school, further maintained by subscription. On the eastern point of Ashton hill are two intrenchments, called Burwalls and Stokeleigh, now overgrown with wood, which appear to have been Roman camps; and recently, in forming the line of the Bristol and Exeter railway, the foundation of the wall of an ancient village, about a quarter of a mile in extent, was discovered, with numerous coins of Constantine and Severus, and domestic utensils.

ASHTON, STEEPLE, cum SEMINGTON (ST. MARY), a parish, partly in the union of WESTBURY and WHORWELSDOWN, and partly in that of MELKSHAM, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, Whorwelsdown and N. divisions of WILTS; containing, with the chapelry of Semington and the tythings of West Ashton, Hinton, and Littleton, 1941 inhabitants, of whom 848 are in the village of Steeple Ashton, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Trowbridge. This place derived the adjunct by which it is distinguished from other localities of the same name, from the lofty spire of its church, which was first injured, and then struck down by lightning in 1670. It was formerly of some importance, and had the grant of a market in the reign of Edward III., which was confirmed in that of Richard II., with the addition of an annual fair. In the time of Henry VIII. Leland states that the clothing trade was carried on here to a very considerable extent, but it has ceased to exist; the market also has been for many years discontinued, but the fair, though now very inconsiderable, is still held on the 18th of Sept. Steeple Ashton contains by estimation 5400 acres, of which 2120 are arable, 2660 pasture, and 540 woodland; and Semington consists of 1195a. 1r. 24p., of which 213 acres are arable, and 923 pasture. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 2. 6.; net income, £852; patron, the Master of Magdalene College, Cambridge, who is restricted in his presentation to one of three senior foundation fellows. The church is a spacious structure, in the later English style, built between the years 1480 and 1500, and has a lofty square embattled tower at the west end, crowned with pinnacles, and a north and south porch of elegant design. There is a chapel at Semington, which probably was in early times a distinct parish; it is in the later English style, and was built before the Reformation. John Hicks bequeathed £5 per annum for teaching children, and John Togwell a further sum for the same purpose, which have been laid out in the purchase of £519. 10. 7., three per cent. consols.; and a national school was erected in 1836. The parish is remarkable for fossils of the coral-rag formation.

ASHTON-UNDER-HILL (ST. BARBARA), a parish, in the union of EVESHAM, partly in the Upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, but chiefly in the hundred of TIBALDSTONE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Tewkesbury; containing 342 inhabitants, and comprising about 1300 acres. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Beckford, and the impropriation belongs to W. Wakeman and J. Blackburne, Esqs.: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1773.

ASHTON-UNDER-LINE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, market-town, parliamentary borough, and the head of a union, in the hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 60 miles (S. E.) from Lancaster, 7 (E.) from Manchester, and 187 (N. W.) from London, on the road to Sheffield; comprising the townships or districts of Ashton town, Audenshaw, Hartshead with Stalybridge, and Knott Lanes; and containing 46,304 inhabitants, of whom 22,678 are in Ashton town. This place, in ancient records styled Ashtown sub Lima, derives its name from the tree so called, and the adjunct by which it is distinguished from other places of the same name in the county, from its situation below the Lyme of Cheshire. Its original proprietors, the Asshetons, a family distinguished in the early periods of English history, exercised the power of life and death; and a field near the old hall, called Gallows' Meadow, was the place of execution. In the reign of Henry VI. a descendant of that family, still inheriting extraordinary privileges, clad in black armour and mounted on a charger, with a numerous retinue, levied a penalty on his tenants, for neglecting to clear their lands from a pernicious weed, then called *Car guld*s, on the discovery of which among his corn every farmer was liable to forfeit a wether sheep. In commemoration of this, the ceremony of "riding the black lad" still takes place on Easter-Monday, when the effigy of a man in black armour is placed on horseback, and led in procession through the town; it is then dismantled and hung up at the cross in the old marketplace, and, after having been shot at, is immersed in a stagnant pool by the populace, who return through the principal streets, throwing it at those they meet.

The town is situated on an eminence rising from the northern bank of the river Tame; the old streets are narrow and irregular, but those recently formed are spacious, and contain substantial and handsome houses. It is well paved, and lighted with gas, and is rapidly improving under the management of local commissioners: a company has also been formed for supplying the town with water. A neat theatre is occasionally opened, and a concert-room has been built. The principal branches of manufacture are those of calico, gingham, and muslin, and there are numerous mills for spinning the finer kinds of yarn: the manufacture of hats is also carried on extensively in the district. The neighbourhood abounds with excellent coal, which is conveyed to all parts of the kingdom by the Ashton, Huddersfield, and Peak Forest canals, which unite here. The market, which, previously to the establishment of the cotton trade, had fallen into disuse, was restored by act of parliament in 1828, under which act a convenient market-place has been erected: it is held on Wednesday and Saturday, and fairs take place on March 23rd, April 29th, and on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Swithin and St. Martin, chiefly for horses and cattle. The town was formerly incorporated, but is now within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who sit every Monday and Wednesday, and hold a petty-session, every alternate week, for the Middleton division of the hundred. Its internal regulation is entrusted to the superintendence of the local commissioners, who have established a police force; and other constables are appointed at the autumnal court leet of the lord of the manor. This court is held in April and Oct. for the recovery of debts under 40s.: at the former period a mayor is appointed and sworn into office; which custom, having been discontinued about 20 years, was revived on the passing of the Reform act, in order to provide a returning officer. The inhabitants are empowered to return a member to parliament, the right of election being vested exclusively in the £10 householders; the borough is co-extensive with one of four divisions of the parish, called the Town division, and contains 1319 acres. A court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5 is held on the Thursday in every third week.

The parish comprises about 12,000 acres. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 13. 4.; net income, £1407; patron, Earl of Stamford and Warrington. The parochial church is a spacious structure, in the later English style, with a tower built in the reign of Henry V., but much altered by subsequent repairs: it sustained considerable injury from an accidental fire in 1821. The living of Mossley chapelry is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the Rector, with a net income of £127: the chapel is a plain building erected in 1755 on land given by Sir Joseph Pickford, and enlarged in 1787. The chapel at Hey is dedicated to St. John: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £131; patron, Rector of Ashton. St. Peter's, a handsome edifice in the same style, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, was erected in 1821, at the expense of £12,688. 13. 6., defrayed by the Parliamentary Commissioners: the living is a perpetual curacy, and has an ecclesiastical district annexed to it; net income, £137; patron, Rector of Ashton. A church has also been erected at Stalybridge, in the parish; and there are places of worship for Independents and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, also a large building for the followers of Johanna Southcote. Several schools in the parish are aided with charitable funds: one, for which a school-house was built by subscription, is endowed with £40 per annum. The poor law union of which this town is the head, comprises 9 parishes or places in the county of Chester, and 4 in the county of Lancaster, and contains a population of 101,206. The Roman road from Manchester to Saddleworth may still be traced in the vicinity: near the old hall are the remains of an ancient prison, and in the old market-place those of a cross.

ASHTON-UPON-MERSEY (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N.) from Altrincham; comprising the townships of Ashton and Sale, the former containing 1105, and the latter, which is locally situated in the parish of Great Budworth, 1309 inhabitants. A court leet is held by the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, who is lord of the manor. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 4. 7.; net income, £608; patron and incumbent, Rev. C. B. Sowerby. There are places of worship for Calvinists, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, and Unitarians; and in the township of Sale is a school endowed with land and tenements producing £25. 15. per annum. John Okell, Esq. left £80; Thomas Ashton, Esq. £40; and Mrs. Safe, £23; the proceeds of which are distributed among the poor.

ASHTON, WEST, a tything, in the parish of STEEPL-ASHTON, union of WESTBURY and WHORWELSDOWN, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, Whorwelsdown and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 307 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £413. 15., of which £410 are payable to the vicar of the parish, and £3. 15. to the rector of Trowbridge. A school is supported by Mrs. Long.

ASHURST, a parish, in the union of TONBRIDGE, hundred of WASHINGTON, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Tonbridge Wells; containing 224 inhabitants. It is bounded by the river Medway, and intersected by the road from East Grinstead to Tonbridge Wells, and contains about 700 acres. The surface is finely undulated, commanding from the higher grounds some extensive and interesting views, and the soil varies from light sandy to strong clay: there are some quarries of soft sandstone for building. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 4. 7., and in the gift of the Countess of Amhurst, with a net income of £164: the glebe consists of 28 acres. The church, an ancient building, was, previously to the Reformation, in high repute for the sanctity of its ancient rood-loft.

ASHURST, a parish, in the union of STEYNING, hundred of WEST GRINSTEAD, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 3 miles (N.) from Steyning; containing 427 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 2236a. 1r. 14p., is bounded on the north and east by the river Adur, which is navigable to Binesbridge; and the road from Horsham to Brighton, through Steyning, runs through it. The living is a rectory not in charge; net income, £268; patrons, President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is in the early English style, with later additions, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, at the west end of which is a low tower surmounted by an obtuse spire.

ASHWATER (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of HOLSWORTHY, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Holsworthy and N. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (S. E. by S.) from Holsworthy; containing 1046 inhabitants. This parish, which is separated from the adjacent parishes of Bradwood-Widger and Virginstow by the river Cary, forms a square of nearly four miles; the soil is very inferior, the substratum clay, and the land generally hilly. Considerable quantities of freestone of excellent quality are obtained in the neighbourhood. Fairs for cattle are held on the first Tuesday in May, and the Monday next after the 1st of August. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 6. 8.; net income, £437; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. Melhuish. The glebe comprises 70 acres. The church, which is a handsome structure, with a tower sixty feet in height, has been repaired and beautified, and contains some interesting monuments to the Carey family, and a curious ancient font.

ASHWELL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of ROYSTON, hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 4½ miles (N. N. E.) from Baldock; containing 1235 inhabitants. This place derives its name from a well or spring issuing from a rock at the southern extremity of the village, surrounded with ash trees, and forming the source of the small river Rhee. At the time of the Norman survey it was a borough and market-town, having four annual fairs; it was also a royal demesne, and a small manor within the parish was held by Walter Somoner, in petit serjeantry, by the service of providing spits and roasting meat in the king's kitchen, on the day of his coronation. The parish contains about 4200 acres; the surface is diversified, and the soil chalky. A considerable trade in malt is carried on, the barley produced in the neighbourhood being of very superior quality. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £22. 3. 6½.; patron and appropriator, Bishop of London: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £690. 18. 2., and there is a good glebe-house. The church is a spacious structure, with a tower and spire 175 feet high. A free school, now conducted on the national plan, was founded and endowed under the will of Henry Colborn or Colebron, dated in 1655, who bequeathed £1000 in trust to the Merchant Tailors' Company, by whom the master is appointed; and there are several charities for distributing bread among the poor, and apprenticing children. On Harborough hill, in the parish, are the remains of a quadrangular encampment, probably an exploratory station of the Romans. The Rev. Ralph Cudworth, D.D., Master of Christ's College, Cambridge, and author of the "Intellectual System," was vicar of the parish, and died here in 1688.

ASHWELL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of OAKHAM, hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Oakham; containing 223 inhabitants. It comprises 1800 acres by measurement; the soil is fertile, and a coarse kind of stone is quarried for inferior buildings, and for the roads. The Melton-Mowbray and Oakham canal passes within a mile of the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 16. 3., and in the gift of Viscount Downe: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £412, and the glebe comprises 130 acres. The church is a neat substantial structure, in the later English style. There are two schools.

ASHWELTHORPE (All Saints), a parish, in the union and hundred of DEPWADE, E. division of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Wymondham; containing 469 inhabitants. The road from New Buckenham to Norwich runs through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Wreningham cum Nayland annexed, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £648; patron, Lord Berners. The incumbent resides in the hall, an ancient residence of the Knyvett family, moated on three sides. The church, which is chiefly in the decorated style, consists of a nave and chancel, with a chapel on the north side, and a square embattled tower; in the chancel is an altar-tomb, on which are the effigies of Sir Edward and Lady de Thorpe. A schoolroom was lately erected by the Hon. and Rev. Robert Wilson, the rector.

ASHWICK (St. James), a parish, in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of KILMERSDON, E. division of SOMERSET, 3¾ miles (N. by E.) from Shepton-Mallet; comprising 1527*a. 2r. 34p.*, and containing 945 inhabitants. There are many quarries, supplying a material for building and for making lime. At the village of Oakhill, which stands partly in this parish, and partly in those of Stoke Lane and Shepton-Mallet, are some good residences, and a public brewery; and the road from Bath to Exeter, and another from Bristol to Weymouth, run through the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £113; patron, Vicar of Kilmersdon; impropiator, J. Twyford Jolliffe, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £28. 10., and those of the incumbent for £59. 15.; the glebe consists of 2½ acres. The curacy was separated from the vicarage of Kilmersdon in 1826, at which time also the church was rebuilt, with the exception of the tower; it is a neat structure, accommodating about 550 persons. There are places of worship for Independents, Unitarians, and Methodists. On the south-western side of the parish, near the Fosseyway, is a Roman camp, with a double intrenchment, called Masbury Castle.

ASHWICKEN (All Saints), a parish, in the union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Lynn-Regis; containing 78 inhabitants. It comprises 1178*a. 2r.*, of which 638 acres are arable, 378 pasture and meadow, 150 heath, and 12 woodland; the surface is a good deal undulated. The living is a rectory, with that of Leziat annexed, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Freeman. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £238, and the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church is chiefly in the later English style, with a square tower.

ASHWORTH, a chapelry, in the parish of MIDDLETON, union of BURY, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3½ miles (W.) from Rochdale; containing 325 inhabitants. It comprises by estimation 1922 acres; the soil is fertile, and the substratum abounds with coal, of which a mine is in operation. Stone of good quality for building is also procured in abundance, and there is a fulling-mill in the township. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £119; patron, W. Egerton, Esq. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £15, and the glebe comprises 62 acres. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, was rebuilt on a larger scale in 1789; and in 1837, the chancel, which was part of the original building, was taken down, and the east end of the church was considerably enlarged. A school is partly supported by Mr. Egerton.

ASKE, a township, in the parish of EASBY, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Richmond; containing 92 inhabitants. The township comprises 1610 acres of well-cultivated land; the soil is good and productive, and the scenery embraces fine and varied prospects of the surrounding country. Aske Hall, one of the seats of the Earl of Zetland, is a spacious and elegant castellated mansion, situated on rising ground in a large and beautiful park, and embosomed in noble woods of fine old timber, and pleasure-grounds of varied surface, tastefully and thickly planted: many of the views enjoyed from the residence are very extensive and of striking beauty. The noble earl's inferior title is Baron Dundas, of the manor of Aske, conferred in 1794.

ASKERNE, a township, in the parish of CAMPSALL, union of DONCASTER, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Doncaster; containing 468 inhabitants. Askerne, during the present century, has risen from an inconsiderable village, into an elegant and fashionable watering-place: it is pleasantly situated near the road, on a rocky acclivity, rising gently from the foot of an extensive plain; and its houses, hotels, and bathing establishments, surrounded by gardens, orchards, and plantations, all agreeably harmonising together, give it an interesting and commanding appearance. Here is a sheet of water, called Askerne pool, covering seven acres, a few yards from which rises a sulphureous spring, highly celebrated for more than a century as a powerful remedy in scrofulous, rheumatic, and gouty complaints: it is also reputed for its virtue in dyspepsia, palsy, and pulmonary consumption. Boarding-houses, and inns of the first description, have been erected for the accommodation of visitors. The tithes were commuted for land in 1814.

ASKERSWELL (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, hundred of EGGERTON, Bridport division of DORSET, 4 miles (E.) from Bridport; containing 233 inhabitants. It contains about 1200 acres; the soil is chalky, and the surface hilly. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9.2.6.; net income, £160; patron, Rev. James Cox. The glebe contains 23 acres, with a house.

ASKERTON, a township, in the parish of LANERCOST, union of BRAMPTON, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Brampton; containing 496 inhabitants. The castle, a small building with lofty turrets, situated on a rocky knoll on the southern bank of the rivulet Cambeck, and commanding a most extensive view of the adjacent country, is partly ruinous and used as stables, but much of it has been recently modernised in the interior, and the building is now inhabited by a farmer. It was in ruins in Camden's time, but was repaired by the Dacres in the 16th century, and over a mantel-piece in what was once the dining-hall is an inscription, "Tho. Carleton, Jun., 1575," the date of the repair. Askerton comprises the ancient parish of Kirk-Cambeck, the church of which was destroyed by the Scots in the reign of Edward II.; and the tithes are held on lease from the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The inhabitants attend the church of Lanercost for the performance of ecclesiastical rites.

ASKHAM, a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, within the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, locally in the South-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSET-LAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Tuxford; containing, with Rockley hamlet, 288 inhabitants. The parish contains about 1440 acres, of which the surface is undulated, and the soil clayey; the village is skirted on the north by the stream called North Beck, which is subject to inundations after heavy rains. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed, with that of Stokeham, to the vicarage of East Drayton: two acres of land, and the tithes of hops, form the principal value of the curacy. There are almshouses for six widows.

ASKHAM (St. PETER), a parish, in WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Penrith; containing 635 inhabitants. It comprises 4264 acres, of which 2049 are tithable, 2150 woods and commons, and 65 tithe-free; the surface is partly undulated and partly hilly, and the soil rests principally on limestone and peat. The river Lowther bounds the parish on the east, and the Dale Beck on the south. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £156; patron, and impropiator of the remainder of the great tithes, Earl of Lonsdale. The glebe comprises 56 acres. A school was endowed in 1813, with subscriptions amounting to £420, part of which has been vested in the purchase of land.

ASKHAM-BRYAN, or GREAT (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from York; containing 342 inhabitants. This place derives its name partly from Bryan Fitz-Alain, who held it of the honour of Richmond, paying 5s. per annum to the warden of the castle of that town: the families of Mowbray, Stapleton, and Grey have also owned the estates. The parish comprises by measurement 1808 acres, three-fourths of which are arable and the rest meadow, with some few plantations; the surface is flat, and the soil composed chiefly of gravel and clay. Contiguous to the church passes the York and North-Midland railway. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £120; patron, Colonel Croft, of Stillington Park. The tithes were commuted for land, by an inclosure act, in 1811. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £6 per annum. Several benefactions for the poor amount to about £20 a year. The parish is governed by the provisions of Gilbert's act.

ASKHAM-RICHARD, or LITTLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the AINSTY wapentake, union and W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Tadcaster; containing 232 inhabitants. In the 9th of Edward II. the priory of Burlington held this manor; and the patronage of the church was exercised by the nuns of Monkton till the dissolution, when the privilege was granted to the Vavasour family. The parish comprises by measurement 929 acres, of which about three-fourths are arable, and the remainder meadow or pasture; the surface is generally level, and the soil of a gravelly and clayey quality. The road from Leeds to York, and the York and North-

Midland railway cross each other near this place, where also is Askham Hall, the seat of Robert Swann, Esq. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.; net income, £200; patron, H. Croft, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land in 1813. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £4 per annum, left by Lady Hewley.

ASKRIGG, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of AYSGARTh, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 57 miles (W. N. W.) from York, and 247 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 726 inhabitants. The town is situated on an eminence rising from the northern bank of the river Ure, and upon the road from Richmond to Lancaster; the lands are almost entirely occupied as pasture, and the surrounding country exhibits some fine waterfalls and picturesque scenery. It was formerly a place of considerable note, but has fallen into decay; there is a wool-carding mill, and in the neighbourhood are lead-mines, but they are not very productive. The market is on Thursday; fairs are held on May 11th, July 11th and 12th, and Oct. 28th; and there is also a fair for general traffic and recreation on the first Thursday in June. By the act of the 2nd and 3rd of William IV. cap. 64, Askrigg was made a polling-place for the North riding. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron, Vicar of Aysgarth. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £84, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge. The chapel is an ancient structure, dedicated to St. Oswald. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The Yorebridge free grammar school, in 1601, by Anthony Besson, Esq., who endowed it with an inn, named the Black Swan, in York, and a plot of about two acres and a half of ground, called the Intack, producing upwards of £200 per annum, which is paid to the master, who has also a house and garden rent-free. A national school for boys and girls is supported by subscription. Almshouses were founded and endowed with £2000 three per cent. consols, in 1807, by Christopher Alderson, for six poor widows of the townships of Askrigg and Low Abbotside, each of whom has a stipend of £10 per annum.

ASKWITH, or ASQUITh, a township, in the parish of WESTON, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. W.) from Otley; containing, with Askwith-Moorside and Snowden, 398 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 3180 acres, and includes the hamlets of Upper and Lower Snowden: the village, which is scattered, is pleasantly situated on the northern acclivities of Wharfedale, and the river Wharfe winds its devious course on the south and west. The tithes were commuted for land, in 1779. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans.

ASLACKBY (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2½ miles (S. S. E.) from FOLKINGHAM; containing, with the hamlets of Graby and Milthorpe, 507 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London to Hull, and comprises by measurement 3420 acres; the soil is various, and the surface is pleasingly diversified with hill and dale, and richly embellished with wood. The river Forty-foot, which is navigable from Bourne to Boston, skirts the eastern extremity of the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 10. 7½.; net income, £453; patron and impropriator, R. F. Barstow, Esq. The tithes are compounded for the above sum, and the glebe comprises 39 acres. The church is a handsome edifice in the decorated and later English styles, with an embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. A parochial school is supported by subscription. Here was a preceptory of Knights Templars, which, on the abolition of their order, became a commandery of the Hospitallers.

ASLACTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of DEFWADE, E. division of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from Long Stratton; containing 404 inhabitants, and comprising about 1130 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £58; patron and impropriator, John Cooper, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £340. The church, which is chiefly in the perpendicular style, consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with a circular tower.

ASLACTON, a township, in the parish of WHATTON, union of BINGHAM, N. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 2¾ miles (E. by N.) from Bingham; containing 424 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1780. This is the birth-place of Cranmer, the Archbishop of Canterbury.

ASPALL, a parish, in the union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of the county of SUFFOLK, 1 mile (N. by W.) from Debenham; containing 132 inhabitants. The river Deben rises in this parish, which comprises 834a. 3r. 26p. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £149; patron, impropriator, and incumbent, Rev. John Chevallier, M.D., whose residence is the ancient moated mansion of Aspull Hall.

ASPATRIA (St. KENTIGERN), a market-town and parish, in the union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; comprising the townships of Aspatria with Brayton, Hayton with Medlo, and Oughterside with Allerby; and containing 1921 inhabitants, of whom 988 are in the township of Aspatria with Brayton, 9 miles (N. by E.) from Cockermouth. This village, which derives its name from Gospatrick, father of the first lord of Allerdale, extends for a considerable distance along the side of a hill, and has recently assumed somewhat the character of a town, by the erection of several good and substantial dwelling-houses; and has a pitched market for corn, which is held on Thursday. The parish, which comprises by measurement 7064 acres, and is intersected by the Maryport and Carlisle railway, is bounded on the west by the Solway Frith, and on the south-east and south by the river Ellen, and contains a vein of red freestone at Hayton, and coal at Oughterside. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 4. 2.; net income, £249; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Carlisle. The tithes were partially commuted in 1817 for land. The church was originally in the Norman style, but there are no remains of its ancient character except two arches. A place of worship for Independents was built in 1827. The parochial school was established in 1825 by subscription, and in 1837 a new school-room was built by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart. of Brayton House. In 1790 a barrow was opened in the vicinity, when the skeleton of a man, with the corroded remains of some military weapons, &c., was discovered.

ASPEDEN (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BUNTINGFORD, hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S.) from Buntingford; containing 529 inhabitants. It comprises about 1340 acres, of which the soil is clayey; and the rivulet Rib runs through the district, and falls into the Lea near Hertford. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books £15. 5. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £357; patron, Lady Mexborough. The glebe consists of nearly 23 acres. W. and R. Freeman, in 1668, and Mrs. Cater, in 1704, gave land for the education of children, now producing £17. 5. per annum; and R. Freeman assigned an additional plot for clothing them. In 1684, Dr. Seth Ward, Bishop of Sarum, founded an almshouse for two men and two women, and endowed it with £41. 12. a year.

ASPLEY, a township, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 34 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £87. 11. 4., of which £86. 18. 6. are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, and 12s. 10d. to the vicar of the parish.

ASPLEY, with FORDHALL, a hamlet, in the parish of WOOTTON-WAWEN, union of STRATFORD-ON-AVON, Henley division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK; containing 126 inhabitants.

ASPLEY-GUISE (St. Botolph), a parish, in the union of WOBURN, hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Woburn; containing 1139 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2033 acres, of which 1953 are arable, and the remainder woodland, plantations, and heath; the prevailing timber is elm, and the plantations chiefly fir. The inhabitants obtained in 1267 the grant of a market, to be held on Friday, and a fair on June 17th; but both have been long discontinued. The living is a rectory, with which the vicarage of Husborn-Crawley was consolidated in 1796, valued in the king's books at £15. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income for Aspley-Guise, £215, and for Husborn-Crawley, £46; patron, Duke of Bedford. The tithes were commuted for 85 acres of land, and an annual payment of £60, in 1760. The church contains several ancient and interesting monuments, among which are an altar-tomb with the effigy of Sir Edward Sadlier, in chain armour, and another with an effigy in brass of one of the family of Guise. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ASPULL, a township, in the parish and union of WIGAN, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Wigan; containing 2772 inhabitants. It abounds with Cannel coal, and comprises by computation 1709 acres, of which 1145 are pasture, 377 arable, and 40 woodland. A church has been erected by the Parliamentary Commissioners; and there is a school with an endowment of £11 per annum. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £214. 3.

ASSELBY, a township, in the parish and union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Howden; containing 293 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book Aschilebi, was held at the Conquest chiefly by the Bishop of Durham and Earl Morton, and the Aislabys had property here, and are supposed to have taken their name from that of the township. It comprises by computation 1200 acres; the land is very rich and prolific, and the gardens supply large quantities of fruit for the markets in the West riding. Asselby Island, containing about 10 acres, is seated in the river Ouse, which flows at a short distance on the south of the village; and belongs to the parish of Drax. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ASSENDON, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of PIRTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Henley-upon-Thames. Here is an almshouse, endowed with £5 per annum.

ASSERBY, a hamlet, in the parish of BILSBY, union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 54 inhabitants.

ASSINGDON, county of ESSEX.—See ASHINGDON.

ASSINGTON (St. Edmund), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Sudbury; containing 778 inhabitants. Assington Hall was purchased by Robert Gurdon, in the reign of Henry VIII. from Sir Piers Corbet, and the hall has ever since been the residence of that family. A double stratum of cement stone has been found in the parish, and is now regularly manufactured. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with part of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £10; patron and impropiator of the remainder of the great tithes, John Gurdon, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £361. 15. 3., and the vicarial tithes for £444. 7. 10. The glebe comprises about 14 acres. A national school is supported by subscription.

ASTBURY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CONGLETON, consisting of the township of Somerford-Booths, in the hundred of MACCLESFIELD, and the market-town of Congleton, and the townships of Astbury-Newbold, Buglawton, Davenport, Hulme-Walfield, Moreton with Aleumlow, Odd Rode, Radnor, Smallwood, and Somerford, in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county of CHESTER; and containing 14,355 inhabitants, of whom 641 are in the township of Astbury-Newbold. This parish, which comprises by computation 20,000 acres, contains a bed of limestone, from twenty-five to thirty yards in thickness, of which considerable quantities are procured and burnt; it is based on a species of gritstone, which is considered an excellent stone for building. A railway extends through the parish from Mole Cop to a coal wharf near Congleton; and the Macclesfield canal passes at a short distance to the east of the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £68, and in the patronage of the Trustees of Lord Crewe; net income, £1485. The church is a spacious and beautiful structure, in the later English style; the interior contains several stalls, a rood-loft, and some fine screen-work; the roofs, which are of oak, are richly carved; the east window is highly enriched, and there are some fine specimens of stained glass. The tower, which stands at the north-west angle of the church, and is surmounted by an elegant spire, appears to have belonged to a former edifice. In the township of Odd Rode, and near the hamlet of Scholar Green, is the episcopal chapel of the Holy Trinity, built forty years ago by Mr. Dobbs, of Ramsdel Hall, and lately purchased by Randle Wilbraham, Esq., of Rode Hall. The church of St. John, in Buglawton, was built, in 1839-40, by private subscription and grants from the Chester Diocesan Society, and is in the Norman style; and there is also a domestic chapel belonging to Sir Charles Shakerly, in Somerford Park. The sum of £50 per annum, the bequest of John Halford, in 1714, is partly distributed among the poor, and partly applied in apprenticing children. There are some petrifying springs in the parish.

ASTBURY, NEWBOLD, a township, in the parish of ASTBURY, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTH-WICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Congleton; containing 641 inhabitants.

ASTERBY (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of HORNCASTLE, N. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N.) from Horncastle; containing 256 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 0. 10.; net income, £210; patron, T. Southwell, Esq. A national school, for the parishes of Asterby and Goulsby, is endowed with a rent-charge of £10 per annum.

ASTHALL (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Burford; containing, with the hamlet of Asthall-Leigh, 389 inhabitants. This place was formerly the residence of Sir Richard Jones, one of the judges of the court of common pleas in the reign of Charles I.; and there are still some remains of the ancient manor-house near the church, which are now converted into a farm-house. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 4½.; net income, £100; patrons and improPRIATORS, Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The tithes were commuted for a money payment and an allotment of land, in 1812. The church contains some interesting monuments, among which is a recumbent effigy on a stone coffin, under an enriched arched canopy, said to be the tomb of Alice Corbett, mistress of Henry I., and mother of Reginald, Earl of Cornwall. Sir George Fettiplace bequeathed £6 per annum, with a house for a school-mistress, for which twelve girls are instructed; and also left £5 per annum for apprenticing boys. In the parish is a barrow of considerable height, supposed to be a sepulchral monument, and near which the Roman Akeman-street passes.

ASTHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish of WILLOUGHBY, union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 16 inhabitants.

ASTLEY, a district chapelry, in the parish and union of LEIGH, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E.) from Leigh; containing 2011 inhabitants. It comprises 2290 acres of land, and the Duke of Bridgewater's canal from Manchester to Wigan passes through the village. The inhabitants are employed either in hand-loom weaving, or in the cotton-spinning or power-loom weaving. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £126; patron, Vicar of Leigh. The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, was founded by Adam Mort, in the early part of the seventeenth century, and endowed by him with property of the value of £18 per annum. In 1760, the old edifice was taken down, and a new one erected upon a more enlarged plan, by the landowners of the chapelry, the income at that time having been considerably augmented. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A grammar school is endowed with £25. 14. 8. per annum; and, in 1630, Adam Mort bequeathed land, now producing about £35 per annum, for the instruction of children here, and in the townships of Great Bolton, Little Hulton, Bedford, and Tyldesley; the school-house is situated in the churchyard. There are also national schools for both sexes.

ASTLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of St. Mary, union of ATCHAM, liberties of SHREWSBURY, N. division of SALOP, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Shrewsbury; containing 264 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £56, in the patronage of five Trustees, by order of the court of chancery: the impropriation is vested in the Trustees of Shrewsbury free grammar school, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £211. Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, in 1733, agreeably to the request of her deceased husband, bequeathed a farm here, let for £60 per annum, of which about £40 are appropriated for the benefit of the poor of Atcham, £10 to the poor of Astley, and £6 to the minister: it is also charged with the payment of £5 to the organist of St. Mary's. A school connected with the charity was established in 1828.

ASTLEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of NUNEATON, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Nuneaton; comprising 2555 acres, and containing 371 inhabitants. A short distance to the north of the church is a mansion, erected in the sixteenth century, on the site of a more ancient baronial castle: in the interior are a chair and table, which, according to an inscription, were those used by Henry, Marquess Grey and Duke of Suffolk, father of Lady Jane Grey, when concealed in a hollow tree in the vicinity. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron and improPRIATOR, C. N. Newdegate, Esq. The church was made collegiate, and rebuilt in the form of a cross, with a lofty spire, in the reign of Edward III., by Lord Thomas de Astley, many of whose family were interred here; the ancient choir, now forming the body of the church, is the only portion of the building remaining. The revenue of the college, at its dissolution, was £46. 8. A school is supported by Mr. Newdegate.

ASTLEY (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Stourport; containing 834 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the east by the river Severn, comprises by measurement 2900 acres; the soil is highly productive. From the quarries in Astley wood has been raised stone for the repair of Worcester cathedral, and for the restoration of the parochial church. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 13. 4.; patrons, Trustees of the late Rev. D. J. J. Cooks. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £750, and the glebe comprises 20 acres of land of a very mixed quality. The church, pleasantly situated on a hill, is an ancient building chiefly of Norman architecture, and contains some altar-tombs with recumbent effigies of members of the family of Blount. Here is a free school, endowed with about £20 per annum, by Mrs. Mercy Pope, in 1717. An alien priory of Benedictine monks, founded here by Ralph de Todeni, in the reign of William I., was annexed to the college of Westbury in that of Edward IV. At Redstone ferry is an old hermitage, excavated in a lofty cliff by the side of the river.

ASTLEY, ABBOTS, a parish, in the union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 2 miles (N.) from Bridgenorth; containing 657 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises about 3200 acres, is intersected by the road from Bridgenorth to Broseley, and by the river Severn. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of T. Whitmore, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £255. 15., and there are 51½ acres of rectorial glebe. The church, which is in the later English style, was rebuilt in 1638; the chancel is of modern date. A parochial school was endowed by Mrs. C. Phillips in 1805, with £300 in the three per cent. consols.

ASTON, a hamlet, in the parish of IVINGHOE, union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1¾ mile (N. N. E.) from Ivinghoe; containing 446 inhabitants.

ASTON, a hamlet, in the parish of HOPE, union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 6½ miles (N. N. E.) from Tideswell; containing 111 inhabitants.

ASTON, a hamlet, in the parish of AVENING, union of STROUD, hundred of LONGTREE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 221 inhabitants.

ASTON, or PIPE-ASTON (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Ludlow; containing 52 inhabitants. The surface of the parish, consisting of 733 acres, is undulated and well-wooded; but the soil is of an inferior quality. It is intersected by the road from Ludlow to Wigmore and Presteign. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 13. 4.; net income, £84; patrons, the Representatives of T. A. Knight, Esq.

ASTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the hundred of BROADWATER, union and county of HERTFORD, 3¼ miles (S. E.) from Stevenage; containing 556 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 11. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. James Ellice. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £460, and the glebe consists of 42½ acres.

ASTON, with CORE, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of BAMPTON, union of WITNEY, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Witney; containing 729 inhabitants. A handsome chapel was built in 1839, chiefly by the three portionists of Bampton, who perform divine service gratuitously. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £556, of which £550 are payable to the vicars of Bampton, and £6 to the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. A national school is endowed with land which produces £6 per annum; and another school, commenced in 1826, is aided by subscription.

ASTON, a township, in the parish and union of WEM, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 212 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ASTON, a township, in the parish and union of WELLINGTON, hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 84 inhabitants.

ASTON, with BURSTON and STOKE, a township, in the parish and union of STONE, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD; containing 773 inhabitants.

ASTON, a township, in the parish of MUCKLESTON, union of MARKET-DRAYTON, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Newcastle-under-Line; containing 283 inhabitants. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Aston Hall.

ASTON (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, and the head of a union, in the Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, adjoining the town of Birmingham (part of which is within its limits), and comprising the manor of Aston, and the hamlets of Castle and Little Bromwich, Erdington, Saltley with Washwood, Water Orton, Witon, Deritend with Bordesley, and Duddleston with Nechells; the whole containing 45,718 inhabitants, of whom 2896 are in the manor of Aston. This extensive parish includes several manors anciently belonging to the Earls of Mercia, under whom that of Aston was, at the time of the Conquest, held by Godmund the Saxon. It was afterwards granted by William the Norman, with other large possessions, to one of his followers, William Fitz Ausculf, to whom succeeded Gervase Paganell, whose nephew, Ralph Somery, gave it to Thomas de Erdington about the beginning of the reign of John. In the early part of the reign of Edward I. it came into the hands of Thomas de Maidenbach, who, in the 13th of that reign, claimed by prescription the assize of beer, a gallows, infangthef, utfangthef, with a court leet and weifs, also that he and his tenants should be free from any suit to the county or hundred courts, all which were allowed; and in the following year he obtained a charter of free warren in all his demesne lands here. It was purchased, in 1367, by the family of Holt, whose descendant, Sir Thomas, in 1620, erected the venerable and stately hall, in which he entertained Charles I. for two nights previously to the battle of Edge-Hill; the estate was alienated by Sir Lister Holt, in 1770, and in 1782 became the property of Heneage Legge, Esq. The hall is a spacious structure, in the Elizabethan style, and is situated in a fine park, richly ornamented with timber of ancient growth, and with thriving groves of modern plantation. Aston parish, which comprises 12,534*a. 2p.*, is divided into nine townships, in all of which are populous villages. There are extensive iron-works, of which Aston furnace, from the vast accumulation of scoria, appears to have been in operation from the remotest period of antiquity; and Aston forge, to which are attached some powerful rolling-mills, is conducted on a large scale. The Birmingham and Gloucester, and Grand Junction railways pass through the parish: on the banks of the Birmingham and Fazeley canal are numerous works connected with the Birmingham manufactures, and spacious and commodious wharfs have been constructed.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £21. 4. 9½.; net income, £2075; patrons, Executors of the late Rev. George Peake; impropiators, Heirs of Sir L. Holt. The church is an ancient structure, partly in the early, and partly in the later style of English architecture, with a handsome tower and finely-tapered spire, which, rising above the well-wooded park, forms a beautifully picturesque feature in the scenery, and from several points of view is seen in pleasing combination with the lofty gables of the ancient hall. The interior, which has been greatly modernised, contains some beautiful specimens of painted glass by Eginton, and several ancient and interesting monuments, and altar-tombs, with recumbent effigies. There are chapels of ease at Castle Bromwich, Water Orton, Ward-End in Little Bromwich, Bordesley, Deritend, Erdington, and Duddeston, where there are two. The chapel at Ward-End, which had fallen into disuse since the Reformation, has been restored by subscription; and St. Matthew's, in Duddeston, recently built, is the first of ten new churches to be erected in the borough of Birmingham. A school is endowed with a house and land, valued at about £25 per annum; and there are also a school of industry, and several national, Lancastrian, and other schools. Almshouses for five men and five women were founded in 1656, by Sir Thomas Holt, Bart., and endowed with a rent-charge of £84 on his manor at Erdington. The poor law union of Aston comprises five parishes and places, and contains a population of 50,928.

ASTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ROTHERHAM, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Sheffield; containing, with the hamlet of Aughton and part of Ulley, 763 inhabitants. This place, called also Aston cum Aughton, is noticed in Domesday book, in which a church is mentioned as existing here; and the history of the spot is of considerable interest. In the 14th century the estate became the property of William Melton, Archbishop of York, a munificent prelate, and of great piety; and in the time of Henry VIII., the noble family of D'Arcy obtained possession of it by marriage, and held it until 1771, when the last Earl of Holderness, whose predecessors had lived much at Aston, and greatly improved the mansion, parted with the lands to Mr. Verilst, a gentleman who had held a high appointment in India, and whose family are still resident here. The parish, which is bounded on the western side by the river Rother, is on the road from Worksop to Sheffield, and is intersected by that from Rotherham to Mansfield; it comprises about 3000 acres, chiefly arable land, with not more than about 30 acres of wood. The surface is bold and elevated, and the views extend over the hills of North Derbyshire and the Yorkshire moors; the soil is mostly light, and very fertile, and rests on a stratum of coarse dark sandstone, beneath which coal of good quality is found, and two mines are in active operation. The North-Midland railway passes on the west for a distance of two miles.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 15. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Leeds: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £740, and there are about 34 acres of glebe. The church is a neat ancient stone building, with a tower at the west end; the chancel, which has recently been renovated by the present incumbent, the Rev. W. Alderson, contains kneeling marble effigies of the "good Lord D'Arcy," who died in 1628, and three of his wives, a fourth having survived him; the east window is of stained glass, and occupied chiefly with the arms and impalements of the D'Arcy family. In the hamlet of Aughton are places of worship for Calvinists and Wesleyans. A school is endowed with £15. 2. 6. per annum, together with a house and garden; and a Sunday national school is supported by the rector. The parish is remarkable for having been for many years the residence of the Rev. William Mason, the poet, its then rector, who here composed some of his most beautiful works, and who reduced to practice his rules for English gardening, in the garden which pertained to the rectorial manse: he died in 1797, and was buried in the church, where is a tablet to his memory.

ASTON, ABBOTS (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of AYLESBURY, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Aylesbury; containing 356 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2131 acres; the village is beautifully situated on a hill overlooking the vale of Aylesbury, within half a mile of the road from Oxford to Cambridge. A large supply of excellent butter is sent to the London market. The women and children are employed in the manufacture of lace and straw-plaiting. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 11.; net income, £143; patron, Earl of Chesterfield. About 90 acres of land in the parish, with the tithes of the hamlet of Burston, belong to the benefice. A school is supported by subscription.

ASTON-BLANK (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRADLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Northleach; containing 302 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 2200 acres, is situated about half a mile from the Stow road, and is bounded on the north and north-east by the river Windrush. The neighbourhood has been much improved by the inclosure of waste lands, and plantations made by the lord of the manor, who holds courts leet and baron occasionally. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 12. 4.; net income, £151; patron, the Crown. The tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments, in 1795; the glebe consists of 3 acres. Goddard Carter, Esq., late lord of the manor, endowed a day school, with £5 per annum, for children under ten years of age.

ASTON-BOTTERELL (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CLEOBURY-MORTIMER, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 9 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bridgenorth; containing, with the chapelry of Bold, 173 inhabitants. This place derives the adjunct to its name from the family of Botterell, by whom the manor was held under the earls of Arundel in the reign of Henry III. It is situated on the road from Bridgenorth to Ludlow, and comprises 2238a. 22p.: limestone is obtained for manure, and basaltic stone for the repair of the roads. By a charter of Henry III. a market was held on Tuesday, and a fair at Michaelmas; but both have been long discontinued. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 1. $0\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Duke of Cleveland: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £345, and there are 70 acres of glebe. In the church is an altar-tomb, on which are recumbent figures, supposed to be of the Botterell family.

ASTON-BY-BUDWORTH, a chapelry, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Northwich; containing 405 inhabitants. The village is situated at the distance of about a mile from the main road between London and Liverpool, and the same distance from the Trent and Mersey canal. In the centre of the township are the remains of an ancient moated mansion, with an old bridge. A petrifying spring rises on the Gore farm, in the chapelry.

ASTON-BY-SUTTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Frodsham; containing 206 inhabitants. It comprises 2974a. 30p., of which about 535 acres are arable, 1950 meadow and pasture, 410 woodland, and the remainder homesteads and gardens. The small river Weaver, which is here navigable, flows through the hamlet of Sutton into the river Mersey; and the Grand Junction railway passes through the township of Aston. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £88; patron, A. I. Aston, Esq. The glebe comprises 30 acres, with a house. The chapel was rebuilt, on an enlarged scale, in 1737.

ASTON-CANTLOW (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of ALCESTER, Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Alcester; containing 1089 inhabitants. This place appears to have derived the adjunct to its name from the family of Cantelu, or Cantelupe, of whom William de Cantelupe received from Henry III. a confirmation of the lordship, together with a market and fair held here. John de Hastings, into whose possession it had come, claimed by prescription, in the 13th of Edward I., a court leet, with assize of bread and beer, weifs, gallows, and free warren, all which were allowed. The parish comprises 4758 acres, and is intersected by the river Alne, on the left bank of which the village is situated. The Stratford canal passes through it. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 7.; net income, £93; patron and incumbent, Rev. R. S. Carles; impropiator, Earl of Abergavenny.

ASTON-CHETWYND, a township, in the parish of EDMOND, union of NEWPORT, Newport division of the hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 1½ mile (S. S. E.) from Newport; containing 385 inhabitants.

ASTON, CHURCH, a chapelry, in the parish of EDMOND, union of NEWPORT, Newport division of the hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 1 mile (S.) from Newport; containing 512 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ASTON-CLINTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2¾ miles (W. by N.) from Tring, on the London road; containing, with the hamlet of St. Leonard, 1025 inhabitants, of whom 847 are in the township of Aston-Clinton. The Grand Junction canal passes through the parish. The cottagers manufacture straw-plate and lace. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 6. 10½.; net income, £506; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford. The tithes, with the exception of those for woodland, were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1814. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

ASTON, EAST, a tything, in the parish of LONG-PARISH, union of ANDOVER, hundred of WHERWELL, Andover and N. divisions of HANTS; containing 109 inhabitants.

ASTON-EYRE, a chapelry, in the parish of MORVILL, union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of STOTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 4¼ miles (W. by N.) from Bridgenorth; containing 130 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Morvill: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £218.

ASTON-FLAMVILLE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of HINCKLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Hinckley; containing, with the chapelry of Burbage and hamlet of Sketchley, 1909 inhabitants. It comprises 4097 acres, of which 3057 are in the chapelry of Burbage; the proportion of arable is computed to be 1450 acres, of woodland 149 acres, and the rest is pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 12. 8½.; net income, £678; patron, Earl de Grey. The tithes of Burbage have been commuted for a rent-charge of £677; the tithe at Aston is about £31. 18., and is a modus. The glebe consists of about 120 acres. The church of Aston is very ancient: that at Burbage, supposed to have been erected in the eleventh century, has just been rebuilt.

ASTON-GRANGE, a township, in the parish and union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 3¾ miles (E.) from Frodsham; containing 27 inhabitants. Here is a chapel, which was rebuilt on an enlarged plan, in 1737. The Grand Junction railway passes a little to the east.

ASTON-INGHAM, a parish, in the union of NEWENT, hundred of GREYTREE, county of HEREFORD, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Newent; containing 621 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by measurement 2378 acres, is bounded on the east and south by a portion of the county of Gloucester, and is intersected by the road from Newent to Mitchel Dean. The surface exhibits considerable undulations, and numerous patches of woodland; and the soil generally is of average productiveness. There are some quarries of limestone, and also of stone for building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 7. 1.; patron, the Rev. Henry Lawson Whatley, the present incumbent. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £350, and there are about 100 acres of glebe, and a good house. A school is endowed with about £10 per annum.

ASTON-JUXTA-MONDRUM, a township, in the parish of ACTON, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4 miles (N.) from Nantwich; containing 164 inhabitants. The Chester and Crewe railway passes close to this place after being conducted over the Weaver by a bridge of 8 arches, 60 feet above the level of the river. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £71. 5., and the vicarial for one of £26. 7. 7.

ASTON-LE-WALLS (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundred of CHIPPING-WARDEN, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 8½ miles (N. N. E.) from Banbury; containing, with the hamlet of Appletree, 252 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected in its north-eastern extremity by the road from Banbury to Daventry, comprises 1528 acres of a highly productive soil; the substratum is rock; and stone is quarried for repairing the roads and for rough building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 7.; net income, £343; patrons, President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The glebe comprises 140 acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the early English style, with a low Norman tower. There is a Roman Catholic chapel; and in connexion with the church is a school supported by the rector.

ASTON, MAGNA, a hamlet, in the parish of BLOCKLEY, union of SHIPSTON-ON-STOUR, Upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Blockley and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Moreton-in-the-Marsh; containing 223 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £95.

ASTON, MIDDLE, a township, in the parish of STEEPLE-ASTON, union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Deddington; containing 111 inhabitants, and comprising 842a. 3r. 20p.

ASTON-MORRIS, a tything, partly in the parish of BURNHAM, union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BEMPSTONE, E. division, and partly in the parish of HUNTSPILL, union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of HUNTSPILL and PURITON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 239 inhabitants.

ASTON, NORTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Deddington, and 8 (N. N. E.) from Woodstock; comprising by measurement 1260 acres, and containing 289 inhabitants. The Oxford canal forms a boundary of the parish on the east. The views from the grounds of the mansion are very extensive, and of the most pleasing description. On the village green, which is one of the prettiest in the county, are some very fine elms, and other full-grown trees. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 10.; net income, £133; patron and impropiator, Charles Oldfield Bowles, Esq. The church consists of a nave, aisles, and chancel, of unequal height, with a tower picturesquely covered with ivy; in a chantry on the south side of the chancel is an elegant tomb, with recumbent effigies of a male and female, supposed to be those of Sir John Anne and Alicia his wife.

ASTON PIGOT, a township, in the parish of WORTHEN, hundred of CHIRBURY, S. division of SALOP, 11 miles (N. E.) from Montgomery; containing 78 inhabitants.

ASTON ROGERS, a township, in the parish of WORTHEN, hundred of CHIRBURY, S. division of SALOP, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Worthen; containing 174 inhabitants. The village is situated on the road between Shrewsbury and Montgomery.

ASTON-ROWANT (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Tetsworth; containing, with the townships of Chalford and Kingston-Blount, 885 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2800 acres by computation; the surface is in general flat, and the soil composed of chalk, sand, and deep clay. Many of the females are employed in lace-making. The living is a vicarage, partly endowed with the great tithes, with Stokenchurch annexed, and valued in the king's books at £16. 18. 11.; net income, £176; patron, the Crown. The remainder of the great tithes have been commuted for land under an act of inclosure. The church is partly in the early, and partly in the later style of English architecture, and contains some ancient brasses. There is a place of worship for Independents at Kingston. Near the close of the seventeenth century, a large Roman vessel, containing five smaller ones, was discovered in Kingston field, within the parish, at the distance of about a furlong from the Ikeneld-street.

ASTON-SANDFORD (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of AYLESBURY, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Thame; containing 86 inhabitants. It comprises 669a. 2r. 14p., of which 473 acres are tithable. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Mrs. Susannah Barber: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £107, and the glebe consists of 53 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is in the later English style, and has a wooden tower, with three bells. The remains of the Rev. Thomas Scott, a learned and pious commentator on the Scriptures, and for some time rector, were interred in the chancel.

ASTON-SOMERVILLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EVESHAM, Lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Evesham; containing 89 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Isperne, and comprises by measurement 1000 acres, of which three-fourths are arable, and the rest pasture land; the soil is a deep strong clay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 3. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Somerville: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £230, and there are about 40 acres of glebe. The church, a plain edifice, contains a monument to the late Lord Somerville, author of some tracts and essays on Agriculture, and Rural Economy, and who was a native of this place, and was interred here in 1819.

ASTON, STEEPLE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Woodstock; containing 580 inhabitants. This place is thought to have been occupied by the Romans, as some vestiges of a fosse are visible, and a tessellated pavement was discovered in the vicinity, in the sixteenth century. The parish, which includes the villages of Steeple-Aston and Middle-Aston, and comprises 1875a. 2r. 37p., is intersected by the river Cherwell, and skirted by the Oxford canal. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £584; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church is an ancient edifice, containing, in a chapel on the north side of the chancel, recumbent effigies of Judge Page and his lady, to whom the manor formerly belonged. A school is endowed with £20 per annum, and a house and garden, from a bequest, in 1640, by Dr. Samuel Radcliffe, principal of Brasenose College, who founded two scholarships in that college, to be supplied, if possible, from this school: the same benevolent individual also founded here an almshouse for poor women, and was buried in the chancel of the church. Near the village a strong chalybeate spring was discovered in 1833.

ASTON-SUB-EDGE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of EVESHAM, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER,

ASTON-TIRROLD (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WALLINGFORD, hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, 3½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Wallingford; containing 343 inhabitants. Bishop Gibson supposed this to be the place called in the Saxon Chronicle Aescsedune, where Ethelred I. and his brother Alfred defeated the Danes, in 871; but Gough, with greater probability, considers the battle to have been fought at Ashdown Park, near East Ilsley. The parish comprises 1650 acres by survey, and is situated near the Great Western railway. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 12. 11., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdeline College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £278, and the glebe consists of 36 acres.

ASTON-UPON-CARRON, a tything, in the parish of ASHCURCH, union of TEWKESBURY, Lower division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4¼ miles (E. N. E.) from Tewkesbury; containing 179 inhabitants.

ASTON-UPON-TRENT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 6½ miles (S. E.) from Derby; comprising the townships of Aston, Shardlow, and Great Wilne, and containing 1952 inhabitants, of whom 646 are in Aston township. A grant of a market and fair was obtained in 1256, but both have long been discontinued. The Grand Trunk navigation joins the river Trent below Shardlow, in the parish, at which place there are extensive wharfs. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £29. 15.; net income, £1030; patron, E. A. Holden, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land in 1762. A chapel of ease has recently been erected at Shardlow.

ASTON-UPTHORP, a chapelry, in the parish of BLEWBERRY, union of WALLINGFORD, hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Wallingford; containing 159 inhabitants. It forms a part of the parliamentary borough of Wallingford, and comprises 1270a. 1r. 2p. The chapel is said to be one of the most ancient in England. A school for girls is supported by subscription.

ASTON, WEST, a tything, in the parish of LONG-PARISH, union of ANDOVER, hundred of WHERWELL, Andover and N. divisions of HANTS; containing 170 inhabitants.

ASTON, WHITE LADIES (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of PERSHORE, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Worcester; containing 367 inhabitants. The ancient manor-house of this place, which was pulled down a few years since, was the abode of Oliver Cromwell the night before the celebrated battle of Worcester. The parish, which comprises 1224a. 2r. 24p., is situated near the Spetchley station on the Gloucester and Birmingham railway, and on the roads from Worcester to Alcester and Evesham. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 17. 3½., and endowed with the great tithes; patron, R. Berkeley, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £240, and there are about 2 acres of glebe, and a glebe-house. The church is an ancient building, with a white wooden spire, and contains a curious old font.

ASTROP, a hamlet, in the parishes of KING'S SUTTON, and NEWBOTTLE, and hundred of KING'S SUTTON, union of BRACKLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 5¾ miles (W.) from Brackley; containing 224 inhabitants. Here is a mineral spring, called St. Rumbald's well, which, in the latter part of the seventeenth century, was much frequented.

ASTWELL, a hamlet, partly in the parish of SYRESHAM, but chiefly in the parish of WAPENHAM, union of BRACKLEY, hundred of KING'S SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 5½ miles (N. N. E.) from Brackley; containing 46 inhabitants, and comprising, with the hamlet of Falcutt, 1790a. 3r. 36p.

ASTWICK (St. GUTHLAKE), a parish, in the union and hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, 3¼ miles (N. W. by N.) from Baldock; containing 84 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the road from Baldock to Biggleswade, and a little to the north of that between Baldock and Shefford, lies on the border of Hertfordshire; it is bounded by the river Ivel, which separates it from the parish of Stotfold; and comprises by measurement 640 acres of arable land, of which the soil is heavy, and the sub-soil clay. The living is a rectory, united, in 1764, to the vicarage of Arlsey, and valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.

ASTWOOD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 5¾ miles (E. N. E.) from Newport-Pagnell; containing 243 inhabitants. This place was at the Conquest surveyed as part of the adjoining parish of Hardmead, and belonged to William Fitzanulph, from whom it descended by marriage to Fulk Paganell, the founder of Newport-Pagnell. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £201. 11. 6., and the glebe consists of 12 acres. There is a place of worship for Independents.

ASWARBY (St. DENIS), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Folkingham; containing 119 inhabitants. It comprises about 1500 acres, and is situated on the road from London to Lincoln. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 4. 7. and in the gift of Sir T. Whichcote, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £327. 12., and there are 47 acres of glebe, and a good house. The church is a handsome building in the pointed style, and was extensively repaired, and its chancel rebuilt, in 1840, at the expense of the patron and incumbent. There is a chalybeate spring within the limits of the parish.

ASWARDBY (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Spilsby; containing 92 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 19. 4½.; net income, £266; patron, R. Brackburly, Esq. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

ATCHAM, a parish, and the head of a union, in the Wellington division of the hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Shrewsbury; containing 513 inhabitants. The Roman Watling-street passes through the parish, and here crosses the Severn. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 6. 8.; net income, £240; patron, R. Burton, Esq.; impropiators, Lord Berwick, R. Burton, Esq., and others. A school is supported by Mr. Burton; and divers sums are distributed annually among the necessitous, of which the principal is one of about £40, arising out of an estate devised by Elizabeth Jones, in 1733. The poor law union of Atcham comprises 43 parishes and places, under the care of 44 guardians.

ATHELHAMPTON.—See ADMISTON.

ATHELINGTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Eye; comprising by measurement 475 acres, and containing 111 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes payable to the incumbent have been commuted for a rent-charge of £150, and there are about 16 acres of glebe; other tithes, claimed by the rector of West Stow, have been commuted for £192. 5., and he has also a glebe here of about 30 acres. The church, which is chiefly in the decorated style, consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower.

ATHERINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of NORTH TAWTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (S. S. E.) from Barnstaple; containing 629 inhabitants. A portion of the lands was granted by Matilda, wife of William the Conqueror, to the convent of Caen, in Normandy, which she had founded; and in the reign of Henry III. some nuns from that establishment settled here, and erected a chapel, in which was placed a statue of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, who in the time of Edward III. was lord of the manor. During the protectorate of Cromwell, Charles II. concealed himself in the parsonage-house, and the ancient chamber in which he slept is still preserved. The parish, which is situated on the river Taw, and intersected by the direct road from Barnstaple to Exeter, comprises 3325*a*. 2*r*. 1*p.*, of which 2634 acres are arable, 125 meadow, 449 woodland, and 117 rivers and roads; the soil is clay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 2. 1.; patron and incumbent, Rev. James Arthur, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £416, and who has a glebe of 200 acres. The church contains a richly ornamented screen and rood-loft crossing the north aisle; also the monument of a crusader, and an altar tomb, with the figures of a knight and his two ladies on brass plates; and the statue of John of Gaunt, which was removed from the ancient chapel in 1826. A school is partly supported by Lady Basset.

ATHERINGTON, SUSSEX.—See ALDRINGTON.

ATHERLEY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of DRAYTON, Drayton division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Drayton; containing 404 inhabitants. It comprises 3750*a*. 1*r*. 23*p.*, of which 962 acres are arable, and 2493 pasture and meadow. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 6. 0½., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. C. Cotton, for the next turn; afterwards of Richard Corbet, Esq. of Atherley Hall. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £666. 16., and there are about 19 acres of glebe. In 1719, the Rev. Robert Adams bequeathed an estate at Winnington; in the parish of Muckleston, now let for £35. 12. per annum, for the education of children, and other purposes.

ATHERSTONE, a market-town, chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of MANCETTER, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 20 miles (N. by E.) from Warwick, and 105 (N. W. by N.) from London, on the road to Chester; containing 3743 inhabitants. The name of this place, in Domesday book written Adere-stone, is by Dugdale derived from its Saxon possessor Edred, or Aldred, and thence called Edredestone or Aldredestone; by others its name is deduced from its situation near Mancetter, or Mancetter, the Manduessedum of the Romans, reckoning from which station here was the nearest milliarium on the line of the Watling-street, and hence called Hither-stone or Atherstone. In 1485, the Earl of Richmond, previously to the battle of Bosworth Field, entered the town on the 20th of August, encamped his forces in a meadow, north of the church, still called the Royal meadow, and took up his own quarters at an ancient inn, now the Three Tuns, where he passed the night: here he had an interview with the Stanleys, and concerted those measures which secured him the victory in the celebrated battle that took place on the 22nd, and which terminated the war between the houses of York and Lancaster. The town consists of one principal street, containing many ancient and several modern houses, and from which another street branches to the market-place; it is paved, well lighted, and amply supplied with water. There is a subscription library and news-room; and assemblies are held occasionally in the town-hall, a neat brick building on piazzas. Stone is quarried for road-making and walls; and the manufacture of hats and caps, chiefly of a coarse kind, for soldiers and the West India trade, has been carried on to a considerable extent; but since the termination of the war, and the abolition of the slave trade, it has declined, there being little demand for soldiers' caps and none for negroes' hats. The railway from Birmingham to Derby passes within five miles of the town, and the Coventry and Fazeley canal at the north-western extremity, where extensive coal and lime wharfs have been constructed. The market, granted in the 31st of Henry III., is on Tuesday; and fairs are held on April 7th and July 18th, for cattle; Sept. 19th, 20th, and 21st, for cattle, cheese, and pedlery, on the Tuesday after which is a statute-fair; and on Dec. 4th, which is a great show fair for cattle, &c. The county magistrates hold a petty-session weekly; the hundred court is held here in rotation with other towns; and a court leet annually, at which constables and other officers are appointed.

The township comprises 842 acres, chiefly pasture land. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150; patron, Vicar of Mancetter. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary; and the ancient part of the edifice is in the English style, and formerly belonged to the monks of Bec, in Normandy. There are places of worship for Independents, Methodists, and Socinians; also a convent of the Dominican order, the foundation stone of which was laid in Sept. 1837, and a chapel attached to which, dedicated to "Our Blessed Lady of the Rosary," was opened Oct. 6th, 1841. A grammar school was founded the 5th of Elizabeth, 1573, by Sir William Devereux, of Merevale, Thomas Fulner, and Amyas Hyll, and a charter of incorporation was obtained in 1608: in 1706 the schoolroom was divided, and the grammar school is now conducted in one part, and an endowed English school in the other. The endowment amounts to £302 per annum, of which the master has £150, and the English master £50; and £60 are appropriated for repairs, contingent expenses, and a building fund; the residue being paid in augmentation of the head master's salary: upwards of forty scholars are at present on the foundation. There are also a girls' school on the national plan, and a boys' school, the buildings for which were erected by C. H. Bracebridge, Esq., of Atherstone Hall, aided by the Council of Education and the National Society. A self-supporting dispensary, upon the plan of Mr. Smith, of Southam, established in 1825, affords relief to a considerable number of patients. The poor law union of Atherstone comprises nine parishes and places in the county of Warwick, and five in the county of Leicester, and contains a population of 10,866. Drayton, the poet, and one of the earliest topographical writers, was born here.

ATHERSTONE-UPON-STOUR, a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, Kington division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S.) from Stratford; containing, with the village of Ailstow, 93 inhabitants. Nearly surrounded by the county of Gloucester, this parish consists of 1042 acres, and is intersected by the river Stour and the road from Stratford to Shipston. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 1. 8.; net income, £288; patron and incumbent, Rev. Thomas Cox, D.D.

ATHERTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of LEIGH, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. E.) from Leigh; containing 4475 inhabitants. This place, through which pass the Bolton and Leigh railway and the road from Bolton to Warrington, comprises 2323*a.* 3*r.* 35*p.*, and abounds with valuable stone of a durable quality. Atherton Hall, a superb edifice, built by the family of that name, in the early part of the eighteenth century, at an expense of about £63,000, was taken down in 1825, and the materials sold. Two-thirds of the inhabitants are employed in the cotton and silk manufacture, in the working of extensive collieries, and the making of nails, and the remaining third in agricultural pursuits. A cattle fair is held in Jan., and holiday fairs in June and August. The living, endowed about 1720 by Sir Richard Atherton, is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Lord Lilford; net income, £100. A commutation of the tithes has been awarded amounting to £118. 4. 8. per annum. The chapel, which is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and is a plain structure, rebuilt in 1810, formerly belonged to dissenters, but was consecrated for the service of the Church by Dr. Wilson, Bishop of Sodor and Man. There are places of worship for Unitarians and Baptists; and infants' and day schools were erected in 1840.

ATLOW, a parish, in the hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Ashbourn; containing 156 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron, W. F. Oakover, Esq.; appropriator, Dean of Lincoln, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £110. The church is a dilapidated structure, situated in the middle of a field. Near the village is a high hill, called "Magger's Bush," which affords an extensive prospect.

ATTENBOROUGH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTON, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (S. W.) from Nottingham; containing, with the township of Toton, and the hamlet of Chilwell, 1036 inhabitants, of whom 124 are in the village of Attenborough. The parish comprises by computation 3460 acres; the soil consists of clayey, gravelly, and sandy earth, and the surface is diversified with boldly swelling undulations. The river Erewash intersects the parish, and the Nottingham canal passes through the chapelry of Bramcote in the northern part of it, in which place there are coal-mines. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Bramcote annexed, valued in the king's books at £4. 15.; net income, £250; patron and impropiator, George Saville Foljambe, Esq. The glebe consists of about 40 acres. The church is a large edifice, and has a tower with five bells, surmounted by a handsome spire. In the hamlet of Toton is a chalybeate spring. Attenborough is the birthplace of Henry Ireton, the son-in-law of Cromwell, and lord deputy of Ireland in the time of the Commonwealth.

ATTERBY, a township, in the parish of BISHOP'S NORTON, union of CAISTON, E. division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Market-Rasen; containing 142 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land in 1769. Some property, yielding a rent of £8, is applied to the repairs of the church.

ATTERCLIFFE, a chapelry, in the parish and union of SHEFFIELD, S. division of the wapentake of STAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Sheffield; containing 4156 inhabitants. This place is situated on the road from Sheffield to Worksop and Rotherham, and, together with the hamlet of Darnall, occupies a triangular area at the south-eastern extremity of the parish, bounded on the north by the river Don, and on the east by the small river Carbrook. The village, one of the largest in the parish, is well built, and contains several handsome houses, the principal of which are Attercliffe Hall, long the residence of the Milner family, New Hall, that of John Sanderson, Esq., and the mansion of John Huntsman, Esq.; and in the immediate vicinity are several handsome houses of comparatively modern erection. The manufacture of steel is carried on extensively by Mr. Huntsman, and the Messrs. Sanderson, and many of the inhabitants are employed in making anvils and agricultural implements. At Royds Mills is a gold and silver refinery, belonging to Messrs. Read and Co. The old chapel of ease, at the eastern extremity of the village, was erected in 1629 by Stephen Bright, and William Spenser, Esqs., and others of the principal inhabitants, who endowed it with £10 per annum; it is now only used for the performance of the funeral service, and its extensive cemetery as a place of sepulture. Christ church, of which the first stone was laid by the Duke of Norfolk, assisted by Earl Fitzwilliam, in 1822, was completed at an expense of £14,000, of which £11,700 were granted by the Parliamentary Commissioners, and consecrated in 1826; it is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. The living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the Vicar of Sheffield. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. The town school was built by subscription in 1779, and greatly enlarged in 1841, partly by aid of a grant from the Committee of Council on Education; it is endowed with £13. 9. 6. per annum, arising from a bequest of £300 by Mrs. Fell in 1795. The national school for girls was built in 1824. Four almshouses, which were occupied by widows rent-free, have been rebuilt by the overseers, and are now let to tenants at a weekly rent of two shillings each; and there are various bequests for distribution among the poor.

ATTERTON, a hamlet, in the parish of WITHERLEY, union of ATHERSTONE, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. Division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Atherstone; containing 84 inhabitants.

ATTINGTON, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of THAME, county of OXFORD, 1 mile (E. by N.) from Tetsworth; containing 8 inhabitants.

ATTLEBOROUGH, a hamlet, in the parish and union of NUNEATON, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of WARWICKSHIRE; containing 1095 inhabitants. A neat church, in the later English style, with a tower and spire, has been just completed, containing 511 sittings, of which 347 are free.

ATTLEBRIDGE (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of ST. FAITH, hundred of TAVERHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 8 miles (N. W.) from Norwich; containing 94 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Norwich to Fakenham, comprises 1237*a.* 2*r.* 34*p.* The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Alderford, and valued in the king's books at £4. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £70, and there are 10 acres of glebe; and the impropriate tithes, belonging to N. Micklethwait, Esq., lord of the manor, and principal owner of the soil, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £162. 18. The church is a handsome structure in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower.

ATTLEBURGH, or ATTLEBOROUGH (ST. MARY), a market-town and parish, in the union of WAYLAND, hundred of SHROPHAM, W. division of NORFOLK, 15 miles (S. W. by W.) from Norwich, and 94 (N. E. by N.) from London; containing 1959 inhabitants. This place derives its name from Atheling, or Attlinge, a Saxon chieftain, by whom it is supposed to have been originally founded, and from a burgh or fortress, by which it was formerly defended against the frequent incursions of the Danes. It was anciently the capital of Norfolk, and the residence of Offa and Edmund, kings of East Anglia, and was subsequently the seat of the Mortimer family, of whose baronial hall the site is still encompassed by a moat. In the reign of Richard II., Robert de Mortimer founded a collegiate establishment, in the church of the Holy Cross, for a warden and four secular priests, of which, at the dissolution, the revenue was estimated at £21. 16. 3., and, with the site, was granted to the Earl of Essex. The town, of which a considerable portion was destroyed by fire in 1559, though situated on the high road from Thetford to Norwich, is at present of very inconsiderable extent, consisting principally of one long street. The market, which is chiefly for corn, is on Thursday; and fairs are held on the Thursday before Easter and Whitsuntide, and on the 15th August. The former town comprised the two parishes of Attleburgh-Major and Minor; the first a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 8. 9.; and the second a vicarage, valued at £8. 2. 6.; they are now united, and the present parish comprises 5251*a.* 1*r.* 25*p.*, of which 3955 acres are arable, and 1244 meadow and pasture. The livings constitute one rectory, in the patronage of the Rev. Sir E. B. Smyth, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1500, and the glebe comprises 17 acres, with a handsome parsonage-house. The church is a venerable cruciform structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, and a porch of elegant design. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and a parochial school, a handsome building, has been erected by subscription. The patron has allotted 24 acres of land to the poor, in small lots for garden-ground; 57*a.* 2*r.* were also assigned to them at the time of the inclosure, and 20 acres for the repairs of the church. A house called the College-house occupies the site of the ancient college. There are two springs in the parish, slightly chalybeate.

ATWICK (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Hornsea; containing 300 inhabitants. This place has passed through various hands, having been possessed by the families of Hastings, Mauley, Bigot, Bulmer, and Constable: St. John's College, Cambridge, now owns a portion of the lordship. The parish is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, and comprises, including the manors of Arram and Skirlington, about 2186 acres, of which the soil is a stiff, but very fertile, clay: the surface begins to rise here in gentle undulations, and prepares the traveller for the hill and dale of the wolds; and the sea-view to Bridlington Quay and Flamborough Head is extensive and beautiful. The village, of which Atwick Hall forms a conspicuous feature, is small but pretty, and pleasantly situated near the sea, from whose encroachments it has occasionally sustained considerable damage; and it appears from measurements repeated for a series of years, that the sea gains from the land an average of three yards annually.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor, with a net income of £149; impropriator, B. O. Mitford, Esq. The tithes for the township of Atwick were commuted for 26*a.* 3*r.* of land and a money payment of £15, under an act in 1769; and under the recent act, the remaining tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £210. 11., of which £107 for the hamlet of Arram are not payable when in the hands of the owner, having been the property of the dissolved abbey of Meaux, and therefore exempt. The church formerly belonged to the priory of St. Mary, Bridlington, to which it was granted by the family of de Roos in the 12th century; it is situated at the extreme end of the village, upon rather elevated ground, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a small square embattled tower of brick, which last was rebuilt in 1829. The present vicar has built, under Gilbert's act, a neat and commodious vicarage-house, aided by £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty, and a benefaction of similar amount from C. Druce, Esq., of Dulwich. A school has an endowment of £35 per annum, arising from lands bequeathed by Edward Fenwick, in 1689; and Ralph Burton, in 1726, left £18 per annum, part of which is appropriated to the instruction of girls. In the centre of the village stands a rude stone cross of great antiquity, with a Latin inscription upon its base, now nearly defaced; and near the church is ground bearing evidence of having been the site of a religious house; also a series of fish-ponds, and a "holy well," the water of which is inexhaustible, and of the greatest purity.

ATWORTH, a chapelry, in the parish of GREAT BRADFORD, union and hundred of BRADFORD, Westbury and N. divisions and Trowbridge and Bradford subdivisions of WILTS, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Bradford; containing 824 inhabitants. The chapel, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt a few years since.

AUBORN (St. PETER), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, union and county of LINCOLN, 6¼ miles (S. W. by S.) from Lincoln; containing, with a part of the township of Haddington, 436 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 10.; net income, £54; patron, Rev. H. Neville. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. £9 per annum, arising from a bequest of Sir Christopher Neville, are distributed among the poor.

AUBURN, county of YORK.—See FRAISTHORPE.

AUCKLAND (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of AUCKLAND, partly in the S. E., but chiefly in the N. W., division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM; the S. E. portion including the townships of Byers-Green, Coundon-Grange, Eldon, Middlestone, Midridge, Midridge-Grange, Old-Park, Westerton, and Windleston; and the N. W. portion including the market-town of Bishop-Auckland, the chapelries of St. Helen-Auckland and Hamsterley, and the townships of St. Andrew-Auckland, West Auckland, North and South Bedburn, Barony, Binchester, Conndon, Evenwood, Hunwick with Helmington, Lynesack with Softley, Newfield, Newton-Cap, Pollard's Lands, Shildon, and East Thickey; the whole containing 19,100 inhabitants, of whom 1367 are in the township of St. Andrew-Auckland, 1 mile (S.) from Bishop-Auckland. This extensive parish comprises by computation 11,195 acres, and contains numerous townships, in six of which are considerable villages; it abounds with coal and limestone, and its surface is highly varied. The Stockton and Darlington railroad passes through it; and in 1837 an act was obtained for constructing the Bishop-Auckland and Weardale railway, which branches from the Stockton, and Darlington at Shildon, and passes within a quarter of a mile of Bishop-Auckland, which see.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, with the chapelry of St. Anne; net income, about £550, nearly half of which arises from a bequest by the late Bishop Barrington; patron, Bishop of Durham; impropiators, Landowners of the parish. The tithes attached to the living have been commuted for a rent-charge of £46. 10.; and there is a glebe valued at £117 per annum. The church, a spacious cruciform structure, was made collegiate for the secular canons ejected by Bishop Carileph from his cathedral of Durham, in 1082; and in 1292 was endowed by Bishop Beck for a dean and nine prebendaries: three or four additional prebends were founded by Bishop Langley, in 1428. At the dissolution, the deanery was valued at £100. 7. 2., and the prebends at £79. 16. 8.: the dean's house and some of the prebendal houses have been converted into residences for farmers. There are a chapel of ease at Bishop-Auckland; a district church lately consecrated at Coundon; another, also lately consecrated, in the newly-assigned district of Etherley; and a third just erected by subscription at Byers-Green: and there are places of worship for Independents, Ranters, and the Society of Friends. A free grammar school was founded by charter of James I., and in the parish are national schools for boys and girls. The poor law union of Auckland comprises 33 parishes and places, and contains a population of 21,979.

AUCKLAND (St. HELEN), a chapelry, in the parish of ST. ANDREW-AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing in the township of St. Helen-Auckland (which constitutes only a small portion of the chapelry), 720 inhabitants. At this place is the terminus of the Stockton and Darlington railway for passengers, the remaining portion of the line being confined to the transmission of the coal waggons. At the St. Helen's colliery numerous ovens are employed in the manufacture of coke for the use of the engines on the line. Large quantities of coal are sent by the railway from the mines in the neighbourhood to be shipped at Stockton and Middlesborough on the Tees. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £13. 9. 4., and in the gift of the Bishop of Durham: the net income, previously £138; was augmented by the late bishop, Dr. Van Mildert. The impropriate tithes, belonging to the landowners, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £119. 1. 6., and those of the perpetual curate for one of £6. 7.; and there is a glebe of 23 acres.

AUCKLAND, BISHOP, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of ST. ANDREW-AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 10½ miles (S. W.) from Durham, and 252 (N. by W.) from London; containing 3776 inhabitants. This place, in common with others in the immediate vicinity, derives its name from the great number of oak trees that formerly grew in the neighbourhood, and its prefix from an episcopal palace, in which the bishops of the diocese, who are lords of the manor, occasionally reside. The town, which is in the centre of the parish, is pleasantly situated on a considerable eminence, near the confluence of the rivers Gaunless and Wear; in a fertile district, abounding with coal and limestone, and remarkable for the salubrity of the air: the streets are badly paved, but the houses are well built, and the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water. The palace, originally erected in the reign of Edward I. by Bishop Anthony Beck, and subsequently enlarged, was much injured by Sir Arthur Haslerigg, to whom it was sold by the Parliamentary Commissioners, but after the Restoration it was repaired by Bishop Cosins: it stands in a beautiful park to the north-east of the town, and is a spacious structure, surrounded with plantations and pleasure-grounds watered by the Gaunless. The chapel attached to the palace is a fine edifice, in the early and decorated styles, and was built originally by Bishop Beck, and repaired, about 1660, by Bishop Cosins, whose remains are deposited in it. The market is on Thursday; and the fairs are in March and October, but on no fixed day. The Bishop-Auckland and Weardale railway, constructed chiefly for the conveyance of coal, and a few passengers, branches off from the Stockton and Darlington railway at Shildon, to connect that line with the Witton Park colliery, and passes near the town; it takes a course of eight miles, and terminates by a short branch in the township of Crook. It passes over numerous embankments and bridges in its progress, and through several tunnels, and various roads are carried over it by bridges: the embankment at Holdforth alone cost £11,000, and the line was completed at an expense of £96,000, of which £72,000 were raised in original shares, and the remainder by loan. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions monthly; and courts leet and baron are held annually, at the former of which a bailiff and other officers are appointed.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham: the chapel, dedicated to St. Anne, is small, and very inadequate to the purposes for which it was designed. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded by James I., and is endowed with land, a house and garden for the master, and a rent-charge, producing an income of about £60 per annum; the management is vested in twelve governors, who are a body corporate, and have a common seal: the schoolroom, over which is St. Anne's chapel, was rebuilt in 1783. A school for twenty boys was founded by Mr. Walton, in 1772. A central school on Dr. Bell's system, for 200 children, was established in 1810, by Bishop Barrington, who also founded a school of industry for girls, in 1815: there are apartments for the master and usher, and for a housekeeper and female servant, also accommodation for persons admitted to learn the duties of schoolmasters on the national system; about thirty of the boys are clothed, and the average annual expenditure amounts to £367. Almshouses for two men and two women were founded and endowed by Bishop Cosins, in the reign of Charles II.; the inmates are clothed every third year, and receive an allowance of about £15 per annum each.

AUCKLAND, WEST, a township, in the parish of ST. ANDREW-AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 2310 inhabitants. This place is situated at the junction of the high road from Durham to Barnard Castle with that from Darlington to Wolsingham; the river Gaunless winds in a devious course through the township, and the railway from Stockton to Witton Park extends along its eastern extremity, and has a principal station near the village. A court leet, for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held twice a-year. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a free school, founded by Mrs. Margaret Hubback in 1798, is endowed with about £30 per annum, and conducted on the national plan. The place gives the title of Baron to the family of Eden, who formerly resided here: the estates now belong to Sir R. J. Eden, Bart.

AUDENSHAW, a division, in the parish and union of ASHTON-UNDER-LINE, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Manchester; comprising the villages of Audenshaw, Hooleyhill, Littlemoss, North-street, Walkmill, and Woodhouses, and containing 5374 inhabitants. The name of this place, in ancient documents written Aldwinshagh, is said to be derived from the Saxon Aldwin, an elder or chieftain, and Shagh, a wood. It is supposed to have belonged, prior to the Conquest, to some Saxon thane, whose residence was on or near the site of the present village, which exhibits appearances of earlier cultivation than the surrounding district, the latter consisting mostly of woods and morasses. A small hamlet in the division derives its name of Danehead from its situation at the head of an extensive valley called "the Danes," probably from some battle which took place there between that people and the Saxons: it is traversed by a stream which falls into the river Mersey. The Ashton-under-Line canal passes through the division, and a large reservoir has been constructed here for supplying the town of Manchester with water. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the various branches of the hat manufacture, and in weaving. There is a place of worship for Methodists of the New Connexion. A parochial school was founded about the year 1745, and endowed by Miles Hilton with two estates in the parish of Manchester, producing £40 per annum; the schoolroom, with a large house for the master, was erected at an expense of nearly £1000, defrayed partly by subscription, and partly by the appropriation of the income arising from the endowment.

AUDLEBY, a hamlet, in the parish and union of CAISTON, S. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 28 inhabitants.

AUDLEM (St. James), a parish, partly in the union of DRAYTON, but chiefly in that of NANTWICH, hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER; comprising the townships of Audlem, Buerton, Hankelow, and Tittenley, and part of Dodcot cum Wilkesley; and containing 2827 inhabitants, of whom 1621 are in the township of Audlem, 6 miles (S.) from Nantwich. A grant of a weekly market, and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow of St. James the Apostle, was obtained in the 24th of Edward I., both which, after long disuse, were revived a few years since. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Sir R. S. Cotton, Bart. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A free grammar school was endowed about the middle of the seventeenth century, by Mr. Ralph Bolton, with £20 per annum, and a similar sum arising from a bequest of Mr. Thomas Gammull, both of London; £40 were also given for its benefit by the Rev. William Evans. There is likewise a preparatory English school for younger boys and girls, endowed by Tryphena, the widow of Mr. Ralph Bolton, of Hankelow, with a modus of the tithes of hay, and a house and half an acre of land; and a school for girls, commenced in 1833, is supported by Miss Warburton.

AUDLEY (St. James), a parish, in the union of NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LINE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, and of the county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (N. W.) from Newcastle; containing 4474 inhabitants, and consisting of the townships of Audley, Bignall End, Eardley-End, Halmer-End, Knowl-End, Park-End, and Talk-o'-th'-Hill. This place was originally given by Hervey de Stafford to the barons of Aldeleigh, or Audley, who erected the baronial residence called Heyley Castle, of which there are still some remains, occupying the summit of a steep rock near the south-western boundary of the parish, and commanding extensive views over the surrounding country. The parish, which comprises upwards of 1200 acres, and is almost entirely appropriated to dairy farming, abounds with excellent iron-stone and coal, the latter of which is sent in large quantities by the Trent and Mersey canal to Cheshire, and to other parts. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £430, and the impropriate, belonging to George Tollet, Esq., the patron, for one of £664. The church is in the early style of English architecture, with an embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The free grammar school, founded in 1622 by Edward Vernon, Esq., has an endowment in land producing £125. 18. per annum; and a free school at Talk-o'-th'-Hill, in which writing and arithmetic are taught, is endowed with land yielding a rent of £13. A national school has also been erected. Near the village are vestiges of an intrenchment, and on the western boundary of the parish are situated, on a lofty rock, the remains of the ancient and strong castle of Heyley, or Heleigh, the ascent to which, on the south side, is more than 100 yards in height. Audley gives the title of Baron to the family of Touchet.

AUGHTON, a chapelry, in the parish of HALTON, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing 134 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £140; patron, Rector of Halton; impropriators, Rector of Halton, Vicar of Lancaster, and R. F. Bradshaw, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. George.

AUGHTON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S. W.) from Ormskirk; containing 1560 inhabitants. It comprises 3943*a.* 14*p.*, and is intersected by the Liverpool and Wigan canal. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 15. 5.; net income, £676; patron, John Plumbe Tempest, Esq. The tithes were commuted, under an inclosure act, for 35 acres of land, and the glebe comprises 9½ acres. The church is an ancient building, with a steeple in the centre. There are two Roman Catholic chapels.

AUGHTON (All Souls), a parish, partly in the union of HOWDEN, and partly in that of POCKLINGTON, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK; containing, with the chapelry of East Cottingwith and the township of Laytham, 634 inhabitants, of whom 217 are in the township of Aughton, 8½ miles (N. N. W.) from Howden. The parish is situated on the left bank of the navigable river Derwent, and presents a tolerably level surface. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4; net income, £90, with a glebe-house, erected in 1839 by the Rev. John Earle, incumbent; patron, James Fletcher, Esq. The church, of which the chancel was rebuilt in 1839, has a low embattled tower, built by Christopher, son of the unfortunate Robert Aske, who was beheaded and hung in chains at York in the reign of Henry VIII., 1537, as a principal in the insurrection called the "Pilgrimage of Grace," occasioned by the suppression of the monasteries. On the chancel floor is a fine brass slab, on which are graven the effigies of Richard Aske and his lady, who died in the fifteenth century. There is a parochial school, established by the Rev. J. Earle. Near the east bank of the river Derwent, the moats and trenches of an ancient castle are still visible; and in the vicinity of the church is a large mound of earth, celebrated as the site of the castellated mansion of the Aske family.

AUGHTON, a township, in the parish of ASTON, union of ROTHERHAM, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 8 miles (E.) from Sheffield; containing 108 inhabitants. This place, called in Domesday book Actone, Haetone, and Haestone, was formerly the residence of the family of West, of whom was Sir William West, a soldier in the army of Henry VIII., and who had, in reward for his services, beneficial grants of abbey lands: the family resided here till the latter end of the reign of Elizabeth. The township, which is situated on the Rotherham and Mansfield road, is separated from the county of Derby by the river Rother; the surface is varied, and the scenery pleasingly diversified: coal is found, and there is a mine at present in operation. The North-Midland railway passes through the township. Aughton Hall, the seat of Robert C. Hoyle, Esq., is a handsome residence. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans, the latter built in 1843, on a site given by Mr. Hoyle.

AUKBOROUGH (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, N. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINSEY, county of LINCOLN, 10½ miles (W.) from Barton-upon-Humber; containing, with the hamlet of Walcot, 528 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Whitton united, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £209; patrons, Bishop of Lincoln and M. Constable, Esq., the latter of whom is impropriator and lord of the manor. The vicarial tithes of Aukborough have been commuted for a rent-charge of £12. 2. 4., and the incumbent has also a glebe of 53 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free school is endowed with £16. 13. 4. per annum; and there are also other schools, partly supported by Mr. Constable. An almshouse, containing ten rooms, is occupied by ten poor persons; and a rent-charge of £2 has been assigned on the inclosure, between the parish clerk and the poor. The place is thought by Dr. Stukeley to have been the Arquis of the geographer of Ravennas.

AUKLEY, a township, in the parish of FINNINGLEY, union of DONCASTER, partly in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, and partly in the soke of DONCASTER, W. riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Bawtry; containing 418 inhabitants. This township comprises about 2391 acres, of which 827 are in the Nottinghamshire portion. In 1838, a chapel of ease was erected at a cost of £700, containing 250 sittings; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

AULT-HUCKNALL, a parish, in the union of MANSFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Mansfield; containing, with the hamlets of Rowthorne and Stainsby, 678 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 4285 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 0. 5.; patron and impropiator, Duke of Devonshire. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £105, and there are more than 27 acres of glebe; the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £34. At Hardwicke, in the parish, is a school, towards the support of which Thomas Whitehead, in 1729, bequeathed a house and land producing £23. 15. per annum; it is also endowed with property in the parish of Edensor.

AULTON, county of DERBY.—See ALLTON.

AUNSBY (ST. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Falkingham; containing 117 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Lincoln to London, and comprises 1089 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 0. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of J. A. Houblon, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £249, and there are about 11 acres of glebe and a glebe-house. The church, which is in the early English style, is a small edifice, having in the windows some remains of beautifully stained glass: the font also has some remarkable ornaments.

AUST, a chapelry, in the parish of HENBURY, union of THORNBURY, Upper division of the hundred of HENBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Thornbury; containing 191 inhabitants. This place derived its name, anciently Austre Clive, signifying "the southern cliffs," from its situation on the south bank of the Severn, among bold and lofty cliffs projecting into the river, which is here two miles in breadth. About half a mile below the village, which is surrounded by salt marshes, and immediately opposite to the estuary formed by the junction of the Severn and the Wye, is the ferry called the Old Passage, supposed to have been the site of the ancient Vectis of the Romans. Alabaster is procured in great quantities; and those rare minerals, the sulphate and carbonate of strontian, are found in the cliffs which line the banks of the Severn, and which abound with various fossil remains. The chapel is in the ancient English style. The place is distinguished as having been the residence of Wycliffe, the celebrated reformer.

AUSTELL, ST. (THE HOLY TRINITY), a market-town, parish, and the head of a union, in the E. division of the hundred of POWDER and of the county of CORNWALL, 34 miles (S. W.) from Launceston, and 252 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 10,320 inhabitants. This place, in the reign of Henry VIII., was an obscure village, and first rose into importance from its vicinity to Polgooth and other considerable mines. In the civil war, the town, in which part of the army under the Earl of Essex had been quartered, was taken by Charles I. a short time prior to the capitulation of the parliamentarians near Lostwithiel, in 1644. In 1760 the great road from Plymouth to the Land's End was brought through this place, which is now a considerable thoroughfare. The town is pleasantly situated in a well-cultivated district, on the south side of a hill sloping gradually to a small stream; the streets are paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The trade principally consists of the produce of its numerous mines of tin and copper, and in china-stone and clay of a very superior quality, which are found here in great abundance; the manufacture of coarse woollen cloth is also carried on to a small extent. The mines in the vicinity are exceedingly productive, and, from the improved manner of working them, promise continued prosperity to the town, the population of which has been trebled within the last twenty years. The parish comprises about 11,000 acres: freestone of excellent quality abounds; and near the harbour of Pentewan is a very extensive quarry, from which have been raised materials for the erection of many churches and mansions in the county. Several harbours have been formed in different parts. Many vessels are engaged in the importation of coal from Wales, for the use of the mines, and in the exportation of copper-ore for smelting, and of china-stone and clay to the different potteries, and for the use of linen-bleachers. The principal part of the grain tin produced in Cornwall is obtained here, and blowing-houses for melting it have been erected near the town. A considerable pilchard fishery is also carried on, in which many boats, fitted out from the different harbours, are employed. The market, which is considerable for corn and provisions, is on Friday; and there are fairs on the Thursday next after Palm-Sunday, the Thursday after Whit-Sunday, the nearest Friday to July 23rd, and on Nov. 30th. In 1842 an act was obtained for providing a new market-place, removing the old market-house, erecting a new one, and regulating the markets and fairs. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, by whom constables and other officers are appointed; and the Blackmore, the most considerable of the stannary courts, is held here.

The LIVING is a vicarage, with that of St. Blazey annexed, valued in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of the Crown; impropiators, Miss Rashleigh, and J. B. Tremayne, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £537. 16., and the glebe comprises about an acre, with a large garden. The church combines various styles of English architecture, and has a very handsome tower richly ornamented with sculpture. There are places of worship for Baptists, Bryanites, Calvinists, the Society of Friends, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Warrenites, and Plymouth Brethren; and a national school has been erected. The poor law union of St. Austell comprises fifteen parishes and places, and contains a population of 31,417. At Menacuddle and Towan, in the parish, are baptismal wells, over which are ancient buildings in the early English style, covered with arched roofs of granite. In one of the celebrated tin stream-works of Pentewan, the bones of men, of oxen of enormous size, of a whale, and of animals now unknown, have been found.

AUSTERFIELD, a chapelry, in the parish of BLYTH, union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Bawtry; containing 314 inhabitants. This place is in Domesday book called Oustre-field, and derives its name probably from some old form of the cardinal point of the compass, east; though it is said by some to be derived from the Roman general Ostorius, who was defeated here by the Britons. It has been the property of the families of Busli, Vipont, De Spenser, and Neville, from whom it passed to the crown; and has since descended, with Bawtry, to the present owner. The township comprises 2710 acres, including the hamlet of Brancroft and Finningley Park. The chapelry is a curacy annexed to Bawtry: the small tithes for the common were commuted for land in 1765.

AUSTERSON, a township, in the parish of ACTON, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing 55 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £20. 3. 5., and the impropriate for one of £91. 12.

AUSTHORPE, a township, in the parishes of WHITKIRK and GARTFORTH, Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Leeds; containing 173 inhabitants. It is situated near the railway and turnpike-road from Leeds to Selby. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £150. 6., payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, and the vicarial for one of £6. 19.; and there is also a glebe of about $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres. John Smeaton, distinguished as a civil engineer, and who rebuilt the Eddystone lighthouse, was born here in 1724.

AUSTHWAITE, with BIRKER, a township, in the parish of MILLOM, union of BOOTLE, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 105 inhabitants. It is situated on the south side of the river Esk, and contains the lake Devockwater, and the waterfalls of Birker Force and Stanley Gill. The inhabitants marry, bury, &c. at the chapel of Eskdale.

AUSTONLEY, a township, in the parish of ALMONDBURY, union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Huddersfield; containing 1940 inhabitants, who are mostly engaged in the manufacture of woollen cloth, for which there are numerous mills. The district comprises 3219a. 2r. 12p., and consists of a deep valley, and large tracts of mountain and moor. A district church, dedicated to St. David, was erected at a cost of about £2500 at Holme-bridge, by subscription, in 1828, for the accommodation of the inhabitants of this township and Holme. A parsonage-house is in course of erection; and a school has recently been built.

AUSTREY (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of TAMWORTH, Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Tamworth; containing 479 inhabitants. The parish is situated in the northern part of the county, on the border of Leicestershire, which bounds it on the east; and consists of 2080 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £162. A school is endowed with the interest of £150, bequeathed by the late Miss Toon, and is also supported, partly by the trustees of a charity for apprenticing boys and other purposes, and partly by subscription.

AUSTWICK, a township, in the parish of CLAPHAM, union of SETTLE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWGROSS, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. W.) from Settle; containing 599 inhabitants. This place, in the Domesday survey "Oustewic," belonged in the reign of Henry V. to John de Harrington, on whose death without issue it passed to his brother, and was by him conveyed to Sir Arthur D'Arcy, who, in 1547, sold it to John Redmayne. The manor, in 1551, became the property of the Duke of Suffolk, from whom it passed to Sir John Yorke, who, in 1559, sold it to Sir Richard Shuttleworth, in whose family it remained till 1782, when it was purchased by the late James Farrer, Esq., father of the present proprietor. The township, which includes the hamlet of Wharfe, and part of that of Feizor, is situated beneath the shelter of a rocky and precipitous projection of the Ingleborough mountain; and comprises by computation 5400 acres, a considerable portion of which is freehold, and leasehold on long leases; the lands are chiefly in pasture, and the population is partly employed in agriculture, and partly in the weaving of cotton. The village is neatly built, and a fair for cattle is held on the Thursday before Whitsuntide, and is generally well attended. A chapel of ease was erected in 1840, at the expense of Charles Ingleby, Esq. and his sister, the late Miss E. A. Ingleby, and is a neat structure, containing 370 sittings, of which 70 are free; the living is held with the vicarage of Clapham, and endowed by the principal proprietors with £44 per annum, since increased by a bequest from Miss Ingleby of £26 per annum. Attached to the church are a good glebe-house and a Sunday schoolroom, erected by the founders. Lawrence Banks, in the reign of James I., bequeathed lands now producing £12 per annum, of which one moiety was appropriated to the poor of this township in conjunction with those of Clapham, Newby, and Lawkland. Isabella Sherburne, in 1693, left £45 to the poor of the place, for which, with some smaller bequests, £4. 15. 6. is paid as interest by the overseers; and in 1818, Elizabeth Ingleby bequeathed £10 per annum to the poor, charged on the estate of Charles Ingleby, Esq., by whom it is distributed among them. Richard Green, Esq., in 1750, left £50 to the poor, and Thomas Green, Esq. a rent-charge of £3 to the schoolmaster for instructing six children; and Ann Hargreave also bequeathed £3 per annum, for teaching three children.

AUTHORPE (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Alford; containing 117 inhabitants. It comprises 921a. 1r. 13p., including roads; the substratum is a chalk rock of good quality, which is burnt into lime. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Robert Vyner, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £158, and there are 29 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. £5. 10. per annum are paid to the rector for charitable uses from Taylor's charity.

AVEBURY (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of MARLBOROUGH, hundred of SELKLEY, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and N. divisions of WILTS, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Marlborough; containing, with the tythings of Beckhampton and Kenet, 751 inhabitants. This parish, in which the river Kennet has its source, comprises about 4641 acres; the soil is a light earth, resting on chalk, and the surface undulated. The village is built on a portion of the area anciently occupied by a stupendous monument, called Abury, supposed to have been constructed by the Britons, for the purposes of religious worship or national assemblies. It consisted of an extensive ditch and rampart, including double circles of large unhewn stones, many of which have been broken, and used as materials for building the houses in the village, and for other purposes. In the vicinity are several barrows, and among them the very large and remarkable one, close to the turnpike-road, called Silbury hill, which covers an area of five acres and thirty-four perches, and exceeds in dimensions every similar work in Great Britain, being 2027 feet in circumference at the base, and 120 at the summit; its sloping height, 316 feet, and its perpendicular height, 170 feet. Within a short distance of this are remarkable stones, termed the Grey Wethers, and about a mile north of the village is a cromlech. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which that of Winterbourne-Monkton was united in 1747, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £178; patron, the Crown; impropriators, the family of Hopkins. The glebe consists of 16 acres. The church is of Norman architecture. In 1792, Susannah Holford bequeathed £200, directing the interest to be applied to the instruction of children. An alien priory, dependent on the Benedictine abbey of Bocheville, in Normandy, was founded here in the reign of Henry I. Robert of Avebury, who wrote a history of Edward III., is supposed to have been a native of the place.

AVELEY (St. MICHAEL), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of ORSETT, hundred of CHAFFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Purfleet, and 7 miles (S. S. E.) from Romford; containing 849 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by computation 2615 acres, is separated from that of West Thurrock by the creek Marditch. The village, though now small, was formerly a market-town of some importance. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 10. 5.; patron, Bishop of London; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £453. 15., and the vicarial for £327; the appropriate glebe consists of 30 acres, and there is one acre of vicarial glebe. The church is an ancient edifice, with a square tower of flint and stone, formerly surmounted by a lofty spire, which was blown down in 1703. An endowed almshouse, originally founded by Lord Newburgh in 1639, was rebuilt in 1745, by Lord Dacre; and a farm in the parish is charged with an annual payment of £6, divided among the poor.

AVENBURY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Bromyard; containing 382 inhabitants. The parish is intersected from north to south by the river Frome, and also by the road from Bromyard to Ledbury, and comprises 3178 acres, including about 200 acres of hop grounds; a small portion of limestone is found within its limits. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 9.; net income, £49; patron, the Crown; impropriator, E. Higginson, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £422. 15., and who has a glebe of $60\frac{1}{2}$ acres.

The church and its large endowments were anciently attached to the abbey of Dore.

AVENING (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of STROUD, hundred of LONGTREE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N.) from Tetbury; containing 2227 inhabitants. It has lately been made a polling-place for the eastern division of the county. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of the Heirs of the late Dr. Brooke: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £760, and the glebe comprises 104 acres. The church is supposed to have been built by the abess of Caen, in Normandy, to whom the manor belonged till the suppression of alien priories, in the reign of Henry V. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; also an endowed school in which six boys are clothed and educated.

AVERHAM (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SOUTHWELL, N. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Newark; containing, with the township of Staythorpe, 264 inhabitants. This place suffered from the hostilities of the contending parties during the parliamentary war in the reign of Charles I., and at the time of the siege of Newark many skirmishes occurred here; in 1644, the ancient manor-house, then belonging to Robert Sutton, Lord Lexington and Baron of Averham, and which had been the residence of the family from 1250, was destroyed. The parish comprises by measurement 2011 acres of fertile land; it is situated on the river Trent, and is intersected by the road from Newark to Southwell and Mansfield; the scenery is pleasing, and the village, with the church, which is on the margin of the river, forms a beautiful object in the landscape. The living is a rectory, with that of Kelham annexed in 1755, valued in the king's books at £20; patron, J. H. M. Sutton, Esq. The tithes of Averham have been commuted for a rent-charge of £787, and the glebe comprises nearly 58 acres. The church is a very handsome structure, in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, built by Sir Thomas Sutton in 1495. There are some remains of a Roman camp and a watch-tower on Michael Barrow hill.

AVETON-GIFFORD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of ERMINGTON, Ermington and Plympton, and S. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Modbury; containing 1057 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Avon, which is navigable to the English Channel, and over which is a bridge, on the road leading to South Enford. The lords of the manor had formerly the power of inflicting capital punishment. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £38. 1. 8.; net income, £586; patron, James Pitman, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, in the early style of English architecture, with later additions.

AVILLE, a hamlet, in the parish of DUNSTER, union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 17 inhabitants.

AVINGTON, a parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Hungerford; containing 93 inhabitants, and comprising 1143*a.* 1*r.* 3*p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £299. 10., and the glebe consists of 6 acres. The church exhibits a curious specimen of Norman architecture, having an arch separating the chancel from the nave, with an obtuse depending point in the centre: the font, which is also of Norman design, is adorned with sculptured figures under arches.

AVINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the hundred of FAWLEY, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Winchester; containing 204 inhabitants. Avington House, the mansion of the Duke of Buckingham, is situated near the bank of the river Itchen, in a demesne tastefully laid out: near the house are some fine old trees, and the sloping grounds behind it are embellished with thriving plantations. Charles II., while engaged in his projected palace at Winchester, spent much of his time here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £264. 13. 6., and the glebe comprises about 25 acres. A school is supported by the Duchess of Buckingham.

AVON, a tything, in the parish of SOPLEY, union and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ringwood and S. divisions of HANTS; containing 207 inhabitants.

AVON, a hamlet, in the parish of STRATFORD-UNDER-THE-CASTLE, union of ALDERBURY, hundred of UNDERDITCH, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 23 inhabitants.

AVON, a tything, in the parish of CHRISTIAN-MALFORD, union and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (N. E.) from Chippenham; containing 76 inhabitants.

AVON-DASSET.—See DASSET, AVON.

AWBRIDGE, a hamlet, in the parish of MITCHELMERSH, union of ROMSEY, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 345 inhabitants.

AWLISCOMBE (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of HEMYOCK, Honiton and N. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Honiton; containing 590 inhabitants. It comprises 2127 acres by measurement, and is bounded by the river Otter on the south; the surface is hilly, and the soil in general a rich productive marl, chiefly laid out in pasture. The living, which before the Dissolution was attached to the abbey at Tavistock, is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 10. 10.; patron, Duke of Bedford; impropiators, the family of Drewe. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £200, and £170 are paid to the trustees of Kelland's charity; the glebe consists of 30 acres, with a house. The church, which is in the later English style, was erected about the time of Henry VI., and has a handsome stone screen, and a magnificent window, finely ornamented: it is in excellent order, having been repaired in 1838, at an expense of nearly £500. There are two schools, supported by subscription. The remains of a large encampment, supposed to be Roman, called Hembury fort, are in the parish.

AWNBY, with HOLYWELL, a chapelry, in the parish of BYTHAM-CASTLE, union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Stamford; containing 98 inhabitants. The tithes and moduses were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1801.

AWRE (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of WESTBURY, hundred of BLEDISLOE, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing, with Blakeney, a post-town in the parish, and the tythings of Awre, Bledisloe, Hagloe, and Etloe, 1277 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected by the road from Gloucester to Chepstow, forms a promontory of the river Severn, and comprises 4082 acres by admeasurement; the port of Gatcomb, and a town named Pomerton once included within it, do not now exist. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 5., and in the patronage of the Haberdashers' Company, London: the impropriate tithes belong to the company, and have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, and the vicarial for £450. 7.; the glebe consists of nearly 9 acres, and there is a glebe-house recently built. Besides the parochial church, there is a chapel of ease at Blakeney, where are also a Baptist chapel, and a national school. In the register, it is recorded that Thomas Sternhold and John Hopkins, who collected the metrical version of the Psalms, resided in the parish.

AWSWORTH, a chapelry, in the parish of NUT-HALL, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Nottingham; containing 294 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £101; patron, the Rector.

AXBRIDGE (St. John the Baptist), a market-town and parish, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 18 miles (S. by W.) from Bristol, and 130 (W. by S.) from London; containing 1045 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from a bridge over the river

Corporation Seal.

Axe, was formerly the residence of some of the West Saxon monarchs, by whom it was invested with many privileges. The town is of mean appearance, and indifferently paved, but amply supplied with water. The chief occupation of the poorer class of inhabitants was the knitting of stockings, but that trade was destroyed by the introduction of machinery, and the prosperity of the town declined until a fresh impulse was given to it by the drainage of the adjacent levels, which so much increased the value of the property in the neighbourhood, that land which previously was reckoned worth only 2s. 6d., is now let for £5 and £6 per acre. The navigation of the river Axe also has been greatly improved by an act obtained in 1802, whereby it has been made toll-free. The market is on Saturday; and fairs for cattle are held on Feb. 3rd, and March 25th, and day following.

Axbridge received its first charter of incorporation from Philip and Mary in 1556, but it was superseded by one granted by Elizabeth, in 1598, the defects of which were supplied by a subsequent one of James I., and these two last have been the governing charters. The corporate body consists of a mayor, recorder, alderman, eight capital burgesses or councillors, and an indefinite number of free burgesses; and a bailiff, town-clerk and prothonotary, chamberlain, and several other officers are also appointed. The corporation hold a court of quarter-sessions, a court of pie-poudre during the fairs, and, as lords of the manor, a court baron once a year, generally in October. A new guildhall and market-house has been erected by the corporation, at a cost, including the improvements connected with it, of about £1800. Axbridge sent members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., but discontinued in the 17th of Edward III., on petition of the burgesses. The parish comprises 541*a. 2r. 30p.* of productive land; and the Mendip hill, close to the town, abounds with limestone of excellent quality for building and for burning into lime. The LIVING is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 4. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £62. 3., and the glebe comprises 36 acres. The church is a very ancient structure, occupying an elevated situation on the north-eastern side of the town, and supposed to have been erected by one of the West Saxon monarchs, two of whose statues formerly ornamented the tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. About £100 per annum, arising from lands bequeathed by different individuals, are applied to the relief of the poor. The union of Axbridge comprises 38 parishes and places, and contains a population of 32,206. Near the town is a mineral spring, which has been found efficacious in chronic diseases.

AXFORD, a tything, in the parish and hundred of RAMSBURY, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and N. divisions of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Marlborough; containing 485 inhabitants.

AXMINSTER (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of AXMINSTER, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, 25 miles (E. by N.) from Exeter, and 147 (W. S. W.) from London, on the road to Exeter; comprising the tythings of Abbey, Beerhall, Shapwick, Smallridge, Town, Trill, Uphay, Westwater, Weycroft, and Wyke; and containing 2860 inhabitants, of whom 2139 are in the town. This place, of which the name is derived from its situation near the river Axe, and from a minster founded here by King Athelstan, was, in the time of the Saxons, a town of considerable importance, and the burial-place of many of their princes. In 1644, a conflict took place in the vicinity, between the royalists and the parliamentarians, in which Sir Richard Cholmondeley, who commanded the former, was slain. The town, which is irregularly built, is pleasantly situated on the declivity of a hill, near the confluence of the rivers Axe and Yarty, over the former of which three bridges have been erected; it is paved, partially lighted, and amply supplied with water from several good springs. Races are held in August at Shute hill, three miles distant; and there are assemblies occasionally at the George hotel. The manufacture of carpets, which had been established for nearly a century, has been recently transferred to Wilton, and the only manufacture now carried on is that of tape. The parish produces stone of good quality for building, and for burning into lime.

The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the first Tuesday after April 25th, the first Wednesday after June 24th, and the first Wednesday after Oct. 10th. Courts leet and baron are held annually by the lord of the manor, at the former of which constables and other officers are appointed. The LIVING is a vicarage, with Kilmington and Membury annexed, valued in the king's books at £44. 6. 8.; net income, £975; patrons, Prebendaries of Warthill and Grendale in the Cathedral of York, as appropriators of the rectory, which is rated at £40. 6. 8. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £670. 10., payable to the prebendaries, and of £608. 13. 4., payable to the vicar. The church is an ancient structure, of various styles; the entrance is under a fine Norman arch richly moulded; the interior is of the early English style, with later insertions; and the pulpit and reading-desk are curiously carved. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. Twelve children are instructed in the parochial school, for the amount of benefactions made for that purpose. The poor law union of Axminster comprises 11 parishes and places in the county of Devon, and 6 in that of Dorset; and contains a population of 20,585. About a mile south of the town, on the bank of the river Axe, are the remains of Newenham abbey, consisting of the chapel, kitchen, and other parts; and, at the distance of three miles, is an intrenchment called Musbury Castle.

AXMOUTH, a parish, in the union and hundred of AXMINSTER, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Colyton; containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Horsedown, 645 inhabitants. This place, from the numerous traces of Roman occupation on the eastern bank of the river Axe, which intersects the parish, is supposed to have been the Moridunum of the Romans. The manor formerly belonged to the abbey of Syon, in Middlesex, and was given at the dissolution by Henry VIII. to his queen Catharine Parr, as part of her dower, at whose death it reverted to the crown, and was granted by Edward VI., in 1552, to Walter Erle, Esq. In the year 1839, a very remarkable and extensive subsidence of the surface took place about a mile and a half from the village, on the farms of Dowlands and Bindon, near the coast. The parish contains 3788*a. 3r. 9p.*, of which the surface is beautifully diversified with hill and dale, and is in many parts highly picturesque; the soil on the hills is chalky, well adapted for corn and the pasturage of sheep, and that in the valleys is a strong clay and marl, and is excellent dairy land; limestone and good building-stone are abundant. The village is situated near the mouth of the river Axe, which here falls into the English Channel; near its influx a commodious harbour has been recently constructed by Richard Hallet, Esq., which is accessible to coasting vessels of 200 tons' burthen. The living is a vicarage, endowed with one-third of the rectorial, and two-thirds of the vicarial tithes, valued in the king's books at £22. 19. 2.; net income, £230; patron, J. H. Hallet, Esq., who, with others, is impropiator of the remainder of the tithes. The glebe comprises 30 acres. The church is a very ancient Norman structure, having two Saxon arches, and a fine specimen of the zig-zag arch in the north porch, now converted into a vestry-room. On an extra-parochial estate of about 200 acres called Roosdown; in the centre of the parish, is a chapel endowed with certain lands from Queen Anne's Bounty, but no duty has been performed in it within the memory of man. On Hawksdown hill is a large encampment supposed to be of Roman or Danish origin.

AYCLIFFE (St. Acca), a parish, partly in the union of DARLINGTON, and partly in that of SEDGEFIELD, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 5 miles (N.) from Darlington; containing 1372 inhabitants, of whom 823 are in the township of Great Aycliffe. This place is supposed by Spelman to have been the ancient "Aclea," where synods were held in 782 and 789; and two old Saxon crosses lately discovered in the churchyard, apparently warrant that conjecture. The parish, which is situated in the southern portion of the county, comprises 10,716 acres of arable and pasture land, in nearly equal portions, and of which 2134 are within the township of Great Aycliffe; the soil is tolerably fertile, and the meadows and pastures are rich; magnesian limestone of very pure quality is found in abundance, and is extensively quarried. The village is pleasantly situated on the road from Darlington to Durham, and on the west bank of the river Skerne, on which are a spinning-mill, and a mill for the manufacture of brown paper, but not now in use. The Clarence railway intersects the parish, and a branch from the main line joins the Stockton and Darlington railway within a distance of three-quarters of a mile; and the Great North of England railway to Newcastle also skirts the village. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Durham: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £386. 1. 8., payable to the vicar, £165. 3. 8., to the Dean and Chapter, and £238. 7. 2. to two canonries in the Cathedral of Durham. The church is a very ancient structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English style, and contains 500 sittings, of which 70 are free; the old porch has been restored, several new windows have been inserted, and the structure has been generally repaired. There is a good Church of England school in the township, which will contain 130 scholars, and is supported by voluntary contributions.

AYCLIFFE, SCHOOL, a township, in the parish of HEIGHINGTON, union of DARLINGTON, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 7½ miles (N. by W.) from Darlington; containing 25 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Scholacleley, gave name to a resident family, of whom John de Scholacleley died in 1350; it was a manor belonging to the Nevills, and was granted, in 1411, by Lord Nevill to Robert de Binchester, to be held of the bishop by military service, suit at the head courts of the county, and a payment yearly to the Durham exchequer. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £74. 16.

AYDON, a township, in the parish of CORBRIDGE, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5½ miles (E. by N.) from Hexham; containing 83 inhabitants. It is said by some to have derived its name from Aidon, which in the British language signifies a wing or troop of horse, many of which were stationed near the great wall. The Reed family once occupied a good house and a small estate here; at present several families have land in the township. Lead-ore and coal exist, but in very small quantities. Several Roman relics have been found, including two urns, the effigy of a human being, &c.

AYDON-CASTLE, a township, in the parish of CORBRIDGE, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (E. by N.) from Hexham; containing 25 inhabitants. The castle, which gives name to the township, stands on the west side of a deep precipice, at the foot of which runs a small rivulet; it appears to have been of great extent and strength, and was encompassed by an outer wall, in which the loop-holes still remain. For several generations Ayton belonged to the baronial family of Aydon, or Ayton, and was anciently part of the barony of Hugh de Baliol: in 1272, it was the seat of Emma de Aydon, an heiress, who intermarried with Peter de Walles, and was subsequently partly possessed by the Kaymes, of Bolam; it afterwards became the estate of the families of Collinson and Douglas, from which latter the castle and manor descended to the Blacketts, of Matfen, and is now the property of Sir Edward Blackett, Bart. The fortress was destroyed by the Scots during their inroad into England, which ended in their defeat at the battle of Nevill's Cross, in 1346.

AYLBURTON, a chapelry, in the parish of LIDNEY, union of CHEPSTOW, hundred of BLEDISLOE, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Blakeney; containing 468 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

AYLESBEAR (St. CHRISTOPHER), a parish, in the union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, 8 miles (E.) from Exeter; containing, with the tything of Newton-Poppleford, 982 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2701 acres, of which 1033 are arable, 823 meadow and pasture, 92 orchard, 53 coppice, and 700 common or waste land; and is bounded on the east by the river Otter: the surface is hilly, and the soil divided between a stiff cold clay and light sand. There is a silk and ribbon manufactory. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Newton-Poppleford annexed, valued in the king's books at £16. 2. 4.; net income, £123; patron and incumbent, Rev. H. W. Marker, to whom, and the rector of Huxham, the impropriation belongs. The glebe contains about 44 acres. There is a chapel at Newton-Poppleford, of modern architecture, rebuilt in 1826, by subscription.

AYLESBURY (St. MARY), a borough, market-town, parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, of which it is the county town, 16½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and 38 (N. W. by W.) from London, by Watford; containing, with the hamlet of Walton, 5429 inhabitants. This place appears to have been one of the strongest fortresses possessed by the ancient Britons, from whom it was taken in the year 571, by Cutwulph, brother of Ceawlin, King of the West Saxons, and to have had a castle of some importance, from which circumstance probably it derives its Saxon appellation Aeglesburge, of which its present name is only a slight modification. In the reign of the Conqueror this was a royal manor, and some lands here were granted by that monarch, upon the extraordinary tenure that the owners should provide straw for the monarch's bed, sweet herbs for his chamber, and two green geese and three eels for his table, whenever he should visit Aylesbury. In the civil war of the seventeenth century, the town was garrisoned for the parliament; but it does not appear to have had any further connexion with the political transactions of that period.

The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence, in a fertile vale, extending from Thame, in Oxfordshire, to Leighton, in Bedfordshire, and is lighted with gas, and paved under the direction of a body called "the Incorporated Surveyors," who derive their funds from land and houses devised by John Bedford for that purpose; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The houses are principally of brick, and the town has been greatly improved by the erection of some handsome private residences at the entrances into it from London and Buckingham; and the approaches have been rendered pleasant and commodious by the construction of a new road. The only manufacture is that of bone lace, which is carried on upon a very limited scale. Ducklings and tame rabbits are bred in great numbers, for the supply of the London market. The market, which is amply supplied, is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the Friday after the 18th of Jan., the Saturday before Palm-Sunday, May 8th, June 14th, Sept. 25th, and Oct. 12th; those in Jan., May, and Oct. not being chartered, are free from toll, and those in Sept. and Oct. are also for hiring servants. The river Thame, which separates the town from the hamlet of Walton, is not navigable; but a canal, which commences at the hamlet, communicates with the Grand Junction canal at Marsworth. The branch railway from this town, to the London and Birmingham line near Leighton Buzzard, was opened in June 1839, and is one continued level throughout, seven miles in length. There is a florists' and horticultural society, which from its foundation has been liberally supported, and has produced some fine shows of flowers and fruit.

The inhabitants received their first CHARTER from Queen Mary, in the year 1554, but the corporation soon lost their privileges, by neglecting to fill up vacancies, and the town is now within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty-sessions daily; and constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The elective franchise was conferred in 1554, and notwithstanding the loss of its charter, the borough has continued, since that time, to return two members to parliament. The right of election was originally vested in the corporation alone; and in the reign of Queen Anne, a disputed return for this place, in the cause of Ashby v. White, occasioned so serious a contest between the two houses, respecting the power of electors to bring actions against returning officers, for refusing to receive their votes, that the queen was obliged to prorogue the parliament, leaving the case undecided. After the loss of the charter, the two members were elected by the pot-wallopers; and in 1804, in a case of notorious bribery, an act was passed, extending the right of voting to the freeholders of the three hundreds of Aylesbury. The constables are the returning officers. The Lent assizes, and the quarter-sessions for the county, are held, and the knights of the shire elected, here. The county hall, with the magistrates' chamber, and offices of the clerk of the peace, form one range of brick building, of modern erection, with the county gaol and house of correction, which is well adapted to the classification of prisoners.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £24. 18. 1.; net income, £318; patron, Prebendary of Aylesbury in the Cathedral of Lincoln. The great tithes have been commuted for land: the vicar also has a house and garden, with two plots of land in lieu of tithes; and an annual stipend of £20 is payable to the prebendary, according to an act of parliament. An afternoon lecture, long supported by subscription, was endowed by the Marquess of Buckingham, about the close of the last century, with a rent-charge of £18, in consideration of which the vicar has for many years given a third service. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, in the decorated English style, with some earlier portions, and a low central tower; the western entrance is very rich: on the north side of the chancel is a chantry chapel, now used as a vestry-room, in which are still remaining some traces of Norman character; and on the south side is another chantry chapel, now used for the grammar school. From the number of Roman tiles still found in several parts of the building, it is probable that a tessellated pavement originally constituted the floor of the whole. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans, and one for Particular Baptists in the hamlet of Walton.

The Free Grammar School was founded by Sir Henry Lee, Knt., about the year 1611, and endowed with about £8 per annum, which was greatly augmented by Henry Phillips, Esq., who, by will in 1714, left £5000 in trust to be invested in land for its support: the property consists of a manor and estate at Broughton-Abbots, in the parish of Bierton, and upwards of £1800 in the three per cent. consols., producing together an income of about £540. The school premises, erected in 1719, comprise a long range of building adjoining the churchyard, and contain under one roof the reading and writing schools, and residences for the masters. There is also a British school, supported by subscription. Thomas Hickman, in 1695, bequeathed land and houses (of which five are occupied as almshouses), now let for £73 per annum, which, after defraying the expenses of repairs and other small charges, is distributed among decayed tradesmen and tradesmen's widows not receiving parochial relief. William Harding, of Walton, by his will proved in 1719, devised certain lands and tenements, now let for £289 per annum, by means of which about fourteen children of the parish are apprenticed annually, with premiums of £20 each; and there are also several charities for different purposes under the management of the churchwardens. A county infirmary, erected at the northern end of the town, chiefly through the exertions of John Lee, Esq., of Hartwell House, was opened for the reception of patients on the 23rd of October, 1833, and is a spacious building, consisting of a centre and two wings, the former of stone, and the latter of brick stuccoed in imitation of stone. The poor law union of Aylesbury comprises 40 parishes and places, and contains a population of 22,134. A monastery was founded here, about the year 600, and dedicated to St. Osyth; and there were also two ancient hospitals for lepers, dedicated respectively to St. John and St. Leonard, which had fallen into decay prior to the year 1360. A convent for Grey Friars, the only one in the county, was established in 1387, by James, Earl of Ormond: its site was subsequently occupied by a mansion belonging to Sir John Baldwin, Knt., lord chief justice of the common pleas; but during the civil war the house sustained so much damage, that it has never since been inhabited as a seat by any private gentleman. The celebrated John Wilkes resided here for a long time, and for some years represented the borough in parliament. The place gives the titles of Earl and Marquess to the ancient family of Bruce.

AYLESBY (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Great Grimsby; containing 201 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected by the road from Grimsby to Brigg, comprises by computation 2000 acres, on which there are several plantations, but the greater portion of the land is arable. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £73; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. T. Drake. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £537. 6. 8., and there are 36 acres of appropriate glebe. The church is an ancient structure with a tower, on the outside of which, near the summit, are two large elder-trees which bear fruit, and are flourishing.

AYLESFORD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of MALLING, hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 3½ miles (N. N. W.) from Maidstone; containing 1344 inhabitants. This place was called Saissenaihobail by the Britons, in commemoration of their having here defeated the Saxons; and by the latter, after their settlement in the country, Eaglesford, of which the present name is a corruption. In the battle above mentioned, which took place in 455, Horsa, the brother of Hengist, on the side of the Saxons, and Catigern, the son of Vortigern, on the side of the Britons, were slain. In 893, Alfred defeated the Danes at Fenham, in the parish; and in 1016, Edmund Ironside, in a fierce encounter with those invaders, pursued them to this place with great slaughter, and drove them hence to Sheppy. In 1240, Ralph Frisburn, on his return from the Holy Land, founded a Carmelite monastery, under the patronage of Richard, Lord Grey, of Codnor, many parts of which are entire, though the greater portion of the site is occupied by a mansion, erected by Sir William Sedley, and now the residence of the Earl of Aylesford. The parish contains 4260a. 2r. 29p., of which 1721 acres are arable, 628 meadow and pasture, 1428 woodland, 152 hop plantations, 53 orchards, and about 196 common and waste; the surface is intersected with numerous chalk hills; in the northern part the soil is various, but the southern part, which is often overflowed by the Medway, is loam and gravel. The substratum abounds with stone, which is quarried for building sea-walls and for the roads; the river Medway, which is navigable for barges, flows through the parish. The town is pleasantly situated on the north-east bank of the river, over which is an ancient stone bridge of six arches, and consists of one principal street, on the north side of which the ground rises abruptly to an elevation of 100 feet. A paper-mill, by the side of a small stream, is the only manufactory in the place. A pleasure fair is held on the 29th of June.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £630. 15. 3., and the vicarial for £597. 11. 3.; and the glebe contains 14 acres, with a house. The church is an ancient structure, and contains monuments to the memory of Sir Paul Rycant, Sir John Colepepper, and Sir Caleb Banks. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school was endowed, in 1766, by Charles Milner, Esq. with a rent-charge of £20; the schoolroom was built in 1773. There is also a national school, established in 1832. An hospital, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was founded in 1617, for a warden and six aged persons, by Sir William Sedley, Knt., partly in performance of the will of his brother, John, dated in 1605, and partly of his own free gift; and endowed with two farms in the parish of Frittenden, now let for £135 per annum. Fragments of military weapons are frequently discovered here. At Horsted is a monument of upright stones, erected, as it is supposed, to the memory of Horsa; and three miles distant is another, called Kit's Cotty House, to the memory of Catigern, brother of Vortimer, who was slain with that prince in the battle with Hengist and Horsa. Sir Charles Sedley, a celebrated wit and poet in the reign of Charles II., was born at the Stoars, in the parish. Aylesford confers the title of Earl on the family of Finch.

AYLESTONE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of BLABY, partly in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, and partly in that of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2½ miles (S. by W.) from Leicester; containing, with the township of Glen Parva and the chapelry of Lubbesthorpe, 757 inhabitants. It is situated on the road to Lutterworth, and contains, with Lubbesthorpe, about 2700 acres; the Duke of Rutland is lord of the manor. The Union canal passes through the parish, and soon after joins the river Soar, which here becomes navigable. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £31. 8. 11½.; net income, £845; patron, Duke of Rutland. The tithes were commuted for 350 acres of land, in 1767.

AYLMERTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 2¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Cromer; containing 289 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected by the road from Cromer to Holt, comprises 1581a. 8p., of which 916 acres are arable, 190 pasture and meadow, and 470 woodland and water; the views of the ocean from the high grounds are exceedingly fine, and the scenery very picturesque. The living is a discharged rectory in mediety, with those of Felbrigg, Melton, and Runton united, valued together in the king's books at £6. 11.; net income, £370; patron and lord of the manor, W. H. Windham, Esq. The tithes of Aylmerton have been commuted for a rent-charge of £220, and the glebe consists of 41½ acres. The church is in the decorated and perpendicular styles, with an embattled tower; in the interior is a handsome carved screen, and on the south side of the chancel a piscina and two stone stalls.

AYLSHAM (St. MICHAEL), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 12¼ miles (N. by W.) from Norwich, and 121 (N. E. by N.) from London; containing 2448 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the high road from Norwich to Cromer, was, during the reigns of Edward II. and III., the chief seat in the county for the manufacture of linens, then distinguished by the appellation of "Aylsham Webs." This branch of manufacture was subsequently superseded by that of woollen cloths; and in the time of James I. the inhabitants were principally employed in the knitting of worsted hose, and in the manufacture of stocking-pieces for breeches, and waistcoat-pieces, which was carried on here till the introduction of machinery. The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle acclivity rising from the south bank of the river Bure, and is well built, containing many handsome houses; the trade consists for the most part in corn, coal, and timber, for which its situation is extremely favourable. The river Bure is navigable to Yarmouth for barges of 40 tons' burthen, and a spacious basin and commodious wharfs have been constructed here for the greater facility of trade. The market, formerly on Saturday, is now on Tuesday, and is amply supplied with corn and provisions of all kinds; and fairs, which are well attended, are held on March 23rd, and on the last Tuesdays in Sept. and Oct., which last is a statute fair. The town was formerly governed by a bailiff, and had several privileges, of which exemption from serving on juries at the assizes and sessions is still remaining.

The parish comprises 4311*a.* 2*r.* 4*p.*, of which 350 acres are meadow, 100 woodland and plantations, and the remainder arable. The LIVING is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £17. 19. 7.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £710, and the vicarial for £684; the glebe comprises 4 acres, with a house. The church, founded by John of Gaunt, is a spacious and handsome cruciform structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a spire; on the south side of the choir are three sedilia of stone, richly canopied, and a double piscina, opposite to which is a monument to Bishop Jeggon; the font is elaborately sculptured, and in the north transept is the chapel of St. Peter, which had a guild in 1490; in the cemetery is the tomb of Humphrey Repton, author of a work on landscape gardening, who was buried here. There are places of worship for Baptists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school, founded in 1517 by Robert Jannys, mayor of Norwich, who endowed it with £10 per annum, and for which, in conjunction with that of Wymondham, Archbishop Parker founded two scholarships in Corpus Christi College, Oxford, has been incorporated with the District National Society. The poor law union of Aylsham comprises 46 parishes and places under the care of 47 guardians, and contains a population of 20,056. About half a mile from the town is a chalybeate spring, now little noticed, which, from its former efficacy in asthmatic and other chronic diseases, was much resorted to by invalids, and obtained the appellation of Aylsham spa. On Stowe heath, about two miles to the east of the town, are several large tumuli, in some of which, in 1808, were found urns containing human bones and ashes.

AYLTON, a parish, in the union of LEDBURY, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 4½ miles (W.) from Ledbury; containing 69 inhabitants, and consisting of 812 acres, undulated, with a full proportion of wood, and the soil of the highest average fertility. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, endowed with one-third of the tithes, and valued in the king's books at £3. 3. 4.; net income, £149; patron, Earl of Oxford; improprators of the remainder of the tithes, the Portionists of Ledbury church.

AYMESTREY (St. JOHN AND St. ALKMUND), a parish, in the union of LEOMINSTER, consisting of the townships of Conhope and Over Lye, in the hundred of STRETFORD, and the townships of Aymestrey, Mortimer's-Cross, Nether Lye, Shirley, and Yatton, and the chapelry of Leinthall-Earls, in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 8 miles (N. W.) from Leominster; containing 958 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected by the river Lug, comprises by computation 5721 acres, of which 1926 are arable, 2355 meadow and pasture, 1405 woodland, and about 35 garden ground: limestone abounds in the vicinity. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £249; improprators, Bishop of Hereford and Mrs. Lewis. There is a chapel of ease at Leinthall-Earls, a very ancient structure. Here are two schools, with small endowments. Traces of Roman and British camps are discernible near the village.

AYNHÖ (St. MICHAEL), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of BRACKLEY, hundred of KING'S SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2¾ miles (E. by N.) from Deddington; containing 662 inhabitants. The parish occupies the southwestern extremity of the county, on the borders of Oxfordshire, which bounds it on the west and south; it comprises 2219*a.* 1*r.* of rich and highly productive land. The road from Buckingham to Deddington, as well as the Oxford canal, intersects it. The village, which is of considerable extent, is situated on a rocky eminence, from the foot of which issues a copious spring, called the "Town Well." A charter was obtained, in the 17th of Edward II., for a weekly market and a fair annually at Michaelmas, but both have long since been discontinued. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25. 5. 5.; net income, £500; patron, W. R. Cartwright, Esq. A free school was founded by Mrs. Mary Cartwright, in 1671, and endowed with a rent-charge of £20; and a school on the national plan is supported by subscription. Here was anciently an hospital, dedicated to St. John and St. James, founded about the time of Henry II., and, in 1484, united to Magdalene College, Oxford, by gift of the patron, William Fitz-Alan. The Roman Portway, a vicinal road, runs through the parish, and is visible at the eastern end of the village. Shakerley Marmion, a dramatic writer, was born at the manor-house in 1602; and Robert Wild, a Presbyterian minister, and a poet and satirist, held the living during the Commonwealth.

AYOTT (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of WELWYN, hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, 3¼ miles (W. by N.) from Welwyn; containing 134 inhabitants. This parish, during the heptarchy, formed part of the possessions of the last of the Saxon monarchs; and a spot in the immediate vicinity, still called Dane End, commemorates a signal defeat of the Danes by King Ethelwulph. The parish comprises by computation 900 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 4.; net income, £180; patron, Lionel Lyde, Esq. The glebe consists of 20 acres. The church is a neat brick edifice, with a handsome portico of stone, of the Doric order, and was erected in 1787, at an expense of £6000, by Sir Lionel Lyde, from a design by Revett, the celebrated Italian architect: the ruins of the old church, a quarter of a mile distant, are considerable, and under the belfry of its embattled tower is an altar-tomb, with recumbent figures of a knight and his lady. A school is partly supported by funds arising from a bequest by a late rector.

AYOTT (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WELWYN, hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. by S.) from Welwyn; containing 240 inhabitants. It comprises about 1200 acres of land, of which the surface is in general elevated, and the soil a mixture of gravel and clay. The river Marran divides it from the parishes of Welwyn and Codicote: the village is pleasantly situated on the side of the great north road, and is skirted by Brocket Hall park, the property of Lord Melbourne, a small part of which stands in the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Lord Mexborough: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £245. 12. 6., and there are 49 acres of glebe. The church, a neat octagonal building, was erected about eighty years since by a former rector, Dr. Freeman, who built also the steeple, on the opposite side of the churchyard. There is a school for about 40 children, who are clothed and instructed by subscription.

AYRESHAM, or AYRESHOLME, a village, in the township of LINTHORP, parish of MIDDLESBOROUGH, union of STOCKTON, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Stockton.

AYSGARTH (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of High and Low Abbotside, Askrigg, Aysgarth, Bainbridge, Bishopdale, West Burton, Carperby cum Thoresby, Hawes, Newbiggin, Thoralby, and Thornton-Rust; and containing 5725 inhabitants, of which number, 269 are in the township of Aysgarth, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Middleham. This parish, which consists of 12 townships, is about 22 miles long, and from 4 to 8 or 9 wide, and contains 96,000 acres; it comprehends the upper part of the splendid valley called Wensleydale, and the surface is strikingly diversified with high moorlands and fertile vales, which are famed for grouse and other game; the grounds are principally in pasture, and the district is noted for its superior dairy productions, butter, and new-milk cheeses. The village is pleasantly situated in a romantic and picturesque vale, through which runs the river Ure, which rises in the parish, and in its progress forms beautiful and celebrated cataracts at Aysgarth, Askrigg, Hardraw, and West Burton. There is a sheet of water, named Semer water, covering about 500 acres, and abounding with fish of several varieties; and the Ure, also, abounds with trout of a rich flavour, as well as with the greyling, and affords to the angler at certain seasons sport not generally to be met with. At a short distance above Aysgarth Force, is Yore bridge, built in 1539, a curious and interesting structure, which rises in one elliptical arch of 32 feet, with a span of 70 feet, exhibiting numerous petrifications in its concave, and having its battlements festooned with verdant ivy: this bridge commands a fine view of the falls made by the river, in its course through rocks in some parts craggy and abrupt, and in others beautifully intermingled with foliage. There are some veins of lead, and strata of coal. A coarse description of knitted hosiery is manufactured by the females and children of the lower classes, for the use of sailors, and for exportation. A mail-coach from the railway station at North-Allerton to Sedbergh passes and repasses through the parish daily, and is much used by travellers and tourists to the lakes, &c.

The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 6. 8.; net income, £137; patrons and appropriators, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, which was heightened in the reign of Henry VIII., when the whole building was renovated: the chancel is separated from the nave by an elegant and highly enriched screen and rood-loft, said to have been removed from the abbey of Jervaulx. There are also other churches, which are noticed in the articles on the townships. The Society of Friends have places of worship at Aysgarth, Bainbridge, Hawes, and Counterside; and the Wesleyans at Aysgarth, Burton, Thoralby, Carperby, Askrigg, Bainbridge, and Gayle: at Thornton-Rust the Calvinists have a meeting-house, and at Hawes the Independents and Sandemanians one each. National schools have been established recently at Aysgarth and Thoralby, and one in the chapelry of Askrigg; and at Yoresbridge is a grammar school, with an endowment exceeding £200 per annum; besides which there are some other institutions in the parish, alluded to in the accounts of the townships. Mary, Queen of Scots, was imprisoned for a short time at Nappa Hall, an ancient mansion in the parish.

AYSLEBY, N. riding of the county of YORK.—See AISLABY.

AYSTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of MARTINSLEY, county of RUTLAND, 1 mile (N. W. by N.) from Uppingham; containing 88 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 870 acres, of which about one-quarter is arable, and the remainder pasture; the surface is undulated, and the soil partly a red loam, and partly a white clay. The village is situated a quarter of a mile from the road between Oakham and Uppingham. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £183; patron, George Fludyer, Esq. The tithes are commuted for a modus of 14*d.* per acre, and there are 70 acres of glebe, and a glebe-house. The church is a plain neat structure, in the pointed style, except the three arches that divide the north aisle from the body of the church, which are round.

AYTHORPE-ROOTHING.—See ROOTHING, AYTHORPE.

AYTON BANKS.—See EIGHTON BANKS.

AYTON, EAST, a chapelry, in the parish of SEAMER, union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Scarborough; containing 362 inhabitants. The village is situated in a valley remarkable for the beauty of its scenery, through which flows the river Derwent. The chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ancient structure, with a square tower. The tithes were commuted in 1768, for land and a money payment. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists; and a school is supported partly by subscription, and an annual donation of £5 by Mr. Dennison.

AYTON, GREAT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK; containing 1216 inhabitants, of whom 1014 are in the township of Great Ayton, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Stokesley. The parish, which is on the road from Stokesley to Guisborough, consists of the townships of Great Ayton, Little Ayton, and Nunthorpe, and comprises about 5640 acres; the lands are chiefly arable and pasture in nearly equal portions; the surface is greatly diversified, and much of the scenery is very beautiful. A large seam of whinstone runs across the whole district, passes through the parish, and is wrought in several quarries; the stone is a hard blue, of excellent quality, and much used in making and repairing roads. Iron-ore is also found, and a mine was opened at Cliffrigg-Woods, but the works have been for some time discontinued. There are two oil-mills and three tanneries, and the manufacture of linen, once a flourishing trade here, still affords employment to a few of the inhabitants. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of George Marwood, Esq., the impropriator, with a net income of £82. The church is a neat unadorned edifice of considerable antiquity, with a square tower; the chancel is separated from the nave by an enriched Norman arch, and there is a handsome monument to the memory of W. Wilson, Esq., a distinguished naval commander in the service of the East India Company. The Independents, Primitive Methodists, Wesleyans, and the Society of Friends have places of worship. A school, founded in 1704, by Michael Postgate, and rebuilt in 1785, has an endowment of about £10 per annum: at this school the celebrated navigator, Captain Cook, received a portion of his education, at the expense of Thomas Scottle, Esq., whom his father served as manager of a farm. There is also a large agricultural school connected with the Society of Friends; and in the middle of the village are three almshouses, built by subscription.

AYTON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of GREAT AYTON, union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Stokesley; containing 65 inhabitants. At the time of the Conquest this was an ancient demesne of the crown; the manor was soon afterwards granted to the family of Malbisse, and was held by the king in capite ut de honore; it subsequently passed to the Lords Eure, of Easby. There was once a chapel here, built by Sir William Malbisse, Knt., about 1215, but it was not allowed to possess any separate endowment, and was afterwards ceded to the mother church, and consequently came under the direction of the monks of Whitby: no remains are now visible. The township comprises about 1170 acres, including three farms called Tunstall; its small and scattered hamlet is on a branch of the river Leven, and near the road from Stokesley to Guisborough.

AYTON, WEST, a township, in the parish of HUTTON-BUSCEL, union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Scarborough; containing 305 inhabitants. This township is bounded on the east and south by the river Derwent, which separates it from East Ayton, and comprises about 2000 acres, of which one-third is woodland and moor, and the remainder arable and pasture. The surface is finely varied, and the scenery picturesque; the hills are richly wooded to their summits, and the low grounds are watered by the Derwent, over which is a handsome bridge of four arches. The soil is various; and stone of excellent quality for building and for burning into lime is quarried. The village is situated on the road from York to Scarborough, and above it are the remains of Ayton Tower, on the property of the Hon. Marmaduke Langley, of Wykeham Abbey: of this once spacious baronial residence, one wing only is remaining, but the extensive lines of foundations on every side still indicate its former importance. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The manor formerly belonged to the family of De Vesci, and afterwards to the Cliffords; three fourth parts of it now belong to the trustees of Lady Hewley's charity, of which two-thirds, according to her ladyship's will, are to be applied to the support of dissenting ministers. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an act, in 1792.

AZERLEY, a township, in the parish of KIRKBY-MALZEARD, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. W.) from Ripon; containing 836 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 3140 acres, including the village of Galpha, and of Mickley, on the river Ure. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £270. 16., of which £220. 16. are payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, £45 to the vicar of the parish, and £5 to the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

B

BABCARY (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Somerton; containing 465 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 2500 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. 5.; patron, Rev. W. H. Twemlow. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, besides which, a sum of £8. 15. is payable to an impropriator; the glebe comprises 45 acres. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

BABINGLEY (ST. FELIX), a parish, in the union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Lynn; containing 54 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Lynn to Wells, and comprises 849*a.* 3*r.* 25*p.*, of which 214 acres are arable, 390 pasture and meadow, 98 woodland, and 139 heath; the surface is low and flat, and the soil in some parts light and gravelly, and in others good meadow earth. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Sandringham, and valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £102. The church is supposed to be the oldest in the county, and is said to have been originally erected by Felix, the apostle of the East Angles, to whom it was afterwards dedicated.

BABINGTON (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of KILMERSDON, E. division of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Frome; containing 163 inhabitants. It comprises 800 acres, and contains abundance of limestone, and some coal, of which a mine is in full operation. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of Colonel Jolliffe: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £116, and the glebe consists of about 7 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £20 per annum, bequeathed in 1758, by Elizabeth Long.

BABRAHAM (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of LINTON, hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Linton; containing 217 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2500 acres, and is intersected by the Cambridge and Colchester road, and bounded on the south-west by the road from London to Newmarket. A splendid mansion in the Elizabethan style has lately been erected, which, with the park, gardens, and pleasure-grounds, contributes greatly to the ornamental scenery of the locality. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 5. 10.: net income, £106; patron and impropiator, H. J. Adeane, Esq. The glebe consists of 4 acres. The church is an ancient building, in the decorated style, situated in the pleasure-grounds of the patron, to the memory of several branches of whose family it contains some handsome monuments. There is a free school, arising from bequests by Levinus and James Bush, Esqrs., and Judith Bennett, in 1723, who also left an endowment for an almshouse for six women, and £25 per annum for apprenticing poor boys; the income is now £134. 3. 2.

BABUR, county of NORFOLK.—See BAWBURGH.

BABWORTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W.) from East Retford; containing 577 inhabitants. It comprises 5882a. 3r. 38p., of which about 5028 acres are arable, 370 meadow and pasture, and 479 woodland; the surface is undulated, and the scenery enriched with wood, and the Chesterfield canal bounds the parish on the north. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 19. 2., and in the gift of the Hon. J. B. Simpson: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £815, and the glebe consists of 20 acres. The church is a small neat edifice, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, and has been recently repewed and beautified. Lindley Simpson, Esq., in 1781, bequeathed the profits of a share in the Chesterfield canal for the support of a school, to which also the gentry of the neighbourhood contribute. A school-room was built in 1836, at the expense of J. Rogers, Esq., and has been licensed for the celebration of divine service.

BACHE, a township, in the parish of St. OSWALD, CHESTER, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing 18 inhabitants. Bache Hall was garrisoned for the parliament in the early part of the civil war, and destroyed during the siege of Chester, in 1645.

BACKFORD (St. OSWALD), a parish, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, partly in the Higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, and partly in the Lower division of that of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER; comprising the townships of Caughall, Chorlton, Lea, and Mollington-Tarrant; and containing 556 inhabitants, of whom 200 are in the township of Backford, 4 miles (N.) from Chester. The parish consists by measurement of 3006 acres, and is situated on the great road from Chester to Liverpool; it is skirted on the south by the Ellesmere canal, and its vicinity to the city of Chester renders it a cheerful and desirable place of residence. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 0. 5.; net income, £230; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Chester. Two schools are supported by private subscription.

BACKSHAW, a hamlet, in the parish of HOLWELL, union of SHERBORNE, hundred of HORETHORNE, E. division of SOMERSET, though locally in the hundred of SHERBORNE, county of DORSET; containing 16 inhabitants.

BACKWELL (St. ANDREW), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, E. division of SOMERSET, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Bristol; containing, with the hamlets of Churchtown, Downside, Farley, Moorside, and West-town, 1161 inhabitants. It includes some extensive collieries, and some quarries producing a kind of calcareous stone of a reddish colour, variegated with blue and white veins, which is susceptible of a very high polish. The weekly market, granted by Edward II., has been long discontinued; but a fair for cattle and pedlery is held on the 21st of September. The living consists of a sinecure rectory and a discharged vicarage; the rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 16. 3., with a net income of £253; the vicarage, valued at £6. 19. 9½., with a net income of £144; patron of both, Marquess of Bath. A national school is supported by subscription.

BACKWORTH, a township, in the parish of EARDON, union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 413 inhabitants. This place formerly belonged to Tynemouth priory, and afterwards to the Grey family, by whom it was sold to its present possessor, the Duke of Northumberland, for £95,000. The soil is fertile, and favourable to the growth of wheat; the district abounds in coal, and an extensive colliery is in operation, the produce of which is of a superior quality, and known as "Northumberland Wallsend." A school has been built, chiefly at the expense of the Duke of Northumberland. Sir Charles Grey, Knt., the governor of Barbadoes, was born at Backworth House.

BACONSTHORPE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Holt; containing 326 inhabitants, and comprising 1332a. 3r. 38p. The manor was long held by the Bacons, one of whom was the learned John Bacon, who died in 1346. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the gift of John Thurston Mott, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £340, and there are 33 acres of glebe, with a handsome house. The church was partly destroyed by the fall of the steeple in 1729, but was thoroughly repaired, chiefly at the expense of the Rev. Mr. Hewitt, in 1779. A national school is chiefly supported by subscription.

BACTON, a parish, in the union of DORE, hundred of WEBTREE, county of HEREFORD, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Hereford; containing 140 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1177 acres, and is bounded on the east by the river Dore: the land is fertile in corn and apples, and a considerable quantity of cider is made; timber of good quality thrives well, and there is a large supply of excellent limestone. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Francis Hamp, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £122. 9. The church contains, in the north side of the chancel, a monument of the Corinthian order, with a curious inscription, to the memory of Mrs. Blanche Parry, of Newcourt, in the parish, and for many years maid of honour to Queen Elizabeth. A school is aided by a donation of £15 per annum from the rector. Mrs. Blanche Parry, in 1589, bequeathed as much land as would produce 140 bushels of wheat and rye, to be divided among the poor of Bacton and the hamlet of Newton; and there are also other bequests to the poor, recorded on a stone slab in the church. Some chalybeate springs have been discovered within the last few years.

BACTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from North Walsham; containing 513 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1629*a.* 14*p.*, of which 1327 acres are arable, and 275 pasture and meadow. Bacton Green is a fishing village on the coast, having three curing-houses, and six large, and several small boats employed in the herring, crab, and lobster fishery, and many vessels engaged in the coal trade. A fair is held on the first Monday in August. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 1½.; net income, £263; patrons and impropriators of the remainder of the great tithes, Lord and Lady Wodehouse. The glebe consists of 28 acres, with a house. The church, situated on an eminence, is chiefly in the decorated style, and contains a handsome and elaborately sculptured font. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a school has a small endowment. At Bromholm are the remains of a priory for Cluniac monks, founded by W. De Glanville, as a cell to Castle Aire priory, in 1113, and dedicated to St. Andrew.

BACTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of SUFFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Stow-Market; containing 800 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 12. 3½.; and in the patronage of H. D. Hemsworth, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £736, and there are nearly 52 acres of glebe. The church is chiefly in the decorated style, and consists of nave, chancel, and side aisles, with an embattled tower, surmounted by a shingled spire.

BACUP, a consolidated chapelry, formed out of the parishes of WHALLEY and ROCHDALE, in the union of HASLINGDEN, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of LANCASHIRE, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Rochdale; containing 1526 inhabitants. There are several coal-mines here, nearly all of which are in operation, and some quarries of stone, used entirely for building purposes: a great number of persons are employed in the cotton-factories, which are numerous in this locality, and some more are engaged in the woollen manufacture. Two fairs are held, one in spring and the other in autumn, for miscellaneous merchandize. The river Irwell, which takes its rise a few miles further north, runs through the village. The district, called "the Consolidated Chapelry of St. John Bacup," was allotted in 1843: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Whalley, with a net income of £113: the chapel was consecrated in 1788. There are two places of worship for Particular Baptists, and one for Wesleyans; and schools are conducted on the national plan, the society having aided in the erection of the building for them by a grant of £300. At Dalesgate, near this place, is a bed of hard coal similar to that of Halifax; and at Broadclough, about a mile from the village, are the remains of a Roman encampment.

BADBURY, a tything, in the parish of CHISLEDON, union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 395 inhabitants.

BADBY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of FAWSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Daventry; containing 624 inhabitants. The parish, intersected by the road from Daventry to Banbury, consists of 2147*a.* 30*p.* The village is situated on the declivity of a hill, in part of an uninclosed district called Badby Downs; and there are quarries of hard blue rag-stone in the neighbourhood. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Newnham annexed, valued in the king's books at £14; net income, £306; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. A school for this place and Newnham is conducted on the national plan; and a Sunday school is endowed with the interest of £191. 17. three per cent. annuities. On a lofty eminence, called Arbury hill, is an intrenchment, supposed to be Roman.

BADDESLEY-CLINTON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of SOLIHULL, Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 7 miles (N. W.) from Warwick; containing 115 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the Warwick and Birmingham canal, and skirted by the road between those two places; it comprises 1310 acres. The living is a donative, valued in the king's books at £4. 6. 8., and is in the patronage of Lady H. Ferrers, to whom also the impropriation belongs; net income, £27. There is a Roman Catholic chapel.

BADDESLEY-ENSOR (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of ATHERSTONE, Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Atherstone; containing 579 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1125 acres of land, of which the surface is hilly, and the prevailing soil a stiff clay: coal is abundant, the rateable annual value of the mines being returned at £524. The road from Tamworth to Atherstone crosses the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the inhabitants; net income, £106.

BADDESLEY, NORTH, a parish, in the union of HURSLEY, hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Romsey; containing 302 inhabitants. It comprises about 2000 acres, of which 1500 are under cultivation, and a considerable quantity common. Here was anciently a preceptory of Knights Templars. The living is a donative; net income, £100; patron and impropriator, T. Chamberlayne, Esq. The glebe-house is a cottage residence, with 2 acres of land attached. The church is very ancient.

BADDESLEY, SOUTH, a chapelry, in the parish of BOLDRE, union of LYMINGTON, partly in the E. division of the NEW FOREST, and partly in the hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Lymington and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Lymington; containing 1238 inhabitants. The living is a donative, endowed with £12 per annum rent-charge on the estate of Pylewell, the proprietor of which is patron. The chapel is a neat edifice, capable of accommodating 200 persons.

BADDILEY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Nantwich; containing 275 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2300 acres; and the Ellesmere canal passes through the district. Baddiley Hall, once the noble residence of the Mainwarings, has been converted into a farm-house. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 3. 6., and in the gift of John Tollemache, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £195. The church is constructed of oak, and is of great antiquity; the upright timbers, being much decayed, were cased with brick in 1811, but the roof and ceiling are still in fine preservation. About £50, obtained from 39 acres of land, are yearly distributed among the poor.

BADDINGTON, a township, in the parish of ACTON, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 1½ mile (S. S. W.) from Nantwich; containing 137 inhabitants. The Liverpool and Birmingham Junction canal passes near this place. A rent-charge of £134 has been awarded as a commutation for the impropriate tithes, and one of £28. 18. for the vicarial.

BADDOW, GREAT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 1 mile (S. E.) from Chelmsford; containing 2022 inhabitants. It comprises 3620a. 1r. 27p.: the village is very pleasantly situated, and inhabited by several highly respectable families. A large brewery was established about seventy years since. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Mrs. Bullen; impropiator, J. A. Houblon, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £636, and the vicarial for one of £495. 15.: the glebe belonging to the impropiator comprises about 22 acres, and the vicar's glebe one acre. The church contains some ancient monuments, one of which, in the south aisle, is very beautiful, representing the figure of a child, in a mournful attitude supporting the bust of a female. A free school was founded and endowed, in 1731, by Jasper Jefferey, of London, with property invested in the purchase of estates now producing an annual income of about £168; and there are also schools, conducted on the national system. On the road to Chelmsford are almshouses for five inmates.

BADDOW, LITTLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Chelmsford; containing, with the hamlet of Middle Mead, 592 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north, by the navigable river Chelmer, on which are two large flour-mills with convenient quays. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 2. 2.; patron and impropiator, Col. Strutt, who is also patron of the rectory, which is a sinecure, valued at £7. 13. 4. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £358, the vicarial for one of £197. 5. 6., and the rectorial for one of £126. 17.: the rectorial glebe comprises 40, and the vicarial 5, acres. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower at the west end, and consists only of a nave and chancel, in which latter is a stately monument of marble to Henry Mildmay, of Graces. Here is a place of worship for Independents. In 1717, Edmund Butler bequeathed 160 acres of land and 36 acres of woodland for the clothing and education of children of this parish and that of Boreham: the whole is now let for £130 per annum; and to this income are added £11, the rent of two cottages, and £15. 1., annual dividends on three and a half per cent. stock. Near the church is an almshouse for two families; and at Coldham gate is another, said to have been founded by Sir Robert Barington.

BADGER, or BAGSORE (St. GILES), a parish, within the liberties of the borough of WENLOCK, union of SHIFFNALL, locally in the hundred of BRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP, 5 miles (S.) from Shiffnall; containing 137 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 920 acres: red sandstone of good quality is obtained, and from the quarries was raised the stone for the erection of the church. The neighbourhood also abounds with stately timber, and from one oak alone was procured wood for the pulpit, pews, and all the interior fitting-up of the church. Here is a narrow rocky dingle, richly wooded, through which flows the small river Worfe: walks have been tastefully formed, and the spot is much resorted to in the summer. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., and in the gift of R. H. Cheney, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £254. 10. 6., and the glebe comprises 25 acres. The church was erected about 1835, at the expense of the patron, and is in the later English style, and embellished with stained glass. A parochial school is entirely supported by the patron; and there are six almshouses.

BADGEWORTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHELTHENHAM, Upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Cheltenham; containing, with the hamlets of Bentham, Little Shurdington, and Little Witcombe, 903 inhabitants, of whom 210 are in the hamlet of Badgeworth. The living is a vicarage, with Great Shurdington annexed, valued in the king's books at £20. 11. 3.; net income, £295; patron, Joseph Ellis Viner, Esq.; impropiators, Principal and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford, in whom the great tithes are vested for the support of a school at Abergavenny, subject to a deduction of £16 per annum paid to Christ-Church College, Cambridge. The church is in the early English style, with some later portions, and a very handsome tower. The Rev. William Stanby, formerly vicar of Badgeworth, bequeathed a rent-charge of £5 for apprenticing boys, and there are also various charitable donations in money, for distribution among the poor. On an estate called Cold Pool is a mineral spring, the water of which is similar to that of Cheltenham.

BADGINGTON, or BAGENDON (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Cirencester; containing 172 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1100 acres of land in good cultivation, and stone of inferior quality is raised for road-making and rough building. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 4. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Jesus' College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £200, and the glebe consists of about 78 acres. A school is chiefly supported by the rector.

BADGWORTH (St. CONGAR), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Axbridge; containing 321 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25. 15., and in the gift of Sir J. Mordaunt, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £432. 9., and the glebe comprises 85 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. A school for this and the adjoining parish of Weare is supported by subscription.

BADIALTON.—See BATHEALTON.

BADINGHAM (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 14 miles (N. by E.) from Woodbridge; containing 864 inhabitants, and comprising 317 $2a$. 26 p . The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 16. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Robert Gorton, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £875, and who has 25 acres of glebe. The church is in the perpendicular style, and has a nave and chancel, and an embattled tower.

BADLESMERE (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union and hundred of FAVERSHAM, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Faversham; containing 122 inhabitants. It comprises about 600 acres of land, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil clay and chalk. A fair is held on Nov. 5th. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Leaveland united, valued in the king's books at £5. 2., and in the patronage of Lord Sondes: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, and the glebe consists of 13 acres. A parsonage-house was built in 1836.

BADLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Needham; containing 83 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises about 1200 acres, is situated on the navigable river Gipping, by which it is bounded on the north-east, and is traversed by the road from Ipswich to Bury-St. Edmund's. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £40; patron and impropiator, Earl of Ashburnham. The church is an ancient structure, containing many memorials of the Polesys.

BADMINTON, GREAT (St. MICHAEL), a parish in the union of CHIPPING, Upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Chipping-Sodbury; containing 552 inhabitants. This parish, together with Little Badminton, is nearly included within the boundary wall of Badminton Park, the seat of the Duke of Beaufort, whose ancestor, the first duke, built a princely mansion in the reign of Charles II., on the site of an ancient house belonging to the Boteler family. The roads from Cheltenham and Cirencester to Bath unite here, and pass through the parish. The petty-sessions for the division are regularly held at the Cross Hands. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 5. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £7; patron, Duke of Beaufort, by whose father the church was rebuilt in 1785. Mary, Duchess Dowager, in 1705, gave a rent-charge of £94 for the endowment of an almshouse for three men and three women, and a school for poor children.

BADMINTON, LITTLE, a tything, in the parish of HAWKESBURY, union of CHIPPING-SODBURY, Upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 127 inhabitants. Here was a chapel to the vicarage of Great Badminton, now in ruins.

BADSEY (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of EVESHAM, Upper division of the hundred of BLACKENHURST, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Evesham; containing, with the hamlet of Aldington, 497 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1795 acres, and is bordered on the west by the navigable river Avon, which here receives a small brook, which in its course turns several mills, including a silk-mill. It is crossed from west to east by the road from Evesham to Chipping-Campden. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £150; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford.

BADSHOT, a tything, in the parish and hundred of FARNHAM, W. division of SURREY, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Farnham; containing, with the tything of Runfold, 1410 inhabitants.

BADSWORTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK; containing 750 inhabitants, of whom 200 are in the township of Badsworth, 5 miles (S.) from Pontefract. The parish, which is on the road from Wakefield to Doncaster, comprises the townships of Badsworth, Thorp-Audlin, and Upton, and consists of about 4320 acres of productive land, of which 1750 are in the first-named township, the property of the Earl Fitzwilliam, and the centre of a sporting district called the Badsworth Hunt. The place was the residence of Col. Bright, an eminent officer in the parliamentary army, who was created a baronet soon after the restoration, and died here, and was buried in the church: his mansion has since been inhabited by various families in succession, and is now the seat of Joseph Scott, Esq., one of the co-heirs of the ancient family of Rockley, of Rockley, in Worsbrough. Thomas Brook, Esq., has a neat house in the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £32. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Derby: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £500, and the glebe comprises 168 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the decorated English style, with later insertions, and was thoroughly repaired in 1826, at an expense of £500. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The parochial school was built by Lady Rockingham, and is supported chiefly by Earl Fitzwilliam, who allows the master £10 per annum, and by subscription: a similar school for girls was built by subscription in 1826. Thomas Bright, Esq., in 1739, bequeathed the interest of £30 for distribution amongst the poor; and 30 acres of land, producing £43 per annum, are appropriated to the repair of the church and other parochial uses.

BADWELL-ASH (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of STOW, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (E.) from Ixworth; containing 458 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £69, and is in the patronage of Miss R. Clough, to whom the impropriation belongs, and whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £357. The church is in the decorated style, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with an embattled tower. A school of industry for girls and a Sunday school are supported by the incumbent.

BAGBOROUGH, WEST (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, 8 miles (N. W. by W.) from Taunton; containing 449 inhabitants. The parish is situated in a fertile district, watered by numerous streams from the hills in the vicinity, and abounds with pleasingly diversified scenery; it comprises by measurement 197½ acres, of which 762 are arable, 742 meadow, 150 woodland, and 120 common. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 10. 10.; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. B. B. Clarke, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £295. 4., and who has a glebe of 63 acres. A school was established in 1838.

BAGBURY, a hamlet, in the parish of EVERCREECH, union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WELLS-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 23 inhabitants.

BAGBY, a township, in the parish of KIRBY-KNOWLE, union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 2¼ miles (E. S. E.) from Thirsk; containing, with the hamlet of Islebeck, 317 inhabitants. This township is separated from the parish by intervening portions of other parishes, and is situated near Thirkleby, about 4 miles distant from the parochial church. It is intersected by the Great North of England railway. There is a chapel of ease here; and also a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BAGGRAVE, a liberty, in that part of the parish of HUNGERTON, which is in the hundred of GARTREE, union of BILLESDON, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 8½ miles (E. N. E.) from Leicester; containing 27 inhabitants.

BAGINGTON (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of WARWICK, Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, union and S. division of the county of WARWICK, 3½ miles (S. by E.) from Coventry; containing 245 inhabitants. It is situated between the rivers Avon and Sow, the former bounding it on the east, and the latter on the west, and it consists of 1650 acres, of which a considerable portion is attached to Bagington Hall. The Duke of Hereford, afterwards Henry IV., previously to the day appointed for the combat between him and the Duke of Norfolk, at Coventry, in the reign of Richard II., took up his residence in an ancient castle in the parish, of which there are now no remains. The hall was built in 1706 (the old manor-house having in that year been destroyed by fire), by William Bromley, Esq., speaker of the house of commons, and subsequently one of the principal secretaries of state. The London and Birmingham railway passes in the vicinity, and here is a station on the line. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 8., and in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. W. D. Bromley, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £355, and who has a glebe of 19 acres. A school conducted on the national plan is supported by an endowment.

BAGLEY-WOOD, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 3¼ miles (N. by E.) from Abingdon; containing 21 inhabitants, and comprising 390 acres. A monastery was founded here by Cissa, viceroy of Centwine, ninth king of Wessex, which was removed to Abingdon in 680, that town and its appendages having been assigned to it by Ceadwalla.

BAGNALL, with BUCKNALL, a parish, in the union of STOKE-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, and of the county of STAFFORD, 3¼ miles (N. E.) from Hanley; containing 1609 inhabitants, of whom 374 are in the township of Bagnall. This place was formerly included in the extensive parish of Stoke, from which it was separated in 1807, by an act of parliament which constituted Bucknall a distinct rectory. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Bucknall, which see.

BAGNOR, a tything, in the parish of SPEEN, union of NEWBURY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 2 miles (N. W.) from Speenhamland; containing 165 inhabitants.

BAGSHOT, a chapelry, in the parish of WINDLEHAM, union of CHERTSEY, First division of the hundred of WOKEING, W. division of SURREY, 12 miles (N. N. W.) from Guildford, and 26 (W. S. W.) from London, on the great western road; containing 1071 inhabitants. This place, formerly called Holy Hall, gives name to a tract of heath land, which was anciently more extensive, a great part having been inclosed and cultivated. It was once the residence of the kings of England, who had a mansion here, and a park, which was laid open after the civil war in the reign of Charles I.: it was recently occupied by the late Duke of Gloucester. On the borders of Bagshot Heath are some handsome villas, and the village contains good inns. The chapel was built in 1819, by subscription, aided by a grant of £200 from the Incorporated Society, in consideration of which 225 sittings are free. There is a small place of worship for Baptists; and an almshouse for six men and women was built by James Butler, Esq.

BAGSHOT, a hamlet, in the parish of SHALBOURN, union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 194 inhabitants.

BAGTHORPE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (E.) from Great Bircham; containing 78 inhabitants. It comprises 750a. 2r. 26p., of which about 600 acres are arable, 72 pasture and meadow, and 70 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 10., and in the gift of G. W. Chad, Esq., owner of the soil: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £140, and there are eight acres of glebe. The church is in the early English style. A small school is supported by Mr. Chad.

BAGTHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish of SELSTON, union of BASFORD, N. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, and of the county of NOTTINGHAM; containing 566 inhabitants.

BAGULEY, a township, in the parish of BOWDON, union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Stockport; containing 505 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £214, of which £153 are payable to the Bishop of Ches-ter, £34 to the vicar of Bowdon, and £27 to the rector of Northen.

BAGWORTH, a chapelry, in the parish of THORNTON, union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (N. E.) from Market-Bosworth; containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Bagworth-Park, 569 inhabitants. The Leicester and Swannington railway passes through the place. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Rood. A school, with a house and garden, was founded by Lord Maynard, in 1761, and endowed with £8 per annum; and £20 per annum, the produce of various bequests, are distributed among the poor.

BAILDON, a chapelry, under Gilbert's act, in the parish of OTLEY, Upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Bradford; containing 3280 inhabitants. This chapelry, which is divided into Upper and Lower Baildon, and includes the hamlets of Moorside, Charlestown, Gill's Mills, Trench, and the Green, comprises 1378a. 2r. 37p., of which 546 acres are inclosed, 700 common, and the remainder wood. The lands, which belong to several proprietors, of whom Miss Meeke is lady of the manor, are chiefly arable, with a due proportion of meadow and pasture; the substratum abounds with coal, of which a mine, now in operation, is supposed to have been one of the first opened in this part of the country; and with stone of good quality, which is quarried for building purposes and for flags. The surface is boldly varied, and the scenery in many parts strikingly picturesque. Batley House, the seat of William Scholefield, Esq., is a substantial mansion of stone, beautifully situated, and commanding extensive and diversified prospects. The village of Baildon, which is spacious and well built, is situated on an eminence overlooking the valley of the Aire, in which is a picturesque waterfall; and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the worsted manufacture, which is carried on to a considerable extent. In the centre of the village is an ancient cross; and fairs are held on the 2nd of March and the 4th of November. The Leeds and Liverpool canal, which borders on the chapelry, affords facility of conveyance. The chapel, dedicated to St. John, is a very ancient structure, and from the similarity of some of its details, is supposed to be coeval with the foundation of Kirkstall Abbey: it contains 500 sittings, and has an old font, curiously sculptured. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Otley; net income, £148, arising from a glebe of 110 acres, allotted at the inclosure. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists, Moravians, and Wesleyans. Christopher Topham, Esq., in 1753, bequeathed two farms, together producing £44 per annum, for apprenticing boys of the townships of Baildon, Marston, and Settrington, with each of whom is given a premium varying from £5 to £10.

BAILEY, with AIGHTON and CHAIGLEY, a township, in the parish of MITTON, union of CLITHEROE, Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 8 miles (N.) from Blackburn; containing 1798 inhabitants.

BAILIE, a township, in the parish of BEWCASTLE, union of LONGTOWN, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Longtown; containing 431 inhabitants. The scenery is of a romantic description, and there is a long range of lofty crags, which extends to the point where the kingdom of Scotland and the counties of Cumberland and Northumberland meet. A school is conducted on the national plan.

BAINBRIDGE, a township, in the parish of Aysgarth, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W.) from Askrigg; containing 786 inhabitants. This township, which comprises by computation 14,210 acres, takes its name from its situation on the river Bain, which is here crossed by a good stone bridge on the Aysgarth road, and is a considerable stream tributary to the neighbouring Ure, over which is also a bridge on the Askrigg road, about half a mile apart from the former. The Bain is supplied from the lake Seamere-water, which is about three miles in circumference, and has its source among the mountains of Raydale-side, a secluded valley within this township: it has two beautiful cataracts on its north-western side, and is a favourite resort of several kinds of waterfowl. Overlooking the mouth of the lake stands the beautiful rural hamlet of Counter-side, opposite the Roman station on Addle-brough mountain, from which, down to Brough hill, in the vicinity, also the site of a Roman camp, are distinct traces of the ancient road. The lofty station of Addle-brough, with the camp beneath, commanded an important and extensive district, now comprised, with its various ramifications, under the name of Wensley dale, and varying from the wildest mountain to the richest vale scenery in England, though but imperfectly known to tourists. Wensley dale is a portion of the district anciently known under the name of Richmondshire. Near the camp at Brough hill have been found divers Roman relics, including a statue of the Emperor Commodus. At Stalling-Busk, in Raydale-side, is a chapel of ease; at Bainbridge the Wesleyans and Society of Friends have places of worship; and the Friends have also a meeting-house at Counter-side. A free grammar school was founded by Anthony Besson, Esq., in the 43rd of Queen Elizabeth, which is endowed with £200 per annum, arising from a house in York and a field in this parish. An ancient custom exists of blowing a horn every night at ten o'clock, from Sept. 27th to Shrovetide, intended as a signal to the benighted traveller, and said to have originated when the country was an open forest. The celebrated Dr. John Fothergill was born at Carr-End, in the district.

BAINTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, and soke of PETERBOROUGH, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Stamford; containing 161 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from London to Stamford, and near the river Welland, which is navigable to Boston; it comprises 993a. 1r. 31p. of fertile land, and contains some quarries of stone, chiefly used for rough building and road-making. The living is united with the rectory of Ufford; the tithes were commuted for corn-rents in 1796. The church exhibits some interesting specimens of early English architecture. A substantial schoolhouse was erected in 1820, by the late Sir John Trollope, Bart., at an expense of £340, he being the last trustee of a bequest made by the Rev. Richard Haw, a part of which is appropriated to the poor. On the east of the parish are remains of the Roman road to Lincoln.

BAINTON, a hamlet, in the parish of STOKE-LYNE, union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (N.) from Bicester.

BAINTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of DRIFFIELD, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Great Driffield; containing 452 inhabitants. This place, in which a beacon was anciently erected on an eminence near the village, to give notice of approaching danger, gives the name to this division of the wapentake. The parish comprises 3280 acres, which include Neswick, and of which two-thirds are arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture, with a small portion of woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £35. 14. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £757; patrons, President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The land attached: comprises about 602 acres, the tithes for the township of Bainton having been commuted for land in 1774. The church is an ancient structure, the tower of which exhibits a part only of its octagonal spire, the other part having fallen down about the middle of the last century: the interior, which was repaired in 1842, contains several interesting antiquities. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and a girls' school is supported by Mrs. Grimston, and a national and an infants' school, by subscription. The petty-sessions for the Bainton-Beacon division are held here once a month.

BAITHLEY, county of NORFOLK.—See BALE.

BAKEWELL (All SAINTS), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, (exclusively of a portion which is in the union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH.) in the hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY; comprising the townships of Ashford, Bakewell, Baslow with Bunnell, Beceley, Blackwell, Brushfield, Buxton, Calver, Chelmorton, Curbar, Flagg, Froggatt, Harthill, Hassop, Great Longstone with Holme, Little Longstone, Monyash, Over and Nether Haddon, Rowland, Great Rowsley, Sheldon, Taddington with Priestcliffe, and part of Wardlow; and containing 10,363 inhabitants, of whom 1976 are in the town, 26 miles (N. W.) from Derby, and 152 (N. W. by N.) from London. The Saxon name of this place, Baderanwylla, or Badde cum Well, of which its present appellation is a contraction, is derived from a chalybeate spring, which was in great repute prior to the year 924, when Edward the Elder is said to have built a castle, or fort, in the vicinity. The town, which is in an improving state, is situated on the river Wye, in a beautiful and picturesque vale, about four miles from the confluence of the Wye and Derwent, and at nearly an equal distance from Buxton and Matlock, between which places is an excellent road, leading through a district replete with pleasingly diversified scenery. Two miles south of the town is Haddon Hall, the property of the Duke of Rutland, lord of the manor, and one of the largest and most perfect of the ancient baronial mansions in the kingdom: about three miles towards the north-east is Chatsworth House, the princely seat of the Duke of Devonshire, in which Mary, Queen of Scots, was confined in the year 1570; and about two miles and a half to the north is Hassop Hall, the seat of the Earl of Newburgh. The chalybeate baths have been lately re-established by the Duke of Rutland, and are now in the occupation of Mr. White Watson, F.L.S.; the principal bath is 33 feet long, 16 wide, and of proportionate depth, and is constantly supplied with fresh water, which, on its influx, emits a considerable quantity of carbonic acid gas, and possesses a temperature of 60° of Fahrenheit. There are also shower-baths and a private warm-bath with suitable accommodations; and a news-room has been added to the establishment. An Agricultural Society has been formed, the members of which hold their meetings at Bakewell and Chesterfield alternately, generally in October. Near the entrance into the town from Ashford stands a cotton-mill, erected by the late Sir Richard Arkwright, in which about 300 persons are employed; and in the immediate vicinity are extensive lead-mines and quarries of black and grey marble, and of chert, which is used in the Staffordshire potteries, in manufacturing earthenware. The market is on Friday: on every alternate Monday there is a cattle-market, which is now extremely well supplied with store and fat cattle and sheep; and fairs are held on Easter-Monday, Whit-Monday, Aug. 26th, the Monday next after Oct. 10th, and the Monday after Nov. 11th, for horses and horned cattle. One of the quarter-sessions for the county was formerly, and a petty-session for the hundred of High Peak, on the first and third Friday in every month, is still, held here. A mineral court is also held for the manor, according to the local articles and customs of the lead-mines within it, which have prevailed from time immemorial.

The parish comprises about 70,000 acres, chiefly of hilly ground, affording excellent pasture for sheep and cattle, and of which the Dukes of Rutland and Devonshire are the principal proprietors. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £40; net income, £350; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. The tithes for the township of Bakewell and Over-Haddon were commuted, with some exceptions, for land and a money payment, in 1806. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early English style: the central tower, which was surmounted by a lofty spire, becoming dangerous, from the failure of the pillars that supported it, has been lately taken down. Within are several magnificent altar-tombs of alabaster, supporting recumbent figures, and a stone font of great antiquity; and in the churchyard is a cross, decorated with rude sculpture, but greatly mutilated. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A free school was founded by Lady Grace Manners in 1636, and endowed with £15 per annum, which has been augmented with £35 per annum by the Duke of Rutland; and Mary Hague, in 1715, gave certain houses and 16 perches of land, for which several poor female children are instructed. St. John's hospital, for six aged men, was founded and endowed in 1602, by Sir John Manners Sutton and his brother; the income amounts to £40 per annum. A dispensary and a lying-in institution have been established, and are supported by subscription. The poor law union of Bakewell comprises 50 parishes and places, and contains a population of 31,319. Dr.

Thomas Denman, an eminent physician, and father of Lord Denman, chief justice of the court of queen's bench, was born here in 1733.

BALBY, with HEXTHORP, a township, in the parish, union; and soke of DONCASTER, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Doncaster; containing, with Hexthorp, 486 inhabitants. The township comprises about 1420 acres, of which 640 are the property of the corporation of Doncaster, who are lords of the manor. In the village, which is pleasantly situated on the road from Doncaster to Rotherham, are a brewery, and some tanneries. The first meetings of the Society of Friends, under their founder, George Fox, were held at Balby, and the neighbouring village of Warmsworth.

BALCOMB (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CUCKFIELD, partly in the hundred of STREET, but chiefly in the hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (N.) from Cuckfield; containing 1542 inhabitants. It comprises about 4170 acres, and is intersected by the London and Brighton railway, which here passes through its principal tunnel, the construction of which was attended with much difficulty on account of the extraordinary swelling of the earth when exposed to the air: midway between Balcomb and Cuckfield, the line is carried over the river Ouse by a viaduct 462 yards in length, and 60 yards high, which rests on 37 arches. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 18. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the family of Bethune: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £450, and the glebe comprises 70 acres. About a quarter of a mile from the church is a spring, the water of which is similar in its properties to the Tonbridge waters.

BALDERSBY, a township, in the parish of TOPCLIFFE, wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Ripon; containing 296 inhabitants. This place is on the road from Thirsk to Ripon, and comprises by computation 1600 acres, chiefly the property of the Duke of Devonshire, who is lord of the manor. The river Swale passes on the east, and on the west is the great Roman road, now called Leeming Lane. A school has a small endowment bequeathed by the Rev. Mr. Day, in 1764.

BALDERSTON, a district chapelry, in the parish, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Blackburn; containing 585 inhabitants. It comprises 1704a. 1r. 3p., of which 141 acres are woodland and plantations, and the remainder arable and pasture. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £90; patron, Vicar of Blackburn. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. At Mellor Brook, a hamlet in the chapelry, is St. Saviour's chapel, purchased from the Independents in 1834 by subscription, and remodelled for the use of the Establishment. There is a school on the national plan.

BALDERTON (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, S. division of the wapentake of NEWARK and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 2 miles (S. E.) from Newark; containing 899 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3600 acres of land, with a clayey and sandy soil, and of which the Duke of Newcastle is one of the chief proprietors: the village consists of several well-built and substantial houses, and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Farndon: the glebe comprises about 33 acres. The church is a very handsome edifice, principally in the later English style, with a lofty spire, and has a richly-ornamented Norman porch of exceeding beauty and in good preservation. A school has been endowed by William Alvey, with a rent-charge of £18.

BALDOCK (St. MARY), a market-town and parish, in the union of HITCHEN, hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, 18 miles (N. by W.) from Hertford, and 37 (N. by W.) from London; containing 1807 inhabitants. This place, in the reign of Stephen, belonged to the Knights Templars, to whom Gilbert, Earl of Pembroke, gave the site, which, in a charter of confirmation granted by his descendant William, is termed Baudoc, of which the present name is a variation; though some antiquaries derive it from Balbec, supposing the town to have been so called by the Templars, in memory of the city of that name in Syria, from which their order had been expelled by the Saracens. The town is situated near the intersection of the great north road and the Roman Ikeneld-street, between two hills which command an extensive view of a fine open country, and consists principally of one street: the houses are mostly ancient, but interspersed with several of modern erection, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. A horticultural society, patronized by the nobility and gentry in the neighbourhood, was established in 1825. The trade is principally in malt, the land in the vicinity being highly favourable to the growth of barley: the fens and marsh land near the town form an extensive grazing district, and a great quantity of cheese of a peculiar quality is made here; there is also a very large brewery. The general market, which was on Saturday, has been discontinued; and a market, exclusively for the sale of straw-plat, is now held on Friday. The fairs are on the festivals of St. James, St. Andrew, and St. Matthew, each continuing two days; at the last a great quantity of cheese is sold. The county magistrates hold a petty-session here on the first Monday in every month. The parish comprises about 150 acres of land, of which the soil is in general chalky. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £126. The church, erected by the Knights Templars, and nearly rebuilt in the early part of the fifteenth century, is a spacious structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the later English style, with an octagonal steeple rebuilt a few years ago, and contains a finely carved oak screen, part of the ancient rood-loft, and a very curious font. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans; and a national school has been erected. Almshouses for twelve aged widows were founded and endowed, in 1621, by Mr. John Winne. In cutting through Baldock hill, to form a new turnpike-road, a great number of fossils, consisting of cornua ammonis, sharks' teeth, &c., was discovered.

BALDON, MARSH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Oxford; containing 360 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by measurement 804 acres, originally called Meres or Mars, and ultimately Marsh-Baldon, derives its distinguishing name from one De la Mare, a descendant of whom was patron of the living in 1381. In 1836, an act was obtained for dividing and allotting lands in the parishes of Marsh-Baldon and Toot-Baldon. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £93; patron, Sir H. P. Willoughby, Bart. The church is distinguished by a highly picturesque tower, mantled with ivy: over the communion table is a painting of the Salutation, presented by the late Sir Christopher Willoughby. Dr. John Bridges, Bishop of Oxford, who died in 1618, was buried here.

BALDON, TOOT (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Oxford; containing 269 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book, is called Baudindon, and was afterwards named Toot-Balden, or Baldon, probably from one Le Tote, a landed proprietor, to distinguish it from the adjoining parish of Marsh-Baldon. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the Peculiar Court of Dorchester: the vicar receives £5. 5. per annum, as a payment in lieu of tithes, and the interest of £502, a sum raised by private subscription about forty years since; patron, Sir H. P. Willoughby, Bart.

BALE, or BAITHLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 16 miles (N.) from East Dereham; containing 229 inhabitants. It comprises 1041a. 2r. 38p. of which 824 acres are arable, 100 pasture, and 73 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Gunthorpe, and valued in the king's books at £10. 13. 4.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £305, and there are 21 acres of glebe. The church is in the decorated and perpendicular styles. Here was anciently a chapel, dedicated to St. Botolph. A rental of £8, arising from land, is applied to the repairs of the church; and another of about £7, arising from land purchased with a bequest by Christopher Ringar, in 1678, is distributed in blankets and other clothing.

BALHAM-HILL.—See TOOTING, UPPER.

BALK, a township, in the parish of KIRBY-KNOLE, union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Thirsk; containing 89 inhabitants. It comprises about 780 acres, chiefly the property of Viscount Downe, who is lord of the manor.

BALKHOLME, a township, in the parish and union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK, 3 miles (E.) from Howden; comprising by computation 550 acres, and containing 165 inhabitants. It is on the road from Howden to North Cave; and the river Ouse passes not far distant on the south.

BALLIDON, a chapelry, in the parish of BRADBORNE, hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Ashbourn; containing 92 inhabitants.

BALLINGDON, anciently BRUNDON, a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. W. by W.) from Sudbury; containing 843 inhabitants. After the decay of the parochial church, the village of Ballingdon, which was previously only a chapelry in the parish of Brundon, became the head of the parish, and now gives name to the whole. The soil, in some parts, is a stiffish clay, retaining moisture, and in others a sandy loam, forming some of the best arable land in the district. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of W. H. Windham, Esq. The inhabitants resort to the church of All Saints, Sudbury, and contribute towards the church-rate of that parish.

BALLINGHAM (St. DUBRITIUS), a parish, in the union of ROSS, Upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Ross; containing 149 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the right bank of the Wye, that river surrounding it on all sides except the west: it comprises 840 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £165; patron and impropiator, Sir E. F. S. Stanhope, Bart. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £177. 10. A school is supported by voluntary contributions.

BALL'S-POND, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish of ISLINGTON, Finsbury division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 2 miles (N.) from London. This agreeable suburb of the metropolis is of modern origin, and consists principally of uniform ranges of houses of recent erection. A very large open area, surrounded by a wall and cattle-sheds, with a handsome entrance, has been formed for a market-place, intended to supersede the celebrated market in Smithfield; and an act for opening it as a general cattle-market was procured by its enterprising proprietor Mr. Perkins; but it was soon after closed from want of business, and no cattle have been sold there for some years. A church, dedicated to St. Paul, was erected in 1827, at an expense of £10,947. 16., and is a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a low square tower, embattled and crowned with pinnacles. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £335; patron, Vicar of Islington. There is a place of worship for Independents. A school on the national plan, and an infants' school, have been established in connexion with the Church; and there are almshouses of a handsome style belonging to the London Benefit Societies, the Tilers' and Bricklayers' Company, the Cutlers' Company, and the Dyers' Company, of London. Samuel Rogers, Esq. the eminent poet, was born in that part of Newington green which is within the district.—See ISLINGTON.

BALNE, a township, in the parish of SNAITH, Lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Snaith; containing 341 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2750 acres, of which about 115 are woodland; the soil is chiefly of a sandy nature. The village, which is scattered, lies to the south of the Knottingley and Goole canal. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have each a place of worship.

BALSALL, a chapelry, in the parish of HAMPTON-IN-ARDEN, union of SOLIHULL, Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Solihull; containing 1160 inhabitants. It comprises 4824 acres, and is partly bounded on the west by the river Blythe, and on the east skirted by the road between Kenilworth and Coleshill. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, was originally the church of a preceptory founded here, by the Knights Templars, to whom Roger de Mowbray had given the lordship: it was repaired in 1823, at a cost of £979. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £50; patrons, Governors of Balsall Hospital, in whom the impropriation is also vested. Lady Katherine Leve-son in 1670 devised the manor for the erection and endowment of an hospital for twenty women. This hospital was incorporated in the 1st year of the reign of Queen Anne, and eleven trustees were appointed, with power to enlarge the buildings and increase the number of inmates, which now amounts to thirty; exclusively of whom the establishment consists of a master, under-master, apothecary, matron, and nurse. The annual receipts amount to about £1500, of which the master, in addition to his fixed stipend, receives £50 as perpetual curate of Balsall; and a stipend of £50 is also paid to the vicar of Long Itchington.

BALSCOTT, a chapelry, in the parish of WROXTON, union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Banbury; containing 199 inhabitants. The village contains some interesting remains of ancient domestic architecture. The chapel is remarkable for having the tower on its south side. Until 1821, the dead were interred at Wroxton; but on the 28th of August in that year the chapelyard here was consecrated.

BALSHAM (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of LINTON, hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Linton; containing 1271 inhabitants. It comprises about 4500 acres, the soil consisting principally of clay and chalk. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £39. 16. 8.; net income, £1104; patrons, Governors of the Charterhouse, London. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1801. A little westward from the village are Gogmagog hills, on the summit of which are remains of a circular camp with a double rampart, supposed to be British. Hugh de Balsham, founder of Peter-house College, Cambridge, was born and is interred here; and Thomas Sutton, founder of the Charterhouse, resided at the place. The ancient trench, called Fleam-dyke, commences in the vicinity.

BALTERLEY, a township, in the parish of BARTHOMLEY, union of NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYNE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Newcastle; containing 316 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £134.

BALTONSBOROUGH (St. DUNSTON), a parish, in the union of WELLS, hundred of GLASTON-TWELVE-HIDES, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. E.) from Glastonbury; containing 718 inhabitants. It is annexed to the vicarage of Butleigh.

BAMBROUGH (St. AIDAN), a parish, in the union of BELFORD, N. division of BAMBROUGH ward, and of NORTHUMBERLAND; comprising the chapelries of Beadnell, Lucker, and North Sunderland, and the townships of Adderstone, Bambrough, Bambrough-Castle, Bradford, Budle, Burton, Elford, Fleatham, Glororum, Hoppen, Mouson, Newham, Newstead, Outchester, Ratchwood, Shorestone, Spindlestone, Swinhoe, Tughall, Warenford, and Warenton; and containing 4231 inhabitants, of whom 375 are in the township of Bambrough, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Belford. Bambrough, originally called Bebbanburg, was, prior to the Conquest, a royal Saxon burgh, and the residence of several of the kings of Northumbria. It sent two members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., and in the reign of Edward III., furnished one ship for the expedition against Calais; it had also a market, which has long been discontinued. The surrounding district, formerly called Bambroughshire, was a separate franchise, in the possession of various privileges, now become obsolete. The village occupies an airy and pleasant situation near the sea and Budle bay. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £121; patron, the Trustees of Lord Crewe, who, with other proprietors, are the improPRIATORS. The church was, with another long since in ruins, given by Henry I. to the priory of Nostel, in Yorkshire, whereupon a small convent of Augustine canons was founded here, in 1137, as a cell to that priory, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £124. 15. 7. There were also a college, an hospital dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and a house of Preaching Friars. Numerous children of both sexes are instructed in schools supported by subscription. The church estate, which is situated at Fowberry, in Bambrough township, consists of a farm-house, out-buildings, and about 63 acres of land, let for £100 per annum, which is applied to all the purposes of a church-rate.

BAMBROUGH-CASTLE, a township, in the parish, and N. division of the ward, of BAMBROUGH, union of BELFORD, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Belford; containing 59 inhabitants. This township is principally distinguished for its castle, built about the middle of the sixth century, by Ida, the first Anglo-Saxon king of Northumbria. In 642 it was besieged by Penda, King of Mercia, who, after an unsuccessful attempt to set it on fire, was compelled to retreat. In the beginning of the eighth century, Berthfrid, guardian of Osred, the young Northumbrian king, defended it against the usurper Eadulph, who was taken prisoner and put to death. It was plundered and almost demolished by the Danes in 993, but it was soon afterwards restored. After the Norman Conquest, it was held by Robert de Mowbray, on whose insurrection against William Rufus it was besieged, and, after an obstinate defence, surrendered to that monarch, who threatened, unless it were given up, to put out the eyes of Mowbray, who had been taken prisoner. During the war between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, and the protracted struggle between the houses of York and Lancaster, the castle sustained repeated sieges: it was taken in 1463 by Margaret of Anjou, queen of Henry VI., on her route to Hexham, after landing at Berwick, on her return from France, and at length became dilapidated in the reign of Henry VII. The castle and manor were granted, in the reign of James II., to John Forster, Esq., one of whose descendants having joined the Pretender, they were confiscated to the crown, and were purchased by Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, who, in 1720, devised this estate to trustees for charitable purposes. Under the direction of Dr. Sharp, Archdeacon of Durham, the castle, then in ruins, was repaired in 1757, and apartments were fitted up, in which one of the trustees might occasionally reside, to superintend the establishment.

The castle is situated on the summit of a steep rock, which projects into the sea, and rises perpendicularly to the height of 150 feet above low-water mark, being accessible only on the south-east side, where is the ancient gateway, flanked with a circular tower on each side, and formerly defended by a trench cut through a narrow isthmus communicating with the main land. Within a short distance of this is a more modern gateway, with a portcullis; and a little further on is a round tower. The keep, which is of Norman architecture, and the most ancient part of the building, is a lofty square structure. In 1773, the ruins of a church, or chapel, erected in the castle during the Norman period, were discovered, and the font, richly carved, is preserved, among other curiosities, in the keep. In the castle-yard are granaries, in which corn is stored to be sold to the poor at proper times; and a market is opened every Tuesday and Friday, when the industrious poor are supplied with meal and grocery at the cost price. In another part of the castle-yard is a dispensary, at which a surgeon attends twice every week; and from the surplus revenue of the charity the trustees have also established two national schools, for which schoolrooms have been appropriated in the castle, and which are free to all poor children who may come. Thirty girls, between the ages of nine and sixteen, are admitted to board and lodge in the castle, and are likewise provided with clothes and washing. In 1778, the trustees founded a library in the castle, to which the late Dr. Sharp generously bequeathed the whole of his valuable books, including the greater part of the library of Dr. Sharp, Archbishop of York; and this collection, including nearly 6000 volumes, is open to persons residing in the neighbourhood under certain regulations. A principal object of the establishment is also to afford assistance to shipwrecked mariners: implements requisite for rendering aid to stranded vessels are kept in the castle, and patrols are constantly stationed along the coast in stormy nights; and when vessels are observed to be in distress, signals are made from the summit of the tower to the fishermen at Holy Island, for whom the trustees have procured a life-boat, and whom they reward for their services: the trustees also supply the shipwrecked mariners with clothes, and with the means of returning to their homes.

BAMBURGH.—See BAUMBER.

BAMFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of HATHERSAGE, union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Stoney-Middleton; containing 297 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £33. 9., and the vicarial for one of £4; and there is a glebe of 33 acres.

BAMFORD, with BIRTLE, a township, in the parish of MIDDLETON, union of BURY, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Rochdale; containing 1753 inhabitants. The township is situated on the road from the town of Rochdale to that of Bury.

BAMPTON (ST. MICHAEL), a market-town and parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of BAMPTON, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 21 miles (N. by E.) from Exeter, and 162 (W. by S.) from London; containing 2049 inhabitants. Bampton is supposed by Bishop Gibson to have been the Beamdune of the Saxon Chronicle, where, in 614, the Britons were defeated with great slaughter by Cynegils, King of the West Saxons. Other antiquaries, referring this event to Bindon in Dorset, derive its ancient names Bathermtown and Bathrumpton from the river Bathern, which flows into the Exe, about one mile and a quarter below the town, and thence, by contraction, deduce the present name. The parish contains between 7000 and 8000 acres, of which the surface consists of numerous hills formed of limestone, and the soil runs through several varieties, and is liable, especially in the valleys, to inundations from the rivers Exe and Bathern. The town is pleasantly situated in a vale watered by the river; the houses are irregularly built of stone, and amply supplied with water. The principal branch of manufacture is that of serge: limestone is obtained in large quantities, and of excellent quality. The market is on Wednesday; fairs are held on Whit-Tuesday and the last Thursday in Oct.; and on the Wednesday before Lady-day and the last Thursday in November are two large markets, both of which are well attended: at the fairs and great markets a large number of sheep are sold, which, from the excellence of the pastures, are remarkable for size and flavour. A portreeve, two constables, and other officers, are appointed annually by the lord of the manor. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20; net income, £118; patron, the Rev. P. Parkin; impropiator, Charles Chichester, Esq. The church is a spacious structure, in the early English style, containing several monuments to the Earls of Bath. At Petton, four miles distant from the church, is a chapel, in which divine service is performed on every Sunday; at Shillingford are the ruins of an old chapel. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a charity school is conducted on the national plan. In the town is a chalybeate spring, strongly impregnated with iron. The site of an ancient castle, erected in 1336, by a member of the family of Cogan, is still discernible on a mount. John de Bampton, a Carmelite monk, and the first who read Aristotle publicly at Cambridge, was a native of the town.

BAMPTON (ST. MARY), a town and parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 16 miles (W. by S.) from Oxford, and 70 (W. N. W.) from London; comprising the hamlets of Aston, Bright-hampton, Chimney, Coate, Lew, and Weald, the chapelry of Shifford, and the township of Bampton; and containing 2734 inhabitants, of whom 778 are in the township. This place, called by the Saxons Bemtune, was a town of some importance during the heptarchy, and for a considerable period afterwards: in the reign of Edward the Confessor it was annexed to the diocese of Exeter, by Leofric, chaplain to that monarch, and first bishop of the see. It is bounded on the south by the river Isis, on which there are some convenient wharfs; the houses are neatly built, and the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water, which springs through a gravelly soil; there are a subscription library and a newsroom. A considerable trade was formerly carried on in leather, which has greatly declined. A fair is held on the 26th and 27th of August, the former day being for the sale of horses. Bampton has two divisions for the transaction of its civil affairs, the one called the eastern and the other the western; the justices in petty-sessions for the former division meet at Witney, and for the latter at Burford, and courts leet of the joint proprietors of the manor are held, at which constables and other officers are appointed. A town-hall has recently been erected in the market-place by subscription.

The LIVING is a vicarage, in three portions, each valued in the king's books at £10. 0. 10.; and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter; net income of each portion, £525. The tithes, with certain exceptions, were commuted in 1812, for land and corn-rents. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early English style, with a massive square embattled tower surmounted by an octagonal spire; the Norman doorway leading into the south transept, and the semi-porch and western entrance, are fine specimens of the early English, and the interior of the belfry, which is in its original state and perfectly entire, is a beautiful specimen of Norman decoration. There is a chapel of ease at Shifford, and another has been lately built at Aston, chiefly by the portionists, who perform divine service there gratuitously. The free school was founded in 1635, by Robert Vesey, of Chimney, in the parish, who endowed it with £200, which, with subsequent benefactions, was laid out in the purchase of eight acres of land, now let for £28 per annum: in 1784, £400 stock was given for the instruction of ten additional scholars. A national school is partly supported by an endowment, arising from an estate at Shilton, and from turnpike trusts. There are slight remains of a castle, supposed to have been erected in the reign of John, and of a quadrangular form, with towers at the angles, and bastions at the entrance on the east and west sides. In the hamlet of Chimney was an ancient chapel, taken down in 1758; and in that of Shifford, as appears from a Saxon MS. in the Cottonian library, Alfred the Great held one of his first councils, probably on a piece of ground near the chapel, called Court Close. A field called Kinsey is supposed to have been originally the "King's Way," Phillips, the author of the "Splendid Shilling," a poem on Cider, &c., was born here in 1676.

BAMPTON (St. PATRICK), a parish, in WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 9 miles (S.) from Penrith; containing, with part of Mardale chapelry, 579 inhabitants. This parish comprises by measurement 3720 acres, and is intersected by the river Lowther. Here is a beautiful lake, called Hawsewater, about three miles long, and half a mile broad, its head being environed by an assemblage of lofty mountains, its eastern side sheltered by well-planted rocky eminences, and its western bordered by cultivated fields. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £101. The inappropriate tithes belong to the Earl of Lonsdale and the trustees of the free grammar school, of whom the former has a rent-charge of £164, and the latter one of £54. 8.; and the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £19. 16. The church was rebuilt on the site of the former, in 1726: the vicarage-house was rebuilt also, about the same period, by Dr. Gibson, Bishop of London. The free grammar school was founded in 1627, by Thomas Sutton, D.D., who vested in trustees the sum of £500, collected in the parish of St. Saviour, Southwark, and other places, with which a portion of the rectorial tithes of Bampton was purchased, and other benefactions for the purchase of books have been added. A school at Roughill was established by Edmund Noble, and endowed with £9. 15. 10. per annum; and Richard Wright founded a school at Measand, in 1723, which is endowed with property producing £50 per annum. Here are also three parochial libraries, established respectively in 1710, 1750, and 1757, and comprising in the aggregate upwards of 800 volumes; and there are some minor bequests for the benefit of the poor. Thomas Gibson, M.D., (who married the daughter of Richard Cromwell, son of the Protector,) physician-general to the army, and author of a "System of Anatomy," was a native of High Knipe, in the parish, where also was born, in 1669, his nephew, Edmund Gibson, D.D., Bishop of London, and editor of two improved editions of Camden's Britannia, and other learned works.

BAMPTON, KIRK (St. PETER), a parish, in CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (W.) from Carlisle; comprising the townships of Kirk-Bampton, Little Bampton, and Oughterby; and containing 536 inhabitants, of whom 193 are in the township of Kirk-Bampton. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 17. 10.; net income, £100; patrons, alternately, Earl of Lonsdale and Sir Wastell Brisco, Bart. There are two chalybeate springs, one of them discovered in 1826, near England Rigg.

BAMPTON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of KIRK-BAMPTON, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Wigton; containing 212 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £125, of which £58. 6. 6. are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle, and £66. 13. 6. to the rector of the parish.

BANBURY (St. MARY), a borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, chiefly in the hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, but partly in that of KING'S-SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON; containing, with the township of Neithrop and the hamlets of Grimsbury and Nethercote, 7366 inhabitants, of whom 3746 are in the old borough, 22 miles (N.) from Oxford, and 69 (N. W.) from London. This place, called by the Saxons Banesbyrig, is supposed to have been occupied by the Romans, which opinion is corroborated by the discovery of Roman coins and an altar, the latter relic having been preserved under an archway in front of an inn, until about the year 1775: there is also, in a field near the south entrance to the town, a sort of amphitheatre, called "the Bear garden," presenting two rows of seats cut in the side of a hill, and of very ancient date. About the year 1135, a castle was built here by Alexander, the ambitious and warlike Bishop of Lincoln, who, when taken prisoner by King Stephen, was compelled to resign this, with Newark and other fortresses which he had erected. It was afterwards restored to the see, and long continued to be one of the residences of the bishops, but in the 1st of Edward VI. was resigned to the crown; it is described by Leland, in the reign of Henry VIII., as "a castle having two wards, and each ward a ditch; in the outer is a terrible prison for convict men; in the north part of the inner ward is a fair piece of new building of stone." During the war between the houses of York and Lancaster, the neighbourhood was the scene of a sanguinary conflict, in 1469, between a vast body of insurgents from the north (said to have been privately encouraged by the Earl of Warwick), and the army of

Seal and Arms.

Edward IV., commanded by the Earl of Pembroke, who had been joined by Lord Stafford with about 5000 men. The armies met on a plain called Danesmoor, near Edg-cott, five miles from Banbury; and a conflict ensued, somewhat advantageous to the insurgents. In the evening, the king's forces having retired to Banbury, a quarrel took place between Pembroke and Stafford respecting quarters at the inn; in consequence of which Lord Stafford quitted the town with his followers, and left Pembroke alone to meet the enemy (who had encamped on a hill near the town) on the following day. In the battle which ensued the royal army was defeated, with the loss of 4000 men; and the gallant Pembroke and his brother, Sir Richard Herbert, being taken prisoners, were on the next day beheaded at this place, together with ten other gentlemen of the king's party.

At the commencement of the civil war of the seventeenth century, the inhabitants espoused the cause of the parliament with so much zeal as to give occasion to the mirth and raillery of some writers of that and subsequent periods. The castle was at first garrisoned for the parliament, but was surrendered to the king in the week following the battle of Edge-hill, Oct. 1642; it withstood a slight siege from the parliamentarians in 1643, and a very severe one in 1644. After the affair at Cropredy-Bridge, three miles to the north, on the 29th of June in that year, the siege was pressed with the utmost vigour; Col. John Fiennes, a son of Lord Saye, having brought to the assistance of the besieging party all the disposable forces from Northamptonshire and Warwickshire. A breach being effected, an assault was made on Sept. 23rd, but without success. At length, on Oct. 25th, the Earl of Northampton, having defeated the parliamentary cavalry on the south side of the town, was enabled to relieve the garrison, after the siege had continued thirteen weeks, and when the defenders had eaten all their horses except two: the defence was conducted by Sir William Compton. In 1646 the castle was again besieged, by Col. Whalley, who encamped before it ten weeks; and, the king having now joined the Scottish army, and further resistance being useless, the garrison capitulated on honourable terms. Of this once massive fortress the only vestige is a part of one of the walls, on which a cottage has been erected, and the site is now occupied by fruitful gardens.

The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile valley, on the banks of the small river Cherwell, which separates this county from Northamptonshire; it formerly consisted of old streets irregularly built, but it has been greatly improved under an act passed in the 6th of George IV. for paving, lighting, and watching the borough; the shops are excellent, the streets for the most part wide and airy, and the footpaths well paved: the carriage ways are Macadamized with a durable kind of iron-stone brought from the border of Leicestershire; the streets are lighted with gas, and the supply of water is generally abundant. A subscription library and mechanics' institute have been established. The manufacture of plush, shag, and girth-webbing was formerly carried on to a considerable extent, but has of late somewhat declined. Banbury was noted for a peculiar kind of cheese, but has long since lost this distinction; its cakes, however, still enjoy great and deserved celebrity. The Oxford and Coventry canal passes close to the town, communicating with all parts of the kingdom, and affording facility for every kind of trade. The market is held on Thursday, and, from the situation of the town in a fertile and populous agricultural district, is much frequented. Fairs are held on the first Thursday after Old Twelfth-day and three preceding days (which is greatly celebrated for the trade in horses), the third Thursdays in Feb., March, and April, Holy-Thursday, the third Thursdays in June, July (for cattle and wool), August, and Sept., the Thursday after Old Michaelmas (which is also a statute fair for the hiring of servants), the third Thursday after Old Michaelmas, the third Thursday in Nov., and the second Thursday before Christmas. The inhabitants were originally incorporated in 1554, by Queen Mary, who granted them a CHARTER, in consideration of services rendered in the suppression of the Duke of Northumberland's rebellion upon her accession to the throne. A second was bestowed by James I. in 1609; and, in 1718, George I. conferred the charter by which, until the passing of the Municipal Reform Act, the borough was governed. The corporation consists of a mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors, and the number of burgesses is about 300; a commission of the peace has been issued to four justices, who hold a court of petty-session every Monday; and a court of general sessions and gaol delivery is held by the recorder, four times in the year. A court of record, which had fallen into disuse, was revived in 1833, and is regularly held for determining all kinds of civil causes to the amount of £40. The elective franchise was granted in the reign of Mary, from which period the borough has continued to return one member to parliament; the mayor is the returning officer. The borough for municipal purposes comprises 300 acres, but for the election of the member is co-extensive with the parish, and contains 4182 acres. The town-hall is a modern brick building, and there is a gaol for the borough, in which a tread-mill has been erected.

The parish comprises a considerable tract of land under tillage, and some portions of grazing and meadow; the surface is partly hilly, and the soil a rich loam, well cultivated. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £22. 0. 2., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford: the vicarage is endowed with 43 acres of land in the parish of Shutford, and with 4 acres in Warkworth, Northamptonshire, together with a modus in lieu of small tithes; the value of the whole of which is about £90 a year, which amount has been nearly doubled by the aid of Queen Anne's Bounty, and partial help from private sources. The church was erected pursuant to an act obtained in 1790, under which the old church, a noble cruciform edifice, and a beautiful specimen of the pointed style, was taken down: it is a very spacious building, with galleries all round, and the view of the interior, with its numerous and elegant columns, and its lofty ceiling in the form of a dome, is very imposing, but externally the edifice has a heavy and inelegant appearance. There are places of worship for Calvinists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, Presbyterians, and others; and a handsome and commodious Roman Catholic chapel has been recently erected. A Blue-coat school, established by subscription in 1705, and endowed with property to the amount of £80 per annum, was incorporated, in 1817, with a national school formed in that year. The poor law union of Banbury comprises 51 parishes and places, of which 1 is in the county of Gloucester, 7 are in Northampton and Warwick respectively, and 36 in Oxford, the whole containing a population of 28,482. An hospital, dedicated to St. John, stood near the entrance to the town from Oxford, the remains of which, consisting of the outer walls, have been incorporated in a private residence; and in the township of Grimsbury, near the foot of Banbury bridge, another charitable foundation, for leprous brethren, was anciently situated, the site of which is still called "the Spital farm." Among the natural curiosities are many species of petrifications; and the surrounding district is rich in native botany.

BANHAM (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of GUILT-CROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Attleborough; containing 1165 inhabitants. It comprises about 4000 acres of rich loamy land, belonging to various proprietors, and contains many scattered houses: the village is situated on a gentle eminence. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 3. 6½., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £800: the glebe comprises 34 acres. The church, a large handsome building, with a square tower surmounted by a wooden spire, was founded by Sir Hugh Bardolph, Knt., whose effigy is in a chapel belonging to the church, and some trifling remains of whose family seat are still visible in the parish. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and 150 acres of fen land were awarded for the benefit of the poor at the inclosure.

BANK NEWTON, a township, in the parish of GARGRAVE, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (W.) from Skipton; containing 129 inhabitants. This township, which is situated in the western portion of the parish, comprises by computation 2280 acres, all in meadow and pasture; some of the inclosures are among the largest in the district of Craven.

BANKS-FEE, or SOUTH-FIELD, a hamlet, in the parish of LONGBOROUGH, union of STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, Upper division of the hundred of KIRTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1½ mile (N. by W.) from Stow. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £125.

BANNINGHAM (St. Botolph), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. E.) from Aylsham; containing 329 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1000 acres of land, of which the surface is flat, and the soil a strong loam on brick earth. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 15. 10., and in the gift of S. Bignold, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £375, and the glebe consists of 18 acres. The church is in the decorated and perpendicular styles, with a lofty embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists; and a school, conducted on the national system, is supported by subscription.

BANSTEAD (All Saints), a parish, in the union of EPSOM, First division of the hundred of COPTHORNE, W. division of SURREY, 3½ miles (E. S. E.) from Epsom; containing 1168 inhabitants. It is situated on high ground on the chalk hill which stretches into Kent, and comprises by computation more than 5000 acres, chiefly in pasture. Banstead Downs are remarkable for their verdure; and the fine pasturage they afford to numerous flocks of sheep has long rendered the excellence of Banstead mutton proverbial: a considerable portion of them has, however, been brought under tillage of late years. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £13. 8. 7½.; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. L. Buckle. The great tithes, belonging to the Rev. Mr. Buckle and R. Hudson, Esq., have been commuted for a rent-charge of £393, the vicarial for £300, and a rent-charge of £201. 5. 9. is payable to the trustees of Newport grammar school; the glebe consists of 6½ acres. The church is built of flints, and consists of a nave, aisles, and chancel, with a tower surmounted by a lofty spire. There is a place of worship for dissenters in the hamlet of Tadworth; and two schools on the national plan are supported.

BANWELL (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Axbridge; containing 1819 inhabitants. The manor has been in the possession of the bishops of Bath and Wells since the time of Edward the Confessor, with the exception of the short reign of Edward VI.; and one of them built an episcopal palace here, the remains of which, in the early part of the last century, were converted into a private residence, called Banwell Court, and the park has been divided into inclosures, which have been assigned on lease for lives. Some of the leases have, however, been lately bought up, and the ground disposed in a tasteful manner, by forming plantations, with drives conducting to pleasing and richly variegated prospects. The bishop also, in 1827, erected a cottage ornée for his own accommodation, and that of the numerous visitors which the discovery of two caverns in the rock, one denominated the Bone, and the other the Stalactite, cavern, has attracted hither. The parish comprises by measurement 5000 acres of land, of which the soil is fertile, and the substrata abound in mineral varieties; limestone and blue lias are quarried, and lead, iron, and copper ore, were formerly worked to a very great extent. The manufacture of paper is carried on, affording employment to about 80 persons. The village is pleasantly situated under the Mendip hills, in a vale watered by a copious stream, issuing from a spring formerly in repute for medicinal properties, and from which the place is supposed to have taken its name. A fair for fat cattle is held on the 18th of January. The Bristol and Exeter railway passes through the parish, in which a station has been established. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £26. 6. 0½.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Bristol, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £225, and the vicarial for £702. The church is a fine specimen of the later English style, and contains a richly carved screen and rood-loft, a finely sculptured stone pulpit, and windows of stained glass. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school, established about 1767, is endowed with £9. 11. per annum, and there are national schools for children of both sexes. A monastery was founded at Banwell by one of the early Saxon kings, to the abbacy of which Alfred the Great appointed Asser, his subsequent biographer: it was entirely demolished in the Danish irruptions, and, although restored, never recovered its former splendour, and fell to decay several years before the general suppression of religious houses. The summit of a neighbouring eminence is crowned by a British earth-work, inclosing within its irregular rampart an area of about twenty acres; and about a quarter of a mile from this is an intrenchment, nearly square, in the centre of which the ground is elevated in the form of a cross.

BAPCHILD (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union and hundred of MILTON, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Sittingbourne; containing 338 inhabitants. Ecclesiastical councils were held here during the heptarchy, in commemoration of one of which, convened under Archbishop Brightwald, in 794, an oratory or chapel was erected, of which there are still some remains. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £435. 5., and the vicarial for £165. 5. 6.; the appropriate glebe consists of 5 acres, and the vicarial of $1\frac{1}{2}$ acre. The church is principally in the early English style, with modern insertions, and has a shingled tower. A school is supported by a small endowment, and by subscriptions.

BAPTON, a tything, in the parish of FISHERTON-DE-LA-MERE, union of WILTON, hundred of WARMINSTER, though locally in the hundred of DUNWORTH, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Hindon; containing 143 inhabitants.

BARBON, a chapelry, in the parish of KIRKBY-LONSDALE, union of KENDAL, LONSDALE ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale; containing 315 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £66; patron, Vicar of Kirkby-Lonsdale. The chapel, and a school-room adjoining it, were built partly by subscription, and partly by means of a rate, in 1815; the school has a small endowment, bequeathed by John Garnett, in the year 1721.

BARBY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, hundred of FAWSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from Daventry; containing, with Onely, 640 inhabitants. This parish, which is surrounded by Warwickshire on the north-west, and partly on the south, comprises by measurement 3353 acres, nearly all pasture; it is also intersected by the Oxford canal, and situated near the London and Birmingham railway. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £30. 2. 11.; net income, £894; patrons, Trustees of the Rev. C. Williams. "Barby Town Lands" consist of property left for charitable uses, and vested in feoffees; part of it comprises eight cottages and an acre and a half of garden ground, valued together at £37 per annum, which is applied in aid of a school.

BARCHESTON (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON-ON-STOUR, Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (E. S. E.) from Shipston; containing, with the hamlet of Willington, 193 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £193; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. L. Snow.

BARCOMBE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHAILEY, hundred of BARCOMBE, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Lewes; containing 1028 inhabitants. It comprises by survey nearly 3000 acres, and is bounded on the east by the river Ouse, on which is an ancient flour-mill that has existed here since the Conquest, and has been for more than a century in the possession of the family of Mr. Russell Gray, who has also established an extensive oil-mill at an expense of £10,000. Sandstone of good quality is quarried for building purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 10. 10.; net income, £719; patron, the Crown. The church is an ancient edifice, in the early English style, with later additions; and a chapel was built at Spithurst in 1841, by subscription.

BARDEN, a township, in the parish of HAUKSWELL, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Richmond; containing 111 inhabitants. It is a high moorland township, comprising by computation 1330 acres, and includes the small hamlet of Barden Dykes. The village is situated on an acclivity; and the road from Richmond to Leyburn passes on the west of it, at a distance of about two miles.

BARDEN, a township, in the chapelry of BOLTON-ABBEX, parish and union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (N. E. by N.) from Skipton; containing 212 inhabitants. The township, which is situated in the vale of the river Wharfe, comprises by computation 7000 acres, the property of the Duke of Devonshire, who is lord of the manor, and includes the high moorland district, called Barden Park, which rises in lofty acclivities from the western side of the valley. Near the river are the remains of Barden tower, formerly one of the six lodges of the forest-keepers, and subsequently enlarged and converted into an occasional residence of the Clifford family, and now a picturesque ruin. Near these remains is a chapel in which the incumbent of Bolton Abbey officiates. The interest of £170, the amount of various benefactions, is appropriated to the instruction of children and the relief of the poor.

BARDFIELD, GREAT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DUNMOW, hundred of FRESHWELL, N. division of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Thaxted; containing 1120 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 3670 acres, is separated on the north from the hundred of Hinckford by the river Pant, or Blackwater. The manor was granted by Henry VIII. to his queen, Anne of Cleves, and after her decease became the property of the family of Lumley, from whom it passed to others, and was finally sold to the Governors of Guy's Hospital, London. The village, which was formerly a market-town, and is still of considerable extent, is pleasantly situated on elevated ground, rising from the bank of a stream tributary to the Blackwater. A fair is held on the 22nd of June; and the petty-sessions for the hundred are held here on alternate Mondays. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the gift of Devises in trust of the late W. C. Key, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for rent-charges of £262. 11. and £445, the former payable to the incumbent, and the latter to the Governors of Guy's Hospital. The church is an ancient structure of stone, with a square tower, surmounted by a lofty spire of wood covered with lead, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and a chancel. A chantry was founded in it by William Bendlow, serjeant-at-law, in 1556. A school is endowed with £14 per annum, and a Lancelian school was established in 1832.

BARDFIELD, LITTLE (St. CATHERINE), a parish, in the union of DUNMOW, hundred of FRESHWELL, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (E.) from Thaxted; containing 375 inhabitants. The parish, which comprises 1654*a. 2r. 33p.*, and is finely situated in a fertile and well-cultivated district, was granted in the reign of Edward III. to the abbey of St. John, in Colchester. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Rev. Mordaunt Barnard: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £465, and there are 63 acres of glebe, with a handsome parsonage-house. The church is a small ancient edifice, with a low tower, and contains some monuments to the Walford family. A school, now conducted on the national plan, was endowed, in 1774, with £18 per annum, by Sarah Barnard, who also endowed an almshouse for five widows.

BARDFIELD-SALING (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of DUNMOW, hundred of FRESHWELL, N. division of ESSEX, 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Dunmow; containing 381 inhabitants, and comprising about 1100 acres. The living is a donative; net income, £75; patron, Rev. B. Goodrich; impropriator, J. M. Raikes, Esq. It was returned in the reign of Henry VIII. as a chantry, and granted to Henry Needham, by whom it was conveyed to George Maxey, Esq., but recovered by suit in chancery, on condition of his being allowed to appoint the chaplain.

BARDNEY (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGEO, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (W.) from Horncastle; containing, with the hamlet of Southrow, 1192 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 5019 acres, of which 1711 are arable, 2500 pasture, and 808 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £60; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Lincoln, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £280, exclusively of Southrow. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free grammar school was founded in 1711, by Thomas Kitchen, who endowed it, for the benefit of the children of Bardney, Bucknall, and Topholm, with a salary of £35 per annum, for the master, together with a house and garden. There is also an almshouse for fourteen widowers and widows. A monastery founded here, in which Ethelred, King of Mercia, became a monk in 704, was destroyed by the Danes in 870; and, about the period of the Conquest, it was restored for a society of Benedictine monks, by Gilbert de Gaunt, Earl of Lincoln: the revenue, at the dissolution, amounted to £429. 7.

BARDON-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Leicester; containing 63 inhabitants.

BARDSEA, a township, in the parish of URSWICK, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Ulverstone; containing 263 inhabitants. Here are several malt-kilns, and in the neighbourhood is a copper-mine. A school is endowed with a rent-charge of £8.

BARDSEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Bardsey-with-Rigton, Wothersome, and part of Wike, 469 inhabitants, of whom 364 are in the township of Bardsey-with-Rigton, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Wetherby, on the road to Leeds. This parish, which comprises 2600 acres, contains some quarries of excellent stone for building, in which are found many fossils, and abounds with pleasing scenery. The village is situated in the picturesque vale of a small rivulet, near the Wetherby road; and Rigton lies on the opposite side of the valley. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 1. 8.; net income, £270; patron and impropriator, George Lane Fox, Esq. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style, of which it is an elegant specimen: near it is a mound, called Castle hill, the supposed site of a Roman fortress. A school was endowed by Lord Bingley, in 1726, with 27 acres of land, which produce £20 per annum. Congreve, the poet and dramatist, thought to have been born at Bardsey-Grange, was baptized here, in 1669.

BARDWELL (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Ixworth; containing 826 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 1., and in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £780, and there are 33 acres of glebe. The church is in the decorated style, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a lofty embattled tower; in the windows are several beautiful specimens of ancient stained glass. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The Town estate, left by William Beeton and others, consists of a building termed the Guildhall, used as a residence for the poor, six cottages, and several pieces of land, containing 68 acres, and yielding in the whole £87 per annum, of which £13 are allowed for the support of a school.

BARE, a hamlet, in the parish of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Lancaster; containing 120 inhabitants.

BARFORD (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the corporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Wymondham; containing 417 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1052*a. 3r. 15p.*, of which 852 acres are arable, 192 meadow and pasture, and 8 woodland and plantations. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 8. 4.; patron and incumbent, Rev. H. Francklin. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £350, one-half of which is paid to the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, and the other to the rector; and the glebe comprises 31 acres, equally divided between the Dean and Chapter, and the rector. The church is a small edifice, in the early and later English styles, with a square tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BARFORD, an extra-parochial liberty, within the limits of the parish of ARTHINGWORTH, union of KETTERING, hundred of BOTHWELL, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Kettering; containing 9 inhabitants. It comprises 360 acres, of a rich and highly productive soil, and is intersected by the north branch of the river Nene, and bounded by the road from Kettering to Rockingham on the east.

BARFORD (St. JOHN), a chapelry, in the parish of EAST ADDERBURY, union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Deddington; containing 126 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 700 acres. There is a school on the national plan.

BARFORD (St. PETER), a parish, in the Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, union and county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Warwick; containing 849 inhabitants. The parish is pleasantly situated on the left bank of the Avon, which flows through a finely varied tract of picturesque country into the grounds of Warwick Castle; it comprises 1594 acres, and the village contains several handsome and well-built houses. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £869; patron, John Mills, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments, in 1760. The church is a neat edifice, and contains several monumental tablets. A school is endowed with about £48 per annum.

BARFORD (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of WILTON, hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, Salisbury and Amesbury and S. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Wilton; containing, with Grovely wood, extra-parochial, 599 inhabitants. It is situated on the Shaftesbury road, and comprises 2246a. 3r. 2p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of All Souls' College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £627. 5., a portion of which belongs to the church of Salisbury, and a small part to the adjoining rectory of Baverstock; the glebe consists of 92 acres. There are a national school for boys and girls, and an infants' school.

BARFORD, GREAT (ALL SOULS), a parish, in the hundred of BARFORD, union and county of BEDFORD, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Bedford; containing 814 inhabitants. It is situated on the navigable river Ouse, which forms its south-eastern boundary, and over which is a neat bridge. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Roxton, and valued in the king's books at £9: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1820. The tower of the church is singularly placed at the east end of the south aisle: some writers have supposed, from the discovery of the foundations of massive walls, that the church was originally attached to an ancient castle, which existed here. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A Sunday school was endowed, in 1827, by William Pedley, Esq., with £100, for the purchase of books.

BARFORD, GREAT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Deddington; containing 370 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £6. 5.; net income, £67; patron and impropiator, John Hall, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1807. A school, conducted on the national system, was founded by the late William Wilson, Esq., of War-ton.

BARFORD, LITTLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of St. NEOTS, hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from St. Neot's; containing 190 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by computation 1240 acres, is situated on the river Ouse, by which it is bounded on the west, and close to the road from Biggleswade to St. Neot's; the soil in some places, and especially near the river, is exceedingly rich and productive. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 3.; net income, £254; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Alington. The tithes were commuted for land, in 1778. The church is an ancient building, with a Norman arch over the south door, and a curious wooden screen between the nave and the chancel. A school is supported by the clergyman. Nicholas Rowe, the dramatic writer, and poet-laureat to George I., was a native of the place.

BARFORTH, a township, in the parish of FORCETT, union of TEESDALE, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 6 miles (E.) from Barnard-Castle; containing 114 inhabitants. It is on the south bank of the Tees, and comprises by computation 1750 acres: a ferry crosses the river to the county of Durham. Within the township are the inconsiderable remains of a village called Old Richmond, formerly a Roman station; and there are also the ruins of an ancient chapel.

BARFREYSTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of EASTRY, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Wingham; containing 125 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 450 acres, chiefly arable. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 14.; net income, £160; patrons, President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church, supposed to be of the date of the twelfth century, presents a fine specimen of Norman architecture, especially in the southern porch, which is richly ornamented with varied mouldings. There are numerous tumuli in this and the adjoining parishes.

BARHAM (St. GILES), a parish, in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Kimbolton; containing 107 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Longstow in the Cathedral of Lincoln; net income, £58.

BARHAM (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BRIDGE, hundred of KINGHAMFORD, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Canterbury; containing 1151 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 4470 acres, of which 2147 are arable, 1301 pasture, 998 woodland, and 24 hops; and is celebrated for its pleasant and spacious downs, on which the Canterbury races are held in August. The living is annexed to the rectory of Bishopsbourne. A school, conducted on the national system, is supported by voluntary contributions. Barham gives the title of Baron to the family of Noel.

BARHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Ipswich; containing, with the inmates of the union workhouse, 576 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1500 acres, and is bounded on the west by the navigable river Gipping. Shrubland Hall, formerly the seat of a branch of the Bacon family, descended from the Lord Keeper Bacon, and now of Sir William F. F. Middleton, Bart., has been greatly improved by the present proprietor, and is a splendid residence. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 10. 5.; net income, £342; patron, Rev. Henry Browne Longe. The church is a handsome edifice, chiefly in the decorated style, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a square tower on the south side, and the chancel contains many monuments to the Bacons and Southwells. In a field, called Chapel Field, the floor of an ancient chapel was lately turned up by the plough. A Roman road passed through Shrubland Park; and in the year 1840 a Roman apartment, six feet square, and a bath, five feet four inches long, two feet nine inches deep, and three feet wide, were discovered. The late Duke of Gloucester resided at Shrubland when in command of the district.

BARHOLME (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Market-Deeping; containing 165 inhabitants. This parish, including the hamlet of Stowe, comprises by measurement 1500 acres, of which 400 are in Stowe, and of the remainder, 1000 are arable and 100 pasture: the soil is gravelly, and in some parts fen. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which that of Stowe was united in 1772, valued in the king's books at £5. 11. 8.; net income, £147, arising from 70 acres of land allotted on the inclosure in lieu of tithe; patrons and impropriators, Governors of Oakham and Uppingham schools. The church is an ancient structure, partly in the Norman and early English styles, with a tower which, from an inscription in verse, appears to have been erected in 1648.

BARKBY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (N. E.) from Leicester; containing, with the chapelries of Barkby-Thorp and North Thurmaston, 849 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £250; patron and impropriator, W. A. Pochin, Esq. The tithes, with some exceptions, were commuted for land in 1762. The church has been lately repewed, by aid of a grant of £100 from the Incorporated Society, and 165 additional sittings have been provided, of which 143 are free. There is a school on the national plan.

BARKBY-THORPE, a chapelry, in the parish of BARKBY, union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (N. E.) from Leicester; containing 70 inhabitants.

BARKESTONE (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of BINGHAM, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Belvoir Castle; containing 403 inhabitants. It comprises about 2000 acres, and is intersected by the Grantham and Nottingham canal: the soil is a dark-coloured tenacious clay, and the surface a gentle acclivity. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 5. 5.; net income, £114; patron and impropriator, Duke of Rutland. The church, in 1840, was partly rebuilt and enlarged, and entirely refitted. Daniel Smith endowed a school for the instruction of sixteen boys and ten girls of the parishes of Barkestone and Plungar, to which has been added a national school; and another for 26 girls is supported by the lady of the manor: a Sunday school is endowed with £20 per annum.

BARKHAM (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of WOKINGHAM, hundred of CHARLTON, county of BERKS, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Wokingham; containing 248 inhabitants. It comprises 1362a. 1r. 5p., of which 743 acres are arable, 212 meadow and pasture, and 290 waste, common, and roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 15. 7½., and in the patronage of C. Leveson Gower, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £368, and there are 22 acres of glebe. The church, a neat building, has been lately repaired, and contains a small organ.

BARKING (St. MARGARET), a parish, (formerly a market-town,) in the union of ROMFORD, hundred of BECONTREE, S. division of ESSEX, 23 miles (S. W.) from Chelmsford, and 7 (N. E.) from London; containing 8718 inhabitants, of whom 3751 are in the town of Barking, exclusively of 987 men and boys engaged in the fishery, who were at sea at the time of the enumeration. The name of this place, formerly written Berking, is by some deduced from the Saxon words Beorce, a birch-tree, and Ing, a meadow; by others from Berg-Ing, signifying a fortification in the meadows, probably from an ancient intrenchment, about a quarter of a mile on the road to Ilford, of which there are still considerable vestiges. The town derived its early importance from a very extensive and distinguished abbey, founded in 670, by Erkenwald, Bishop of London, for nuns of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, which was governed by a long succession of abbesses, of whom many were of noble, and some of royal, descent. In 870, Barking was burnt by the Danes, the abbey destroyed, and many of the nuns were massacred, and the rest dispersed; but the abbey was afterwards rebuilt, about the year 970, by Edgar, whose queen, Elfrida, presided over it after his decease; and at the dissolution its revenue amounted to £1084. 6. 2¼. Soon after the Conquest, William retired to the town, till the completion of the Tower of London, which he was then building to keep the citizens in subjection; and here he was visited, during the preparation for his coronation, by Edwin, Earl of Mercia, and Morcar, Earl of Northumberland, with many of the English nobles, who swore fealty to him on the restoration of their estates. The town is situated on the small river Roding, which, after flowing in two branches, unites with the Thames about two miles below: it is lighted with gas, by a company recently formed. The inhabitants are principally occupied in the fishery, having a number of vessels which they send to the Dutch and Scottish coasts, and, on their return, the fish is forwarded to Billingsgate in smaller vessels. There is a convenient wharf at Barking creek, which is navigable to Ilford for vessels of eighty tons' burthen, by which the neighbourhood is supplied with coal and timber; and near it is a large flour-mill, formerly belonging to the abbey. A fair is held on Oct. 22nd. The upper part of the building, which was formerly the market-house, is appropriated to the purpose of a town-hall: attached to it is a small prison.

The parish comprises a considerable portion of Hainault forest, and is divided into four wards, namely, Barking Town, Ripple, Great Ilford, and Chadwell: it is seven miles in length from north to south, and about four in breadth from east to west. The lands are fertile and highly cultivated, and many hundred acres in the vicinity are appropriated to the cultivation of potatoes for the London market. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 8. 11½.; net income, about £900; patrons and impropiators, Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford. The church is a handsome structure, with a lofty tower of stone, and consists of a nave, with a south aisle, two north aisles, and a chancel, and contains some ancient monuments. A church has been erected at Ilford, and there are also a district chapel, and a chapel attached to St. Mary's hospital: the ecclesiastical parish of Great Ilford was separated in 1836. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Sir James Campbell, in 1641, bequeathed £666. 13. 4. for founding and endowing a free school, which sum was invested in the purchase of a rent-charge of £20, on lands in the county of York: the school-house, having become ruinous, was taken down, and a workhouse erected on its site, in which the children of the poor are taught by a master and a mistress, to whom the rent-charge is paid. In 1686 John Fowke, Esq., bequeathed certain estates for the maintenance of eight boys in Christ's Hospital, London, two of whom are to be chosen from this parish. National schools, for boys and girls, are supported by subscription, and there are two unendowed almshouses; one containing four tenements, the other six. Of the conventual buildings of the abbey only the gateway remains, over which is the chapel of the Holy Rood: the arch is finely pointed, and enriched with deeply receding mouldings: above is a canopied niche under a fine window of three lights; the whole forming a square embattled tower, with an octagonal turret at one of the angles. It is called the Fire-bell gate, from its having anciently contained the curfew. Among the ruins of the abbey were found a fibula and a gold ring, on which were engraved the Salutation of the Virgin, and the letters I. M.

BARKING (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK; comprising the post-town of Needham-Market, and the hamlet of Dormsden, and containing 1931 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 3083 acres, and is traversed by the road from Ipswich to Bury-St. Edmund's, and bounded on the north by the Stowmarket and Ipswich navigation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27. 10. 7½., and in the gift of the Earl of Ashburnham: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £800; and the glebe consists of about 4 acres, and is ornamented with three very fine cedar trees, brought from Mount Lebanon in the year 1725; an excellent rectory-house was built in 1819. The church, which is picturesquely situated, is chiefly in the later style, and consists of nave, chancel, and side aisles, with an embattled tower. There is a chapel of ease at Dormsden, belonging to the parish; and besides an endowed grammar school, there is a Sunday school, supported by the rector. At Needham-Market is a small-pox hospital, founded chiefly by Ambrose Crawley, Esq., lord of the manor, in 1744: there are almshouses also here; and the sum of about £60 per annum, derived from land, is distributed amongst the poor.

BARKISLAND, a township, in the chapelry of RIP-PONDEN, parish and union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 5½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Halifax; containing 2391 inhabitants. This township comprises by computation 2420 acres, of which about 1000 were inclosed by act of parliament in 1814: it is partly the property of the Earl of Scarborough, who is lord of the manor, and of various families who have residences within its limits. The soil is generally fertile, and much of the land has been brought into a profitable state of cultivation: the scenery is pleasingly diversified, and in some parts embellished with wood; there are some quarries of slate, and of good building; and flagstone. Barkisland Hall, the ancient seat of the Gledhill family, is a stately mansion in the old English style of domestic architecture, and has long been the property of the Bolds, of Bold Hall, Lancashire; and the Lower Hall, which is also a handsome residence, belongs to W. Baxter, Esq. Howroyde, erected in 1642 by W. Horton, Esq., who married the heiress of the Gledhills, is now the property of the Rev. J. T. Horton, vicar of Ormskirk, and in the occupation of Lady Mary Horton: it is a handsome mansion, in a well-wooded demesne abounding with picturesque scenery. The village, consisting of one long street, is pleasantly situated on the ridge of a hill sloping to the south, and the township comprises part of the village of Ripponden, and numerous scattered hamlets. The inhabitants are partly employed in wool-combing, and in the manufacture of the coarser kinds of woollen cloth, which is carried on to a small extent. The grammar school, an ancient structure, was endowed in 1657 with £200 by Mrs. Sarah Gledhill: a house for the master was erected in 1780, with a good garden attached to it, and the endowment now produces £40 per annum, which is paid to the master for teaching twelve children. Thomas Gledhill, Esq., bequeathed £170 to the minister of Ripponden, and £50 for the poor, which, in 1656, were vested in land, now yielding £40 per annum; of which one-third is distributed among the poor, and the residue given to the minister. An almshouse for two widows was endowed by an unknown benefactor, with a rent-charge of £3; and there are various other bequests for the poor.

BARKSTON, a township, in the parish of SHERBURN, Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Tadcaster; containing 323 inhabitants. It comprises about 1130 acres, chiefly arable, and generally fertile land: the road from Tadcaster to Pontefract intersects the township; and the York and North-Midland railway passes on the east, and the Leeds and Selby railway on the south. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1772. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The hundred court was formerly held, probably under a large ash-tree, in this village, and hence the name of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash.

BARKSTONE-IN-THE-WILLOWS (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Grantham; containing 413 inhabitants. It comprises by estimation 2083 acres, of which 1331 are arable, 549 pasture or meadow, and 44 woodland; besides which, there are 65 acres, chiefly arable, on which a small modus is payable; the soil is light, varying from clay to sand: the river Witham, which is scarcely navigable, passes through the parish. A pleasure fair is held in October. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the Prebendary of North Grantham, in the Cathedral of Salisbury, valued in the king's books at £13. 7. 6.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £610, and there are about 19 acres of glebe. The church is supposed to have been built in the reign of John. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. There is a small endowment for a school; and an almshouse for six people is endowed with £43 per annum.

BARKWAY (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of ROYSTON, hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Royston, 13 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Hertford, and 35 (N.) from London, on the road to Cambridge; containing, with the hamlets of Newsells and Nuthampstead, 1291 inhabitants. In the reign of Henry III. a grant of a market, now disused, and of a fair, which is still held on July 20th, was obtained for this place. Nearly the whole town was destroyed by fire in the reign of Elizabeth, and again in 1748. It is pleasantly situated on rising ground, and consists principally of one street, which is a great thoroughfare: the houses in general are modern and neatly built, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The parish comprises chiefly arable land, with a large extent of wood, and a small portion of pasture. The living is a vicarage, consolidated in 1800 with the rectory of Reed, and valued in the king's books at £14: the impropriation belongs to Mrs. Vernon Harcourt: the tithes were commuted for land in 1801. The church is a spacious structure, combining various styles, with a square embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a charity school for boys has an endowment of £10 per annum.

BARKWITH, EAST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, E. division of the wapentake of WRAGGoe, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (N. E.) from Wragby; containing 255 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Lincoln to Louth; the soil is fertile, and abounds with a fine chalk marl, which is used as manure. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. 10.; net income, £195; patron, G. F. Heneage, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The church is in the later style of English architecture, with an embattled tower, and has a font of very ancient date, highly ornamented; in a niche over the porch is a figure of the Virgin and Child. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BARKWITH, WEST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, E. division of the wapentake of WRAGGoe, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Wragby; containing 130 inhabitants. It contains by computation 700 acres, and is situated on the road between Lincoln and Louth, the church standing at the thirteenth mile-stone from each of those towns. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 5.; net income, £160, derived from 114 acres of land in lieu of tithes; patron, Rev. S. H. Wynn. There is a glebe-house in good repair, with a handsome garden. The church is a plain building with an old tower, and contains an aisle and chancel.

BARLSTON (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of STONE, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Stone; containing 591 inhabitants. The village is situated upon an eminence commanding extensive and beautiful views, and the Grand Trunk canal passes through the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150; patron, Duke of Sutherland. The church is a modern building of brick, with an ancient stone tower. There is a school for 28 children, to which Thomas Mills, in 1800, bequeathed £12 per annum, and it is also endowed with a cottage and garden.

BARLAVINGTON, a parish, in the union of SUTTON (under Gilbert's act), hundred of ROTHERBRIDGE, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Petworth; containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 4.; patron, A. G. W. Biddulph, Esq.; improPRIATOR, Colonel Wyndham. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £100, and there are 8 acres of glebe.

BARLBOROUGH (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of WORKSOP, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Chesterfield; containing 804 inhabitants. It comprises by estimation 3305 acres, of which 2000 are arable, and 1150 pasture and meadow land, and is intersected by the roads from Chesterfield to Worksop, and from Rotherham to Mansfield, which cross here at right angles. There are some collieries in operation, and two quarries of limestone. Barlborough Hall is a spacious interesting edifice of the Elizabethan style. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. C. H. R. Rodes: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £600, and there are 73 acres of glebe. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, with a square tower. A school is partly supported by the Rev. Mr. Rodes; and in 1752, Margaret and Mary Pole founded an almshouse for six poor persons, and endowed it with an estate now producing £75 per annum.

BARLBY, a chapelry, in the parish of HEMINGBROUGH, union of SELBY, wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, E. riding of YORK, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Selby; containing 387 inhabitants. The township, which has a long village, comprises 1411a. 3r. 15p., of which about 900 acres are rich arable land, and the remainder pasture and common. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £65; patron, Vicar of Hemingbrough: the great tithes produce £369 per annum. The chapel is a neat brick edifice, with an octagonal turret, and was built about 1777. Here is a small school, endowed with land producing £2 per annum; and there are bequests for the poor amounting to about eight guineas.

BARLESTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (N. E.) from Market-Bosworth; containing 580 inhabitants, a portion of whom are employed in the weaving of stockings. The chapel is dedicated to St. Giles.

BARLEY (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of ROYSTON, hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Barkway; containing 792 inhabitants. It contains by computation 2500 acres, and the road from Barkway to Cambridge runs through the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £581, and the glebe consists of 32 acres. A school is endowed with £10 per annum, and there is also a national school.

BARLEY, with WHITLEY-BOOTHs, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of BURNLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Colne; containing 686 inhabitants.

BARLEYTHORPE, a chapelry, in the parish of OAKHAM-DEANSHOLD, union and soke of OAKHAM, county of RUTLAND, 1 mile (N. W. by W.) from Oakham; containing 200 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Peter.

BARLING (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Rochford; containing 326 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1258*a.* 3*r.* 10*p.*, and is skirted by a creek which flows into the river from Rochford: it comprises the manors of Barling and Mucking, the former of which is the property of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London, by gift from Edward the Confessor. Here are several good oyster beds. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £342, and the vicarial for £171; and the glebe comprises about 27 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, consisting of a nave, north aisle, and chancel, with a tower surmounted by a spire.

BARLINGS (St. EDWARD), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Lincoln; containing, with the township of Langworth, 352 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £55; patrons, T. T. Drake and C. Turnor, Esqs. The church is in ruins. A school is endowed with a rent-charge of £10. An abbey for Præmonstratensian Canons, dedicated to St. Mary, was founded in 1154, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £307. 16. 6.: the last prior was Dr. Mackerel, who, having put himself at the head of an insurrection against the king's authority, was taken and executed in 1536.

BARLOW, a chapelry, in the parish of STAVELEY, union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Chesterfield; containing 627 inhabitants. The surface is undulated, and the scenery picturesque: the district abounds with coal; but there are no mines in operation, and there are quarries of good stone for building. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £95; patron, Rector of Staveley. The tithes were commuted, with certain exceptions, for land in 1817. The chapel is a plain neat structure, containing 300 sittings, of which one-third are free. A small free school, conducted on the national plan, has an endowment in land, producing £3 per annum, which is augmented with a donation by the Duke of Rutland.

BARLOW, a chapelry, in the parish of BRAYTON, union of SELBY, Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Selby; containing 284 inhabitants. It is on the south bank of the Ouse, and comprises by computation 2150 acres; and the railway from Selby to Hull passes at a short distance on the north. The living is a donative; net income, £30; patron, G. H. Thompson, Esq.; impropriator, Hon. E. R. Petre. The tithes were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1800. The church is a small edifice.

BARLOW, LITTLE; a hamlet, in the parish of DRONFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Chesterfield; containing 59 inhabitants. The tithes, with certain exceptions, were commuted for land in 1817.

BARMBY-ON-THE-MARSH, a chapelry, in the parish and union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHIRE, E. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Howden; containing 506 inhabitants. This place, called in Domesday book Barnebi, was, according to tradition, parted by William the Conqueror among forty of his soldiers; and in conveyances of property it is described as being in forty parts, or oxgangs, bearing the names of the original owners. The village is pleasantly situated at the confluence of the Ouse and Derwent, and contains two sail-cloth and coarse linen manufactories. Races are held on the last Thursday in June. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £30; patron, Vicar of Howden. The chapel, dedicated to St. Helen, is a small ancient edifice, and was the tithe-barn of the Prebendary of Barmby till the dissolution of monasteries. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. In the reign of James I. Richard Galthorpe gave to trustees certain lands, now producing £100 per annum, to be applied to the use of the poor, the reading minister, and the repairs of the chapel, staiths, jetties, &c.; and John Blanchard endowed a lectureship, the appointment to which is vested in the inhabitants. The poor have several other benefactions; and a school, for which a house was built in 1834, through the exertions of the Rev. T. Guy, is conducted on the national plan, and aided with £10 per annum from Earl Fitzwilliam. Here are two mineral springs, called St. Peter's and St. Helen's wells, one chalybeate, the other sulphureous.

BARMBY-ON-THE-MOOR (St. CATHERINE), a parish, in the union of POCKLINGTON, Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W.) from Pocklington; containing 475 inhabitants. It comprises 2471*a.* 1*r.* 26*p.*, of which about two-thirds are arable, and the remainder pasture, and moorland abounding with game: the surface, for the most part level, with a soil generally sandy, was chiefly open moor, previously to the inclosure of the parish. The village, which is of considerable length; stands on the Hull and York road, and was anciently a market-town, and of much greater importance than at present, having received a grant of various immunities, such as freedom from toll, &c., which the inhabitants still enjoy, subject to the payment of a small sum annually to the Dean and Chapter of York. The ancient manor-house is surrounded by a moat. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £50; patron and appropriator, Dean of York. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1777. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style, with later additions: the original square tower has been raised and surmounted with a neat and well-proportioned spire of later English character, and a handsome window inserted. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists, and a school is aided by a portion of the following benefactions. In 1722, William Layton gave half an oxgang of land for the benefit of the poor for ever, and John Johnson, in 1744, left a messuage and cottage with their appurtenances; the rents to be paid to the overseers at Christmas and Whitsuntide, and distributed at their discretion; but on the inclosure of Barmby Moor, the commissioners allotted, in lieu of the former benefaction, 81a. 3r. 34p. of land, the proceeds of which, together with the rent of the two houses, then yielding £37. 13. per annum, now form a fund, a part of which is applied to the instruction of from 8 to 12 children. A Sunday school is attached to the church.

BARMER, a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 8 miles (W. N. W.) from Fakenham; containing 61 inhabitants. It comprises 1294a. 3r. 31p. nearly all arable, and there are 100 acres of plantation. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £5; patron and impropiator, Thomas Kerslake, Esq. The church, which had been long in ruins, was a few years since converted by the father of the present patron into a mausoleum.

BARMING (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union and hundred of MAIDSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 2½ miles (W. by S.) from Maidstone; containing 540 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 745a. 3r. 4p., is intersected by the road from Maidstone to Tonbridge, and by the river Medway, which is crossed by a stone bridge leading to East Farleigh, and by another of wood, called St. Helen's bridge, on the road to West Farleigh. The soil in the neighbourhood is rich, and peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of hops and fruit, of which latter a large quantity is sent to the London market. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, subject to increase or decrease according to the increase or decrease of hops and fruit; and there are 70 acres of glebe. A school is supported by subscription. There was a Roman villa at this place, the foundations of which were taken up a few years ago, when coins of the Lower Empire, and of Edward I. and later English monarchs, were found. The abbess of St. Helen's, London, had a summer retreat here but there are no remains of the house. The poet Smart resided upon his paternal estate in the parish; and the Rev. John Harris, D.D., author of a History of Kent, a Dictionary of Arts and Sciences, &c., formerly held the living.

BARMING, WEST, a hamlet (formerly a parish), in the parish of NETTLESTEAD, union of MAIDSTONE, hundred of TWYFORD, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 3 miles (S. W.) from Maidstone; containing 44 inhabitants. The river Medway, over which is a modern bridge, flows along the southern border of the hamlet. The living, which was a rectory, has been consolidated with that of Nettlestead, and the church is in ruins. The place is now deemed extra-parochial.

BARMOOR, a township, in the parish of LOWICK, union and E. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Wooler. In 1417, the lords marchers assembled here, at the head of a force amounting to 100,000 men, against the Scots, who, on hearing of their approach, retreated within their own territory. The English army encamped in the vicinity prior to the battle of Flodden, on the night after which the English general slept at Barmoor wood. A fair was formerly held at Cross Hills, between this place and Lowick. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £309. 7. 11., of which £298. 16. 3. are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Durham, and £10. 11. 8. to impropiators.

BARMPTON, a township, in the parish of HAUGHTON-LE-SKERNE, union of DARLINGTON, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 2½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Darlington; containing 124 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1502 acres, of which 887 are arable, and 615 grass land: the soil is a productive clay, with a small part gravel; and the scenery pleasing and picturesque. The principal farm was occupied some years since by the brothers Collings, who contributed so much to improve and bring into public notice the breed of short-horned cattle: at their sale in 1812, Comet, one of their bulls, was disposed of for the enormous sum of 1000 guineas, and Lily, a cow, for 400 guineas.

BARMSTON, a township, in the parish of WASHINGTON, union of CHESTER-LE-STREET, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 4¾ miles (W.) from Sunderland; containing 81 inhabitants. This place was once the property of the very ancient family of Hilton, of whom Sir Robert, in 1322, granted to his chaplain all the wax and honey of his wild bees in Barmston Park; it afterwards came to the Lilburnes and the Tempests. On the banks of the river Wear is an iron-foundry, and within the limits of the township is also a mineral spring. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £128. 6. 6.

BARMSTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BRIDLINGTON, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, E. riding of YORK, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Bridlington; containing 254 inhabitants. This is a remarkably fine agricultural parish, comprising by measurement 2290 acres, chiefly arable, of a loamy soil, excellent for the growth of all sorts of grain: on the east is the sea, which every year washes away a small portion of the land, and the coast abounds with gravel, of which large quantities are used for repairing the roads. The village is pleasantly situated at the northern extremity of Holderness, on the road from Hull to Bridlington and Scarborough. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 11. 10½., and in the patronage of Sir H. Boynton, Bart.: the rent-charge in lieu of tithes is about £680, and there are 38 acres of glebe in the parish, and 67 in the township of Ulrome, which is partly in the parish of Skipsea. The church, which is in the decorated English style, has a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with an embattled tower at the south-west angle: in the chancel is a table monument of white alabaster, highly ornamented, and having a recumbent effigy of a knight in plate armour, supposed to represent Sir Martin de la See, who so signally assisted Edward IV. after that monarch had landed at Ravenspurn, in 1471: the font is very ancient, and of curious sculpture. There is a church at Ulrome; and a place of worship for Wesleyans has been lately erected in the parish. A schoolroom, with a house for the master, was built by Sir Francis Boynton; and an almshouse for four superannuated men was founded in 1726, by his ancestor, Sir Griffith Boynton.

BARNACK (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, soke of PETERBOROUGH, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Stamford; containing, with the hamlets of Pilsgate and Southorpe, 860 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £28. 10.; net income, £1025; patron, Bishop of Peterborough. The tithes were commuted for corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in the 39th and 40th of George III. The church is an interesting and very ancient structure, in the early Norman and English styles, with a tower, of which the lower part, from the character of the arch opening from it into the nave, is evidently of more ancient date than the earliest of the Norman details, and probably one of the very few specimens of Saxon architecture remaining in the kingdom. A school is supported by subscription, and by a donation from the funds of the poor's estate, which consists of fifty-one acres and five tenements, producing a rental of £72. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1841.

BARNACLE, a hamlet, in the parish of BULKINGTON, union of NUNEATON, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 6 miles (N. E.) from Coventry; containing 263 inhabitants.

BARNACRE, with BONDS, a township, in the parish and union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Garstang; containing 628 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £148. 1. 9.

BARNARD-CASTLE, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of GAINFORD, union of TEESDALE, S. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 25 miles (S. W. by W.) from Durham, and 244 (N. N. W.) from London; containing 4452 inhabitants. This place is supposed to have originated soon after the Conquest, from the decay of a more ancient town called Marwood. About the year 1093, William II. having bestowed extensive possessions in the vicinity upon Guido Balliol, a Norman nobleman, who accompanied the Conqueror to England, and was ancestor of the kings of Scotland, his eldest son Bernard, about 1178, built a castle here, and, by a grant of privileges, encouraged the erection of houses near it, thus laying the foundation of the present town, to which he imparted his own name. It was formerly a member of the ancient wapentake of Sadberge, and for a certain period was exempt from the jurisdiction of the palatinate, the illustrious family of Balliol, who held it for five successions, having exercised jura regalia within the franchise. Bernard Balliol, son of the founder, having espoused the cause of Galfrid, elect Bishop of Durham, the usurper Comyn despatched hither a party of soldiers, who committed great devastation, and exercised atrocious cruelty upon the inhabitants. Being forfeited to the crown, the barony, with its members, was granted to Guy Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and continued in the possession of his descendants until 1398, when it was given by Richard II. to Scroope, Earl of Wiltshire, but was restored, in the following year to Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and subsequently passed by marriage with Anna, daughter and coheirss of Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick, to Richard, Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III., who, before ascending the throne, resided here, and whose badge (the boar) may still be seen on the walls of the castle. In 1477, he obtained a license to found a college in the castle, for a dean and twelve secular priests, ten clerks, and six choristers; but it does not appear that the design was carried into effect. After frequent grants and reversions, the castle, honour, and privileges, with the parks, lands, and appurtenances, were purchased by an ancestor of the present Duke of Cleveland, to whom they now belong. During the rebellion of the earls of Northumberland and Westmorland, in the reign of Elizabeth, the castle, which was the property of the crown, was garrisoned by Sir George Bowes, of Streatlam, who defended it against the insurgents, but was obliged to surrender it on honourable terms. In the great civil war it was held for the king, and was besieged by Cromwell, to whom, after a severe cannonading, the garrison surrendered. After the battle of Newburn, in 1642, part of the Scottish army was quartered here. The ruins of this important baronial edifice occupy an area of nearly seven acres, on an elevated rock near the margin of the river Tees, indicating the strength and extent of the original structure: one of the towers was some years since fitted up as a shot-manufactory, and the inner area has been converted into a garden.

The town is situated on an eminence, rising abruptly from the southern bank of the Tees, the bridge over which was repaired in 1771, after the injury it sustained in that year by the memorable flood that swept away most of the bridges on the Tees and Tyne: it has undergone considerable improvement of late years, by the erection of new streets, and the removal of unsightly objects. The houses are built of white freestone, and have a very handsome appearance: the streets are well paved, and were lighted with gas in 1834, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs in the neighbourhood. The environs are remarkably pleasant, and the Vale of Tees abounds with romantic scenery. There are two book societies, one in conjunction with Staindrop; and a mechanics' institution was founded in 1832, under the auspices of H. T. M. Witham, Esq., of Larlington Hall. On the banks of the river are the extensive flax, tow, and spinning mills of Messrs. Ullathorne and Longstaff, established in 1798, and whose manufacture of shoe-makers' thread gives employment to between 400 and 500 hands: there are also four carpet-manufactories, employing a large number of persons; and two iron-foundries. The conveyance of goods is by land carriage to Darlington, distant 16 miles, and thence by railway to all parts of the kingdom, and by water from Stockton-upon-Tees. The market is on Wednesday: there is a cattle market every fortnight; and fairs are held on the Wednesday in Easton and Whitsun-weeks. A fair on St. Mary Magdalene's-day has nearly fallen into disuse. The magistrates hold a petty-session once in every month; and a baronial court for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held quarterly. The town-hall, situated in the market-place, is an octagonal structure, erected in 1747, by Thomas Breaks, a native of the place: the upper part is used for the transaction of business, and the lower for the market.

The township comprises 3860a. 32p., exclusively of waste, water, and the site of the town: the land is generally good, and is divided in equal portions of arable, and meadow and pasture; the moorlands abound in game. Among the gentlemen's seats is Spring Lodge, commanding fine views of the Tees, the residence of William Watson, Esq. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Gainford, with a net income of £224; impropiator, as lessee under Trinity College, Cambridge, John Bowes, Esq., M.P., whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £211. 8. 10., and those of the vicar for £292. 14. 10. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient and spacious cruciform structure, in the decorated and later English styles, with a square embattled tower at the south-west angle: the bells were recast about twenty-two years since by subscription. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. A national school, attended by about 150 boys, and, in a separate building, the same number of girls, is supported by subscription, and by the interest of £133, bequeathed by John Dent, for the instruction of ten poor boys: the school premises were built in 1816, and an infant school has been since established, for which a commodious building has been erected. An hospital, for the residence and maintenance of three aged widows, was founded by John Balliol, about the 14th of Henry III., and dedicated to St. John the Baptist; the income is nearly £200 per annum. About two miles north-west of the town is a chalybeate spring, which is approached by walks through highly varied scenery of the most pleasing description. A Roman coin of the Emperor Trajan was dug up in the churchyard, in the year 1824. Sir John Hullock, one of the late barons of the exchequer; William Hutchinson, Esq., author of the History and Antiquities of the County of Durham, and who resided at the Grove, and died in the year 1814; and George Edwards, Esq., M.D., a political writer of distinction, were natives of the chapelry. The place gives the titles of Viscount and Baron Barnard to the Duke of Cleveland.

BARNARDISTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. E.) from Haverhill; containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Monks' Risbridge, 217 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by computation 1500 acres, was originally the seat of, and gave name to, the family of Barnardiston, long resident in the adjoining parish of Kedington. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. 5.; net income, £191: patron and incumbent, Rev. Valentine Ellis. A school is supported by the curate.

BARNBOW, a hamlet, in the parish of BARWICK-IN-ELMET, Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 7½ miles (E. N. E.) from Leeds: the amount of population is included in the return for the township of Barwick. It contains the extensive farm of Lasingcroft: the road from Leeds to Selby passes at some distance on the south.

BARNBROUGH, or BARMBROUGH (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 6¼ miles (W.) from Doncaster; containing, with Harlington, 508 inhabitants. This place has long been in the possession of the family of More; John More, only son and heir of Sir Thomas, the celebrated chancellor of England, having obtained it by marriage with Ann Cresacre, whose family had settled here in the reign of Edward I. The parish is on the north side of the river Dearne, and comprises about 1947 acres, of which the soil is mostly a strong fertile clay, resting on a substratum of excellent lime and freestone: the Earl Fitzwilliam and Thomas Peter More, Esq., are lords of the manor, and owners of a great part of the land. Barmbrough Hall, the former seat of the Cresacres and Mores, is in a retired situation near the church; and the Grange, which once belonged to the house of Nostel, and has, since the dissolution, been in succession the residence of various families, stands in the meadows near the Dearne, not far from the hamlet of Harlington. The village is situated in the vale. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23, and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £534, and there are 100 acres of glebe. The church, built in the fourteenth century, is a neat structure with a tower, and contains a highly-wrought tomb to the memory of a member of the Cresacre family. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school has an endowment of £4 per annum. The poor have the interest of £189. 5. 6., bequeathed by Edward Townson, in 1824, and of £700, left by the late Mrs. Griffith, of Barmbrough Hall, besides some small donations of more ancient date.

BARNBY (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Beccles; containing 296 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1010 acres, and is situated on the road from Lowestoft to Beccles, and bounded on the north by the navigable river Waveney, which separates it from the county of Norfolk. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Mutford, and the rectory of Wheatacre, All Saints, in Norfolk; it is rated in the king's books at £6, and is in the patronage of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £170, and there are nearly 4 acres of glebe.

BARNBY, a township, consisting of the villages of EAST and WEST BARNBY, in the parish of LYTHER, union of WHITBY, E. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 5¼ miles (W. by N.) from Whitby; containing 262 inhabitants. These two villages lie about a couple of miles to the south-west of that of Lythe, not far from the road between Whitby and Guisborough. The township anciently belonged to a family of the same name, mention occurring of Robert de Barneby, who held the lands under Peter de Mauley, Lord of Mulgrave.

BARNBY-IN-THE-WILLOWS (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, S. division of the wapentake of NEWARK and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4¼ miles (E. by S.) from Newark; containing 266 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1400 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 9. 9½., and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, to whom the impropriation also belongs: the incumbent's tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £219. 10., with a glebe of 29 acres, and those of the chapter for one of £140, with a glebe of 42 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Flawford, a farm of 250 acres, anciently belonged to the Knights Templars.

BARNBY-MOOR, with BILBY, a township, in the parish of BLYTH, union of EAST RETFORD, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from East Retford; containing 221 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1918 acres, chiefly arable: the soil is of a sandy nature, and the chief crops are wheat, barley, and oats. The scenery is pleasingly diversified, and in some parts picturesque. The great north road, and the Trent and Chesterfield canal pass through the township. Mr. George Clark, of this place, is an extensive breeder of hunters and race-horses. The tithes were commuted for land in 1807.

BARNBY-UPON-DON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK; containing 629 inhabitants, of whom 510 are in the township of Barnby, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Doncaster. The place was formerly the seat of the family of Portington, of whom were Roger and Robert Portington: the former raised and maintained a troop for Charles I., at his own expense, and is said to have spent many thousands of pounds in the king's service; and the latter was a major in Sir William Savile's regiment; was present at the battle of Horncastle in 1643, when he nearly caused Cromwell's death, and in 1648 assumed the command of Yorkshire, in conjunction with Byron and Langdale: by these exertions the family were eventually ruined. The parish comprises the townships of Barnby, and Thorp-in-Balne: the village of Barnby, the "residence of Beorn," is pleasantly situated close to the river Don, on the road between Doncaster and Thorne, and consists of somewhat picturesque houses, among gardens and orchards, in a flat country; the rest of the township is for the most part inclosed and cultivated lands, with scarcely a house erected upon them.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 12. 6., with a net income of £105: the patronage and impropriation belong to Thomas Gresham, Esq., who is chief landowner: the tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1803. The church is a well-built structure of very ancient date, with a chancel, the property of the Gresham family, which contains some handsome monuments to their ancestors and others. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. Frances, Countess of Sutherland, in 1731, devised property, yielding about £30 per annum, for the relief of four women, and for instructing children of Bramwith; and a school for poor children is endowed with £11 per annum from the produce of land belonging to the parish, and £7. 10. bequeathed by John Martin, in 1793, by which twenty-five are taught to read. The vertebrae of a whale were some time since dug up from a very deep bog.

BARNES (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of RICHMOND, W. division of the hundred of BRIXTON, E. division of SURREY, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from London; containing 1461 inhabitants. This parish comprises by measurement 910 acres of land, of which the soil is for the most part gravelly, and the surface flat; the village is pleasantly situated on the southern bank of the river Thames, and contains several well-built houses, particularly on the terrace, facing the river, which commands an extensive view of the opposite bank, and forms a peculiarly interesting promenade, from the constant traffic on the Thames, and the continued succession of pleasure-boats passing between London and Richmond, and in other aquatic excursions. At Barn-Elms, in the vicinity, so called from a row of stately elm-trees, is an ancient mansion called Queen Elizabeth's Dairy, which was afterwards the residence of Jacob Tonson, an eminent bookseller, who built a room for the meetings of the members of the "Kit-Kat-Club," portraits of some of whom adorn the walls; these have been since engraved and published, and among them are several of the most eminent English literati of the early part of the last century. Elizabeth granted the manor-house to Sir Francis Walsingham, who, in 1589, entertained that sovereign and her court here: it was afterwards the residence of the Earl of Essex, who had espoused the daughter of Sir Francis, the widow of Sir Philip Sidney; and is now that of the Rt. Hon. Sir Launcelot Shadwell, Vice-Chancellor. A court leet is held at Putney, by the lord of the manor, at which constables and other officers are appointed for Barnes.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 3. 4. and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £315, and there are 8 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient edifice, in the early English style, built of flint and freestone, with a square tower of brick, having an octagonal turret at one angle, which appears to have been added in 1500: it was enlarged in 1838, by subscription, on the north side of the chancel. There is an endowment, arising from the sum of £114, for the instruction of children; and a national school is supported by subscription. Mrs. Mary Wright, in 1804, bequeathed £500, which were invested in the purchase of £824. 11. 3. three per cent. consols.; and Mr. John Biggs, in 1837, left £500: the interest of both sums is applied in keeping their tombs in repair, and for the benefit of the poor. There are three almshouses for widows; and the parish is entitled to share in a bequest by Henry Smith. Robert Beale, who was employed by Elizabeth to communicate to Mary, Queen of Scots, the sentence which had been passed upon her, and was afterwards sent to Fotheringay Castle, to see it carried into effect, died here in 1601. Cowley, the poet, resided here for some time.

BARNESLEY, county of YORK.—See BARNESLEY.

BARNET-BY-THE-WOLD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, S. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 679 inhabitants. This parish, which is on the road from Brigg to Caistor, comprises by survey 2600 acres, the property of various freeholders; the soil, partly chalk and sand, is rich and fertile, and the chief produce barley and turnips; a considerable portion of the land is in pasture. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 4. 2.; net income, £305; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Lincoln. The tithes were commuted for land, in 1766. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans.

BARNET, CHIPPING (St. John the Baptist), a parish (formerly a market-town), and the head of a union, in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD, 14 miles (S. W. by S.) from Hertford, and 11 (N.) from London, on the great north road; containing 2485 inhabitants. This place, called also High Barnet, from its situation on the summit of a hill, derives its distinguishing name from the privilege, granted to the monks of St. Alban's, of holding a market here. On April 5th, 1471, the decisive battle which terminated in the defeat and death of the Earl of Warwick, and established Edward IV. on the throne, took place on Gladmore Heath, a mile north-west of the town, in commemoration of which an obelisk was erected by Sir Jeremy Sambrook, at the junction of the roads from Hatfield and St. Alban's, near Hadley Common. The town, which is pleasantly situated, consists principally of one street, more than a mile in length; and the houses, though interspersed occasionally with a few of more respectable appearance, are in general mean, and the inhabitants scantily supplied with water. A new road, entering from London, was made in 1826, by means of an embankment across the valley, at an expense of £15,000. The races, held on Barnet Common, and for some time discontinued, have lately been revived; and a hall has recently been erected, by shareholders, for public meetings, concerts, lectures, &c. The market was on Monday, and was chiefly noted for the sale of pigs, but has been discontinued. A fair is held on April 8th and 9th, for cattle and horses, and on the 10th is a pleasure fair; another, considered the largest in England for horned-cattle, commences on Sept. 4th, and continues the three following days, on the last of which the races are held. The magistrates for the liberty hold a meeting here on the first Thursday in every month; and the town is within the jurisdiction of a court, held in St. Alban's, for the recovery of debts under 40s.: two constables and two headboroughs are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, held at Easter.

The living is united to the rectory of East Barnet: the church was built by one of the abbots of St. Alban's, in the fifteenth century, and is a venerable structure, in the style of that period, but has undergone several alterations. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free school was established in 1573, by Queen Elizabeth, and was further endowed, in 1676, by Alderman Owen, and in 1734, by the Rev. Humphrey Hall; the income amounts to about £35. There is also a national school, supported partly by a bequest from Mrs. Allen, in 1725, since invested in land let for £57. 5. per annum. Jesus' hospital, for six elderly women, was founded in 1679, by James Ravenscroft, and further endowed with the residue of the produce of £500 left by Mrs. Barcock, in 1731, after distributing £10 annually to the poor; and with a moiety of the dividends of £800 reduced Bank annuities, bequeathed by Ann Mills, in 1784: the income is £273. In 1728, Mr. John Garret founded six almshouses for aged widows, the income of which has been augmented by bequests, and now amounts to £50; and six others, for married couples, were erected a few years ago, at an expense of £1022, by the trustees of a charity founded by Eleanor Palmer, and producing £153 per annum, two-thirds for the parish of Chipping-Barnet, and the remainder for that of St. Pancras. The Leather-sellers' Company have likewise erected almshouses, the first stone of which was laid in July, 1837, by the master of the company, Mr. R. Thornton, who presented the amount of the contract, £1208. There are also other charities for the relief of the poor, the principal of which are, Valentine Poole's, producing £51. 5. per annum; an inclosure of Barnet Common, amounting to 135 acres, let for £167. 10.; and the dividends on £898. 12. 10. three per cent. reduced annuities, under the will of Keene Fitzgerald, Esq., in 1829. A rental of £41, arising from a plot of ground in the parish of Stepney, assigned by deed of James Ravenscroft, Esq., in 1679, is applied to repairing the church. On Barnet Common has been built the workhouse for the poor law union of Barnet, which comprises nine parishes and places, under the care of fourteen guardians. On this common is a mineral spring, the water of which contains a considerable portion of calcareous glauber, with a small portion of sea salt.

BARNET, EAST (The Virgin Mary), a parish, in the union of BARNET, hundred of CASHIO, liberty of St. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD, 10 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from London; containing 598 inhabitants. It comprises 1702a. 20p., and the village is pleasantly situated near the town of Chipping-Barnet; the houses are neatly built, and the general appearance of the place is pleasingly picturesque, and the air salubrious, but the supply of water is scanty, and the quality not very good. The living is a rectory, with Chipping-Barnet annexed, valued in the king's books at £22. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes, with those of Chipping-Barnet, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £860. 5. 8., and there are 31 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe, with an allotment. The church is a very ancient structure, and formerly belonged to the monastery of St. Alban's: in the churchyard is a handsome monument to the memory of Sir Simon Houghton Clarke, Bart. A building was erected on Barnet Common in 1839, by Enos Durant, Esq., of High Canons, which has been licensed by the bishop for the performance of service; and a national school is supported by subscription. On a hill, opposite to the church, called Monk's Frith Garden, the Abbots of St. Alban's anciently had a villa; and in the neighbourhood are several mineral springs.

BARNET, FRYERN (St. James), a parish, in the union of BARNET, Finsbury division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 8 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from London; containing, with the hamlet of Colney-Hatch and a portion of that of Whetstone, 849 inhabitants. It is supposed that an abbey anciently existed here, from which the place obtained the prefix to its name, and that the old manor-house, now taken down, was the summer residence of the abbots, to whom the manor belonged. Colney-Hatch, in the parish, contains several handsome houses, and the environs abound with pleasing scenery. The land is tithe-free, if cultivated by resident proprietors, but if let to tenants the exemption ceases. Courts leet and baron are held on the Friday in Whitsun-week. The living is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London; net income, £255. The church is a small and very ancient structure, in the Norman style; the chancel was rebuilt some years since. Almshouses for twelve aged persons were founded and endowed with £10 a year, in 1612, by Lawrence Kemp, Esq., of London; and a school is supported by subscription. John Walker, author of the English Pronouncing Dictionary, was born here in 1732.

BARNEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of NORTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Fakenham; containing 276 inhabitants. It comprises 1389*a.* 3*r.* 31*p.*, of which the greater portion is arable land. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; patron and impropiator, Marquess of Hastings. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £168, and the vicarial for one of £104; and there is a glebe of 38½ acres. The church is in the early and later English styles, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south chapel, with a square embattled tower. The Weslevans and Baptists have places of worship.

BARNHAM (St. GREGORY AND St. MARTIN), a consolidated parish, in the union of THETFORD, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (S.) from Thetford; containing 412 inhabitants, and comprising 5184*a.* 3*r.* 32*p.* The living of St. Gregory's, valued in the king's books at £7. 11. 10½., and that of St. Martin's, at £8. 5. 5., now form one rectory, united to that of Euston: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £423. 2., and there are about 95 acres of glebe. The church of St. Gregory is the parochial church; St. Martin's is in ruins, but the steeple is standing.

BARNHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of AVISFORD, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 6 miles (S. W. by W.) from Arundel; containing 125 inhabitants. It comprises about 700 acres, and is intersected by the Arundel and Portsmouth canal. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 15.; net income, £67; patron, Bishop of Chichester; impropiators, the family of Postlethwayte. The church is in the early English style; the north aisle was a chantry founded by John Le Taverner in 1409, and was taken down at the dissolution.

BARNHAM-BROOM (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, 4¾ miles (N. N. W.) from Wymondham; containing 494 inhabitants. This parish comprises by measurement 1760 acres: at the western boundary is a small stream, on which is a flour-mill: the common was inclosed in 1811, when 19 acres were allotted to the poor for fuel. The living is a rectory, with that of Bickerstone and the vicarage of Kimberly united, valued in the king's books at £12. 8. 1½.; net income, £524, with 19 acres of glebe, and a house; patron, Lord Wodehouse. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. There was formerly a church dedicated to St. Michael in the same churchyard. A national school is carried on.

BARNHILL, a hamlet, in the parish of MALPAS, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 10 miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester. The petty-sessions for the hundred are held here.

BARNINGHAM (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of THETFORD, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W.

division of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Ixworth; comprising by measurement 1556 acres, and-containing 508 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Coney-Weston annexed, valued in the king's books at £13. 9. 2.; net income, £770; patron, R. Hunt, Esq. The glebe consists of about 25 acres. The church is in the decorated style, with an embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Land and tenements called the town estate are let for about £35 per annum, applied principally to the repairs of the church and general parochial purposes; and the sum of £21, the rental of an allotment of 20 acres, is laid out in coal for poor families.

BARNINGHAM (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of TEESDALE, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK; containing 600 inhabitants, of whom 337 are in the township of Barningham, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Greta-Bridge. The parish includes the townships of Barningham, Hope, Scargill, and part of Nesham, and comprises by computation 3620 acres, of which about 1800, on the west, are high moors and fells, but on the east it is a fine and fertile champaign country, in the most open part of the dale of Greta: in his poem of Rokeby, Sir Walter Scott alludes in eulogistic terms to the scenery of this place. The river Tees flows on the north at a distance of about two miles from the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £553: the church was rebuilt about 20 years since. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school, conducted on the national plan, is endowed with about £25 per annum, and is further supported by subscription: the schoolrooms were rebuilt in 1820.

BARNINGHAM, LITTLE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N. W. by N.) from Aylsham; containing 229 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected by the road from Aylsham to Holt, comprises 1224*a.* 3*r.* 14*p.*, of which 917 acres are arable, 49 meadow, 49 wood and plantations, and 209 heath. A charter for a market and a fair was granted by Edward I. to Walter de Barningham, who at that time possessed the manor. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 15. 2½., and in the gift of the Executors of G. D. Graver, T. L. Graver, and G. B. Leak Knight, Esqrs.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £260. The church, which is situated on an eminence above the village, is chiefly in the later English style.

BARNINGHAM-NORTHWOOD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (E. S. E.) from Holt; containing 54 inhabitants, and comprising 825*a.* 3*r.* 30*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £156; patron, W. H. Windham, Esq., lord of the manor: the glebe consists of 11 acres. The church is chiefly in the decorated and perpendicular styles, and contains several handsome monuments to the Palgrave family.

BARNINGHAM-WINTER, or TOWN (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 8 miles (N. N. W.) from Aylsham; containing 86 inhabitants. It comprises 824 acres, of which 444 are arable, 212 pasture, 144 wood and water, and 7 common. A grant of a market and a fair was obtained by Roger le Curzain, in the reign of Edward II. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £135; patron, J. T. Mott, Esq., lord of the manor. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £137, and there are 40½ acres of glebe. The church stands in the park, a short distance from the Hall, and is in ivy-mantled ruins, except the chancel, which has been fitted up for divine service.

BARNOLDBY-LE-BECK (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Grimsby; containing 292 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1190 acres, of which 800 are arable, and the rest pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell: the tithes were commuted for land in 1769, and the net income is £140. There are two almshouses, and a school for poor children, endowed with £10 per annum.

BARNOLDSWICK (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 9 miles (W. S. W.) from Skipton; containing 2844 inhabitants, of whom 1849 are in the township of Barnoldswick. This place was the original seat of the monks of Kirkstall, who were settled here from 1147 until 1153, and of whose abode there are still some remains. The parish includes the townships of Brogden, Coates, and Salterforth, and comprises 6073a. 2r. 8½p., belonging to various proprietors; the surface is boldly diversified, rising into hills of lofty elevation, and in some parts intersected with deep and narrow glens; and the surrounding scenery in many parts is beautifully romantic. In the vicinity are extensive and valuable limestone quarries. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes through the parish in a direction nearly north and south. The village, which is spacious, is situated in a secluded part of a valley, and sheltered by lofty hills; the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the cotton manufacture, for which there are three mills, and many are engaged in hand-loom weaving.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Richard Hodgson, Esq., with a net income of £162; impropiators, the landowners. The original church was built probably as early as 1050, and the existing structure bears marks of a date not long subsequent to the removal to Kirkstall of the monks, who built it after having levelled the first edifice to the ground in consequence of the opposition made by the rector and inhabitants to their intrusive entry among them; it is seated on the brink of a deep glen, from which it obtained the name of Gill church; and at the east end the armorial bearings of the monks are still preserved. A chapel of ease, dedicated to St. James, was erected in the centre of the village in 1837, at an expense of £1700, raised by subscription, aided by a grant of £200 from the Ripon Diocesan Society, and the same sum from the Incorporated Society; it is a neat structure in the early English style. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and a national school, which has £3 annually from a bequest of John Milner.

BARNSHAW, with GOOSTREY, a township, in the parish of SANDBACH, union and hundred of NORTH-

WICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 5½ miles (S. S. E.) from Nether-Knutsford; containing 325 inhabitants.

BARNESLEY, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of SILKSTONE, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 14 miles (N.) from Sheffield, 38 (S. by W.) from York, and 177 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 12,310 inhabitants. This place, in the Domesday survey "Bernesleye," and from the exposed situation of the original town, now a hamlet in the chapelry, called also Bleak Barnesley, was anciently celebrated for the manufacture of steel wire, which is still carried on to a moderate extent. The favourable situation of the present town in the heart of a district abounding in coal, iron, and stone, amply supplied with water, and intersected with canals in almost every direction, affording facilities of communication with many of the principal towns in the kingdom, rendered it peculiarly eligible for the purposes of trade; and the introduction of the linen manufacture, towards the close of the last century, appears to have laid the foundation of its subsequent increase, and its present prosperity. Since the introduction of that branch of manufacture the place has been steadily advancing in importance, and so rapid has been its progress, that within the last thirty years its population has been nearly quintupled. The chief articles manufactured here for many years were the coarser kinds of linen goods, principally towelling, sheeting, dowlas, and duck; but about the year 1810, the manufacture of huckabacks, diapers, damasks, broad sheeting, and the finer sorts of linen was attempted and carried on with complete success; and since that period, the improvement made in this branch of manufacture, has been such as to rival in fineness of texture and beauty of pattern, the most costly productions of Scotland and Ireland.

The town is pleasantly situated on the acclivity of a hill rising from the bank of the river Dearne, and consists of several streets, of which the more ancient are narrow and irregularly formed, but those of more modern date spacious, and uniformly built: considerable improvements have been made in the older parts by the erection of handsome houses on the sites of many that have been removed, in the widening of some streets, and the building of others; and the houses, being generally of stone procured in the neighbourhood, give the town a handsome and imposing aspect. The streets are lighted with gas by a company of shareholders established under an act of parliament in 1821, with a capital of £6000, raised in shares of £10 each; and the inhabitants are supplied with water by another company established under a more recent act, and having a capital of £9000: the water, which is of excellent quality, is obtained from the Dearne, about a mile from the town. The public rooms, a handsome edifice in the Grecian style, were erected in 1837, at an expense of £1500, by a proprietary of £25 shareholders; the principal front is of the Ionic order, and the building contains a subscription library and news-room communicating with each other, so as to form one room occasionally for the delivery of lectures; and under the same roof are apartments occupied as a post-office: the news-room is embellished with an original full-length portrait of the Duke of Wellington, painted by H. P. Briggs, Esq., R.A., and a likeness of Archdeacon Corbett, by the same artist. The mechanics' institution for the promotion of science by mutual instruction and stipendiary lectures, was established in 1837, and has a good library. The theatre, a neat plain building, was erected in 1814, at a cost of £1400, and is opened at intervals by a company of comedians. The hall for the society of Odd Fellows, forming a branch of the Manchester union, is a handsome structure of the Grecian Ionic order, erected in 1836 at an expense of £1100, in shares of £1 each; the great room in which the lodges are held is elegantly decorated, and of ample dimensions. The environs of the town abound with a pleasing diversity of scenery, and the country adjacent is richly cultivated.

The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the linen manufacture, and, at present, the demand for drills has become so extensive as to form the principal branch of TRADE; not less than 4000 hand-loom are constantly employed in weaving these articles in an endless variety of patterns, and several large factories have recently been established, producing annually more than 220,000 pieces of drill, each fifty yards in length. So great, indeed, is the number of hands engaged in this department, that the manufacturers of the other articles have been obliged to introduce power-loom, which are well adapted to the heavier kinds of linen, and in the superintendence of which the weavers obtain higher wages than they previously earned by hand-loom weaving. The total amount of the linens manufactured averages about £1,000,000 per annum: the Barnsley ducks, so generally in demand for smock-frocks, have been for some time superseded by a fabric of thicker and warmer texture, called "drabbets." In the town and its vicinity are extensive works for bleaching, dye-houses, and two large calendering establishments; and there are some flax-mills for spinning yarn, but the greater portion of the yarn used in the factories here is brought from Leeds, and still more distant places. There are also several iron-foundries, and two manufactories for steel-wire, the produce of which is used by the needle-makers. Coal of excellent quality is obtained in the immediate vicinity, of which one seam, called the Barnsley thick bed, averages about ten feet in thickness, and there are other extensive mines in operation, the produce of which, with that of the iron and freestone, with which the district abounds, forms a considerable source of trade. Great facilities of conveyance are afforded by the Barnsley canal, which was constructed in 1794, and extends from the river Calder, near Wakefield, to the Dearne and Dove canal at this place; and the North-Midland railway passes within two miles and a half of the town. The market, which is toll-free for all kinds of grain, is on Wednesday; and there is also a market for provisions on Saturday; fairs for cattle and horses are held on May 13th and Oct. 11th; a great market for live stock is held on the last Wednesday in February, and another for swine on the Wednesday before Old Michaelmas-day. The town is within the liberty of the honour of Pontefract, and its management is vested in commissioners chosen at the court of quarter-sessions, under an act, 3rd George IV., cap. 25, for lighting, paving, watching, and improving the place. A court is held every third Saturday for the recovery of debts under £5; and an act has been obtained for the establishment of a court of requests, for the more speedy recovery of small debts within the town and places adjacent. A court baron for the manor of Barnsley and Dodworth is held annually by the steward of the manor of which S. W. Lane Fox, Esq., is lord; and a court of petty-sessions is held every Wednesday by the magistrate of Staincross wapentake. The court-house is a neat substantial building, erected in 1833 at an expense of £1300, of which £500 were raised by rate, and the remainder by subscription; it contains the various rooms for holding the courts, and for the transaction of business relative to the town; and the hall contains a full-length portrait of Lord Wharnccliffe, lord-lieutenant of the county, by Briggs.

The chapelry comprises by measurement 2116 acres of rich and fertile land in high cultivation; the surface is boldly varied, and the scenery in many parts picturesque; and among the numerous seats in the vicinity are the beautiful mansions of Earl Fitzwilliam and Lord Wharnccliffe, and those of Sir W. Pilkington, Bart., F. T. W. V. Wentworth, Esq., and others. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, with the exception of the tower, has been rebuilt of freestone found in the neighbourhood, and was completed at a cost of £12,000, raised by rate on the inhabitants; the present structure is in the later English style, and contains 1050 sittings; the east window is embellished with paintings of our Saviour, the Virgin Mary, and the Four Evangelists, in stained glass. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £225; patron, the Archbishop of York: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1777. The church, dedicated to St. George, to which a district has been assigned, was erected in 1823 by the Parliamentary Commissioners, at an expense of £6500; it is a handsome structure in the later English style, with some details of more ancient character, with turrets at the angles and embattled parapets; it contains 1174 sittings, of which 790 are free. The living, which is endowed with £1500 three-and-a-half per cent. stock, has been augmented with £6 per annum by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and the net income is now £129; patron, the Archbishop of York. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive Methodists, Methodists of the New Connexion, and Wesleyans; and a Roman Catholic chapel. The free grammar school was founded in 1665, and endowed with property now producing £50 per annum, by Thomas Kerrisforth, Esq., of Pule Hill; it is open to all boys of the townships of Barnsley, Dodworth, and Kerrisforth, for the classics, subject to a small quarterage for English and arithmetic. The national school, in which are about 300 children, was built in 1813; towards its erection £700 were given by the trustees of Mr. Ellis's charity, and the remainder was raised by subscription; it is supported by an endowment of £45 per annum from Mr. Ellis's charity, and by subscription. A school, for which a site was given by S. W. L. Fox, Esq., has been lately erected in connexion with St. Mary's chapel, towards which the late Miss Cawood bequeathed £100. A considerable estate has been vested in trustees by Rodolph Bosville, Esq., of London, for the general benefit of the inhabitants. Edmund Rogers, in 1646, left an estate at Thorpe Audlin for the benefit of the poor, to whom also Thomas Cutler, in 1614, and his wife Ellen, in 1636, devised lands; and Thomas Thwaites, in the 10th of Elizabeth, bequeathed property producing £179. 17. 4. per annum for "the general weal of all the township of Barnsley." About a mile from the town are the remains of the Cluniac priory of Monk Bretton, founded in the 3rd of Henry II. by Adam Fitz Swaine, the revenue of which at the dissolution was £323. 8. 2.

BARNSELEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S-BARROW, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Cirencester; containing 305 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Cirencester to Burford, comprises 2000 acres by recent survey, and contains quarries of freestone of good quality for building and other purposes; the scenery is enriched with the park and elegant mansion of Sir James Musgrave, Bart. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 15. 5., and in the gift of Sir James, with tithes producing £320 per annum, and a glebe of 16 acres. The church is an ancient structure, of which the chancel is separated from the nave by a fine Norman arch. Two schools are partly supported by the rector. On Barnsley Wold, about a mile from the village, is a tumulus.

BARNSTAPLE, or BARURUM (St. Peter and St. Paul), a port, borough, market-town, and parish, having exclusive jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of BRAUNTON, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, 40 miles (N. W.) from Exeter, and 193 (W. by S.) from London; containing 7902 inhabitants. The origin of this place, which is of considerable antiquity, and is said to have been a Saxon burgh so early as the reign of Athelstan, is involved in obscurity. At the Conquest it was granted to Judael de Tofnais, by whom, if not previously by Athelstan, the castle, of which there are still some remains, is supposed to have been erected, and the town encompassed with walls defended by four gates, of which there were some vestiges in the time of Leland. In the reign of Henry I. and also in that of John, the inhabitants received many valuable privileges, and the town subsequently became the residence of numerous merchants, who traded with France and Spain, and soon raised it into importance. It was made one of the principal depôts for wool, from which circumstance it is supposed to have derived its name; and continued to increase in commercial prosperity till the reign of Elizabeth, when it equipped three ships of war for the fleet destined to repel the Spanish Armada. It suffered materially in 1606, from a flood which inundated the town, and did much damage to the property of the inhabitants. During the civil war of the seventeenth century, it was distinguished for its adherence to the cause of the parliament, and was the scene of frequent conflicts between the two parties, being alternately in the possession of each.

The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale, sheltered by a semicircular range of hills, on the east bank of the river Taw, and near its confluence with the Yeo, and consists of several spacious and well-paved streets, containing many well-built houses. The barracks, formerly appropriated to the reception of cavalry, were purchased from government in 1818, by H. Hole, Esq., and converted into a handsome range of dwelling-houses, with gardens and coach-houses attached, called Ebbberly-place, and forming an interesting feature in the appearance of the town: there is also a similar range of building, named Trafalgar-place, at Newport, close to the town. The inhabitants are amply supplied with excellent water, conveyed by pipes from the distance of half a mile; and the town is lighted with gas. The air is salubrious, and the surrounding scenery agreeably and richly diversified. Several charming walks upon the winding banks of the Taw (over which is a stately stone bridge of eighteen arches, within a few years considerably widened, and improved by iron railings) extend for nearly a mile; and one of them, called the North walk, is shaded by lofty elm-trees, and commands a fine view of the junction of the rivers Taw and Yeo, which here expand into a beautiful bay, with the ruins of the ancient castle, and a rich prospect over the surrounding country. On the quay is a handsome piazza of the Doric order, called Queen Anne's walk, surmounted by a statue of that sovereign, formerly used as an exchange by the merchants for the transaction of their business. A new, light, and elegant theatre has recently been erected in one of the chief streets; and there are assembly, reading, and billiard rooms, which are well attended.

The TRADE consists principally in the importation of deals from North America and the Baltic; wines, spirits, and fruits direct from the places of their growth; coal and culm from South Wales; and shop goods, chiefly groceries, from London and Bristol; and in the exportation of corn and other agricultural produce, oak timber and bark, leather, wool, tiles, earthenware, &c. The quay, on which is the custom-house, is extensive and commodious; but, from the accumulation of sand, by which the navigation of the river is obstructed, it is not accessible to vessels of more than 100 tons' burthen. A few years since, the port obtained the privilege of bonding wines, spirits, and other articles of colonial produce; and by warrant of the lords of the treasury, recently issued, Ilfracombe has been deprived of the character of a separate port, and is now united as a creek to the port of Barnstaple. The Taw Vale railway and dock have recently been constructed here under the provisions of an act of parliament obtained for that purpose: the line, which extends from Penhill, in the parish of Fremington, to this place, is two miles and a half in length, and in its course passes under a tunnel 418 yards long; it is worked by locomotive engines, and was completed at an expense of £20,000. The manufacture of serge and inferior broad cloths has long been established; and there are in the town and neighbourhood three factories for patent lace, or bobbin-net, employing more than 1000 persons. There are also six tan-yards and two paper-mills; an iron-foundry was established in 1822; and great quantities of bricks, tiles, and coarse earthenware are manufactured. Limestone of good quality is found within four miles of the town, and lead-ore has been discovered in the neighbourhood, but at such a depth from the surface as to afford little encouragement for the opening of mines. The market is on Friday; and there are great markets on the Fridays before March 16th, April 21st, and July 27th, and on the second Friday in Dec. A great market for cattle, for which this place is celebrated, is also held monthly; and a fair for horses, cattle, and sheep, is held on Sept. 19th, which is continued for three days.

The inhabitants have received various charters of INCORPORATION, of which that of James I., in the 8th year of his reign, was the governing charter, until the passing of the act 5th and 6th William IV. c. 76, when the borough was divided into two wards, and the controul vested in a mayor, six aldermen, and 18 councillors.

Corporation Seal.

The elective franchise was granted in the reign of Edward I., since which time the borough has regularly returned two members to parliament. The right of election was once vested in the corporation and free burgesses, in number about 700; but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV. cap. 45, it was confined to the resident burgesses only, and extended to the £10 householders of the borough, the limits of which, both for parliamentary and municipal purposes, include by computation 980 acres: the mayor is the returning officer. Courts of quarter-session are held for the borough, for determining on all offences not capital; and a court of record, having jurisdiction over the four neighbouring hundreds, is held on alternate Mondays, for the recovery of debts to any amount, and for other business relative to the police of the borough. The guildhall, in which the courts are held, is a spacious building, erected by the corporation in 1826; and contiguous to it is a handsome market-place for butchers' meat, with convenient shops. A substantial and convenient prison, containing 20 cells, was erected some years since, at the joint expense of the inhabitants and the corporation.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 8. 9.; net income, £324; patron, Lord Wharnclyffe; impropiator, R. N. Inledon, Esq. The church is a spacious and ancient structure, with a spire. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school, of uncertain foundation, was endowed in 1649 by R. Ferris, Esq., and a small annuity was added in 1760, by the Rev. John Wright: the school-house, an ancient building in the churchyard, formerly belonged to a Cluniac monastery, established here by Judael de Totnais. John Jewell, the celebrated Bishop of Salisbury; Thomas Harding, Jesuit Professor at Louvain; and John Gay, the poet, who was born in the neighbourhood, received the rudiments of their education in the school. The charity school, for clothing and educating 50 boys and 24 girls, was founded in 1710, and is maintained by the rent of land purchased with several benefactions, and by subscription; and a national school, instituted in 1813, is also supported by subscription. Litchdon almshouse, an ancient building, consisting of a centre and two wings, in one of which is a chapel, was founded in 1624, and endowed with a considerable estate by John Penrose, Esq., for 40 aged persons of either sex. Horwood's almshouses, for sixteen people, established in 1658, and Paige's almshouses, established in 1553, and enlarged in 1656, are both endowed by the respective founders whose names they bear. The late Mr. Roberts, in 1830, gave £500 four per cent. annuities, the interest to be distributed among the poor of the various almshouses, in number 70 persons; and an elegant building, comprising three sides of a square, and containing twelve almshouses, has lately been erected near Litchdon almshouse, at the expense of Mr. Charles Roberts, son of the above-named gentleman, for 24 decayed housekeepers. A noble hospital, or infirmary, for the reception of the afflicted poor of the north of Devon, was erected by subscription in 1826, and is a lofty and handsome structure, situated on the south-east of the town; and an extensive establishment, called the North Devon Dispensary, was also founded in 1830. The union of Barnstaple comprises 39 parishes and places, and contains a population of 37,452. On the quay is an ancient building, now used as a warehouse, said to have been a chantry chapel dedicated to St. Anne. A priory was founded here by Judael de Totnais, soon after the Conquest, and dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, for monks of the Cluniac order: it was at first a cell to the abbey of St. Martin de Campis, at Paris, but was afterwards made denizen, and flourished till the dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £123. 6. 9. Some notice also occurs of a house of Augustine friars, and of an hospital dedicated to the Holy Trinity, founded here, but no particulars are recorded.

BARNSTON, a township, in the parish of WOODCHURCH, union and Lower division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Great Neston; containing 206 inhabitants.

BARNSTON, or BERNSTON, a parish, in the union and hundred of DUNMOW, N. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Great Dunmow; containing 197 inhabitants. The manor, at the time of the Norman survey, belonged to Geoffrey de Magnaville, under whom it was held by Hugh de Berners and his descendants for many generations, and from them obtained its name Berners-town, now corrupted into Bernston or Barnston. The parish is pleasantly situated on the river Chelmer. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of J. Toke, Esq., whose mansion of Albanes is in the parish: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £410., and there are 21 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient edifice in the Norman style; the steeple was destroyed by lightning in 1665.

BARNSTONE, a chapelry, in the parish of LANGAR, union and N. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 1 mile (N. E.) from Langar; containing 136 inhabitants.

BARNTON, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of NORTHWICH, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Northwich; containing 859 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BARNWELL, county of CAMBRIDGE.—See CAMBRIDGE.

BARNWELL (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of OUNDLE, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Oundle; containing 140 inhabitants. The parish extends to the border of Huntingdonshire, which bounds it on the east, and comprises by measurement 1445 acres. The living is a rectory, united to that of Barnwell, St. Andrew, by act of parliament, in 1821, and valued in the king's books at £15. 6. 8.

BARNWELL (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of Oundle, hundred of Polebrook, N. division of the county of Northampton, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Oundle; containing 282 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1515*a*. 2*r*. 17*p*., and is intersected by the Nene; on the east it is bounded by the county of Huntingdon, and the village is intersected by the road from Oundle to Thrapstone. Stone for building, and for the repair of roads is quarried, and a variety of fossils have been found. The living is a rectory, to which that of Barnwell-All-Saints was united in 1821, valued in the king's books at £17. 2. 1.; net income, £470; patron, Lord Montagu. The tithes of the two parishes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1830; there are 26 acres of glebe, and an excellent parsonage-house. The church is a fine specimen of the early and decorated English styles, and is an ancient structure with a tower and spire. There is a free school, founded in the 2nd of James I. by the Rev. Nicholas Latham, who also established an almshouse for 14 infirm men and women, bequeathing estates for these purposes, and for the relief of persons in distress. The income was augmented by a bequest from Mr. William Bigley, of London, in 1824, who also left an endowment for educating and clothing 15 girls of Barnwell-St. Andrew's and Oundle. In the reign of Henry I. a baronial castle was erected here, by Reginald le Moine, of which there are considerable remains, including the principal gateway.

BARNWOOD (St. Lawrence), a parish, in the Upper division of the hundred of Dudstone and King's Barton, union and E. division of the county of Gloucester, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Gloucester; containing 383 inhabitants. The road from Gloucester to Cirencester, and the Gloucester and Cheltenham railway, pass through the parish, which is also intersected by the Roman Fosse-way. The living is a vicarage, not in charge; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £350, and the vicarial for one of £176; the glebe comprises nearly half an acre. A school is supported by Mr. Walters.

BARONY, with EVENWOOD, a township, in the parish of St. Andrew-Auckland, union of Auckland, N. W. division of Darlington ward, S. division of the county of Durham; containing 1729 inhabitants. This place is situated on the north side of the river Gaunless, over which is a bridge leading to Evenwood, and contains the hamlets of Morley, Ramshaw, and Tofhill. The bishop of Durham, as lord of the manor, holds courts leet and baron in March and October, at which debts to the amount of 40*s*. are recoverable.

BARR, GREAT, a chapelry, in the parish of Aldridge, union of Walsall, S. division of the hundred of Offlow and of the county of Stafford, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Walsall; containing 1087 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Aldridge: the chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret. John Addyes, in 1722, bequeathed property for the erection and endowment of a free school for thirteen boys, which number by subsequent benefactions has been augmented to twenty; the endowment consists of a house and land, the latter let for nearly £50 per annum. There is also a national school.

BARR, PERRY.—See HANDSWORTH.

BARRASFORD, a township, in the parish of Cholerton, union of Hexham, N. E. division of Tindale ward, S. division of Northumberland, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Hexham; containing 209 inhabitants. At this place, which, with the exception of a small freehold, is the property of the Duke of Northumberland, Robert de Umfraville, in 1303, obtained license from Edward I. to hold a market on Wednesdays, and a fair on November 11th, both of which have been discontinued. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge amounting to £180. 18. 11., of which £126. 6. are payable to the Mercers' Company, London, £54. 2. 11. to the vicar of the parish, and 10*s*. to the impropiator.

BARRAWAY, a chapelry, in the parish of Soham, union of Newmarket, hundred of Staploe, county of Cambridge, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Ely; containing 71 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BARRINGTON (All Saints), a parish, in the union of Royston, hundred of Wetherley, county of Cambridge, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Cambridge; containing 533 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with those of Hauxton and Newton united, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 4.; net income, £107; patrons, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, to whom also the impropriation of Barrington belongs; appropriators of Hauxton and Newton, Dean and Chapter of Ely. The tithes were commuted for corn-rents in 1796. The church has been repaired within a few years, by aid of a grant of £100 from the Incorporated Society.

BARRINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of Langport, hundred of South Petherton, W. division of Somerset, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Ilminster; containing, with the hamlet of Barrington-hill, 531 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 900 acres. Hemp and flax are extensively cultivated. About a mile from the village is the terminus of the canal recently cut by the Parret Navigation Company, by means of which, in conjunction with the rivers Isle and Parret, a communication is obtained with the town of Bridgewater. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £84; patron, John Lee Lee, Esq., as lessee of the advowson under the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £396. 6.

BARRINGTON, GREAT (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of Stow-on-the-Wold, partly in the hundred of Farringdon, county of Berks, but chiefly in the Lower division of the hundred of Slaughter, E. division of the county of Gloucester, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Burford; containing 553 inhabitants. It comprises about 1700 acres, of which the soil is partly stiff clay, and partly light earth, and abounds with freestone of excellent quality, which is extensively wrought, and from quarries of which was obtained stone for the erection of Blenheim House, and the repairs of Westminster Abbey. The Windrush, a branch of the Thames, runs through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. 8., and in the gift of Lord Dynevor, whose seat, Barrington Park, is situated in the parish: the great tithes, payable to his lordship, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £213. 15., and those of the incumbent for one of £195. 16., with a glebe of 42 acres. The church, which stands in the county of Gloucester, is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, with an embattled tower. Three schools are partly supported by Lord Dynevor.

BARRINGTON, LITTLE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, Lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. Division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Burford; containing 208 inhabitants, and comprising about 1000 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 19. 2., with a net income of £100; the patronage and impropriation belong to the Crown. Under an inclosure act in 1759, land and money payments were given in lieu of all tithes for the manor, the money payments being made for the small tithes of the old inclosures. Schools are supported by the surplus revenue of an estate left for repairing the church, aided by the landed proprietor.

BARRON'S-PARK, a hamlet, in the parish of DESFORD, union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (W.) from Leicester; containing 18 inhabitants.

BARROW (St. WILFRID), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, partly in the hundred of APPLETREE, and partly in that of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 5¾ miles (S.) from Derby; containing 641 inhabitants, and including the chapelry of Twyford with Stenson, and the liberty of Sinfin with Arleston. The parish comprises about 1140 acres, and is bounded on the south by the river Trent, and intersected by the Trent and Mersey canal. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 5½.; net income, £105; patron and impropriator, John Beaumont, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £245, and the glebe consists of about 40 acres. In addition to the parochial church, there is a chapel of ease at Twyford, in the parish; and a school is endowed with £8 per annum, the gift of Elizabeth Saly, in 1702. A preceptory of Knights Templars formerly existed here.

BARROW, a seaport and village, in the parish of DALTON-IN-FURNESS, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, county of LANCASTER. This place is situated at the south-western extremity of the estuary of Furness, opposite to the isle of Walney and Old Barrow island. The trade consists chiefly in the export of malt, slate, and iron-ore of which two latter articles, vast quantities are obtained from the quarries and mines in the vicinity.

BARROW, a township, in the parish of HALLYSTONE, union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9½ miles (W. N. W.) from Rothbury; containing 22 inhabitants. It is situated on the south side of the Coquet river, near the confluence of the Barrow burn.

BARROW, a chapelry, in the parish of COTTESMORE, union of OAKHAM, hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Oakham; containing 142 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, of the 39th and 40th of George III.

BARROW (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of MADELEY, within the liberties of the borough of WENLOCK, S. division of SALOP, 3½ miles (E. by S.) from Much Wenlock; containing 383 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Willey: the tithes payable to the impropriator have been commuted for a rent-charge of £283. 2., and those to the perpetual curate, for £3. 15. Here is a small free school, to which £10 per annum were bequeathed, in 1631, by John Slaney, who also founded an almshouse for six persons.

BARROW, a tything, in the parish of KINGSBURY-EPISCOPI, union of LANGPORT, E. division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Ilminster; containing 242 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £245. A conical hill, said to be in a great degree the work of art, was raised here to Ina, King of the West Saxons, who is said to have been buried at this place; and near it is a mansion of considerable antiquity.

BARROW (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of THINGOE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 6¾ miles (W.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 995 inhabitants, and comprising 2665a. 2r. 33p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 9. 9½., and in the patronage of St. John's College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £810, and there are 62 acres of glebe. The church is a spacious building of the time of Henry III. or Edward I. There is an endowment of about £21 per annum for the education of children, arising from the rent of the town estate. A rental of £36, subject to a deduction of £3. 12. 4., arising from land and tenements assigned by deed of the Rev. John Crosier, in the 12th of Elizabeth, is applied to the purposes of a church-rate; and about £20 are distributed among the poor. The Rev. Philip Francis, the translator of Horace, was rector of this parish.

BARROW-GURNEY (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. W.) from Bristol; containing 303 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2000 acres, of which 339 are arable, 1448 pasture, 97 wood, and 16 common. The living is a donative; net income, £71; patron, Montague Gore, Esq., who supports a school. A Benedictine nunnery was founded here about 1200, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was valued at £29. 6. 8.: the site is occupied by a fine old mansion in the Elizabethan style.

BARROW, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of BARROW, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Chester.

BARROW, NORTH (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Castle-Cary; containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Portman: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £115, and there are about 41 acres of glebe.

BARROW, SOUTH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Castle-Cary; containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £80, and in the patronage of Mrs. Toogood, to whom also belong the tithes, which have been commuted for a rent-charge of £245.

BARROW-UPON-HUMBER (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, N. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Barton-upon-Humber; containing 1662 inhabitants. Henry VIII. landed at this place on his route to Thornton Abbey. The parish, which is situated on the river Humber, and on the road from London through Peterborough and Lincoln to Hull, comprises 4720 acres, of which 3000 are arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture, with one or two small plantations; the soil of the arable land is a strong rich loam, and there is also some fine turnip land; in that part of the parish near the Humber, the soil is a kind of clay warp, apparently embanked from the river at some early period. The village, which is large and well-built, comprises a spacious street, at the south end of which is an area called the market-place, with an ancient cross; the view of Hull and neighbouring parts of Yorkshire is very fine. A manufactory of glue is carried on, which affords employment to about 20 persons. A market for cattle, held once a fortnight, was commenced in 1832, but afterwards discontinued; and in the same year also was established a ferry for passengers and cattle, from a place called New Holland, in this parish, to Hull, a distance of $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 16.; net income, £348; the patronage and impropriation belong to the Crown, and the tithes were commuted for corn-rents and a money payment in 1797. The church is an ancient Norman structure, with a handsome tower of later English architecture, and exhibits appearances of having been repaired at different times and in various styles. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Independents. About a mile north-westward from the village is an intrenchment, called the Castle, supposed to have been a British camp; and near it are several barrows. A monastery was founded here about the middle of the seventh century, by Wulphere, King of Mercia, and in digging on the site, a little north of the village, some years since, a coffin, a valuable gold ring, and other remains were found. Harrison, the inventor of the chronometer for discovering the longitude at sea, and who, in 1763, received a premium of £20,000 from the Board of Longitude, was a native of the place.

BARROW-UPON-SOAR (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, and the head of a union, partly in the hundred of EAST, but chiefly in that of WEST, GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER; comprising a part of the market-town of Mountsorrel, the hamlets of Mapplewell and Woodhouse-Eaves, and the chapelrys of Quorndon and Woodhouse; and containing 5782 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the river Soar, and comprises about 2300 acres, the soil of which is in some parts clayey, and in others sandy. The district has for many centuries been noted for a very fine kind of lime, which is made from a hard blue stone obtained in the vicinity, and a considerable quantity of which is conveyed for exportation to Holland, and elsewhere, by means of the Loughborough canal, which passes through the parish. An intermediate station of the Midland-Counties' railway is situated here, near which the line is conveyed over the Soar by a viaduct of five arches, spanning 30 feet each. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of St. John's College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for 180 acres of land. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Baptists, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school is endowed with land producing £55 per annum, bequeathed by the Rev. Humphrey Perkins, in 1717; and an almshouse for six widows, or aged bachelors, was founded in 1686, by the Rev. Humphrey Babington, who endowed it with an estate now worth £200 per annum. The poor law union, of which this place is the head, comprises 30 parishes and places, and contains a population of 19,695. Dr. William Beveridge, the learned bishop of St. Asaph, was born here in 1638.

BARROWBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (W.) from Grantham; containing, with the hamlets of Breather-Hills, Casthorpe, and Stenwith, 799 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £31. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £1084; patron, Duke of Devonshire. At Neubo, in the parish, Richard de Malebisse, in 1198, founded an abbey of Præmonstratensian canons, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, which, at the dissolution, had a revenue of £115. 11. 8.

BARROWDEN (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of WRANDIKE, county of RUTLAND, 7 miles (S. W.) from Stamford; containing 658 inhabitants. It contains by computation nearly 1700 acres, and is bounded on the south by the river Welland, which separates the counties of Rutland and Northampton. Excellent rugs are manufactured from sheep-skins; also parchment, glue, leather for the binding of books, hat-linings, &c. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Marquess of Exeter: the glebe consists of 26 acres, and a glebe-house has recently been erected: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £588. 13., and £30. 3. are also paid to the incumbent of South Luffenham. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

BARROWFORD, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of BURNLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Colne; containing 2630 inhabitants. The spinning and manufacture of cotton prevails extensively. A district church has been erected, of which the incumbent has a net income of £150; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BARSBY, a chapelry, in the parish of ASHBY-FOLVILLE, union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 291 inhabitants. It comprises 914 acres, of which 774 are pasture, and 140 arable.

BARSHAM (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union and hundred of WANGFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Beccles; containing 250 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1777 acres, of which 1000 are arable, and is situated on the road from Beccles to Bungay, and bounded on the north by the navigable river Waveney, which separates it from the county of Norfolk. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 6. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. A. I. Suckling, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £445, and who has 72 acres of glebe. The church and parsonage are picturesquely situated; the former is chiefly in the early English style, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a circular tower. A school is supported by the rector. Lawrence Echar, author of the "General Ecclesiastical History;" Capt. Morris Suckling, uncle to Lord Nelson, and with whom Nelson went his first voyages; and the mother of Nelson, were born here.

BARSHAM, EAST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N.) from Fakenham; containing 240 inhabitants. It comprises 1167*a. 2r. 32p.*, of which 990 acres are arable, 134 pasture and meadow, and 34 woodland; the village is picturesquely situated on the banks of the river Stiffkey, and on the road from Fakenham to Walsingham. Of the once splendid hall only remain the south front and lofty entrance gateway, which form a fine specimen of ornamental brickwork in the Tudor style, with towers and turrets. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the great tithes, and with the rectory of Little Snoring annexed, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; patron, Marquess of Hastings. The tithes of East Barsham have been commuted for a rent-charge of £313, and there are nearly nine acres of glebe. The church consists of a nave only, with a square tower on the north side; the entrance is through a Norman doorway. A school is supported by the vicar.

BARSHAM, NORTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Little Walsingham; containing 89 inhabitants. It is intersected by the river Stiffkey, and comprises 1015*a. 2r. 35p.*, of which 960 acres are arable, and 43 meadow and pasture. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the gift of the Earl of Orford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £330. 15., and there is a glebe of 18 acres, with a house. The church is chiefly in the early English style.

BARSHAM, WEST, a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N. N. W.) from Fakenham; containing 86 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 1.; net income, £155; patron and impropriator, C. M. Balders, Esq. The church is partly in the early English, and partly in the decorated style; the entrance on the south is through a Norman doorway.

BARSTON (ST. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of SOLIHULL, Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Knowle; containing 392 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the small river Blythe, which nearly surrounds it, comprises by computation 1844 acres; the adjacent country abounds with good scenery, and with objects of interest, and the village is pleasantly situated on an eminence commanding a fine prospect. The Birmingham and Warwick canal approaches within a mile, and the London and Birmingham railway within a mile and a half, of the village. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Berkeswell: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £180, and there is a glebe of 64 acres. The church is a plain edifice of brick, erected about the commencement of the last century, upon the site of the ancient structure.

BARTESTREE, a chapelry, in the parish of DORMINGTON, hundred of GREYTREE, union and county of HEREFORD, 4½ miles (E.) from Hereford; containing 44 inhabitants. It is situated near the right bank of the river Froome, and is crossed by the road from Hereford to Ledbury; it comprises 410 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Dormington. A rent-charge of £90 has been awarded as a commutation for the vicarial tithes. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

BARTHERTON, a township, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Nantwich; containing 32 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes in the vicinity. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £37. 19. 6., of which £32 are payable to the Bishop of Lichfield, and £5. 19. 6. to the vicar.

BARTHOLOMEW-HOSPITAL (ST.), an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of EASTRY, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, ¾ of a mile (S.) from Sandwich; containing 54 inhabitants. The hospital, which is under the government of the corporation of Sandwich, was founded and liberally endowed, about 1190, by Sir Henry Sandwich, for the support of a master, brethren, and sisters, each of whom has a house and garden, with a considerable pecuniary allowance.

BARTHOLOMEW (ST.), HYDE-STREET, county of SOUTHAMPTON.—See WINCHESTER.

BARTHOMLEY (ST. BERTOLINE), a parish, partly in the N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of NANTWICH, union of CONGLETON and NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing, with the township of Balterley, 2725 inhabitants, of whom 422 are in the township of Barthomley, 6½ miles (S. by E.) from Sandbach. It contains by computation 11,000 acres; the surface is flat, and the soil light and sandy, but there are several excellent beds of marl. In Crewe Park, the property of Lord Crewe, is a beautiful sheet of water, covering 80 acres; and on Alsager Heath is a mere, which, though small, is strikingly picturesque. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25. 7. 1., and in the gift of the Trustees of the late Lord Crewe: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £429, payable to impropiators, and one of £729, belonging to the incumbent, who has also a glebe of 75 acres. The church exhibits various styles, and has a Norman porch on the northern side of the chancel. A school is endowed with about £10 per annum.

BARTHORPE, a hamlet, forming a township with ACKLAM, in the parish of ACKLAM, union of MALTON, partly in the liberty of ST. PETER'S, and partly in the wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from New Malton; containing 51 inhabitants. This place, also called Barthorpe Bottoms, is picturesquely situated on the west side of the wolds: the river Derwent passes on the west at a distance of about three miles.

BARTINGTON, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Northwich; containing 89 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £30. 14. 5., of which £29 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford, £1. 2. 5. to the impropiator, and 12s. to the vicar.

BARTLEY-REGIS, a tything, in the parish of ELING, union of NEW FOREST, hundred of REDBRIDGE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 288 inhabitants.

BARTLOW (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of LINTON, hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Linton; containing 89 inhabitants. This place was supposed to have been the scene of the conflict between Canute the Great and Edmund Ironside, which took place in 1016, and in commemoration of which four artificial mounds on the lands near Bartlow farm were thought to have been erected; but on the exploration of these mounds between 1832 and 1840, all the remains discovered were evidently of Roman origin, and from their funereal character, prove that they were raised in memory of warriors buried underneath, which fact is further corroborated by the remains of a Roman encampment near the spot. The parish comprises by computation 360 acres: a fair is held on the 12th of June. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 16. 8.; net income, £259; patron, Rev. John Bullen. The church has a circular tower, of Norman architecture, said to have been built in the eleventh century; the body of the building is of the fifteenth century. On the south wall of the nave is a curious painting of St. Christopher, discovered in 1817, on the erection of a monument to Sir William Blackett. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans in the hamlet of Bartlow; and national schools are supported by the rector.

BARTLOW, LITTLE, or STEVENTON-END, a hamlet, in the union of LINTON, hundred of FRESHWELL, N. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Linton; containing 216 inhabitants. This place, supposed to have been formerly a distinct parish, is civilly included in the parish of Ashdon, but ecclesiastically and as connected with the militia, is considered to be in that of Bartlow, county of Cambridge.

BARTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of CHESTERTON, hundred of WETHERLEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Cambridge; containing 319 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1772 acres, of which about 1622 are arable, and 150 pasture. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 11. 3., and in the gift of the Bishop of Ely: the great tithes, belonging to King's College, Cambridge, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, and those of the incumbent for one of £135, with a glebe of $36\frac{1}{2}$ acres. In 1839, an act was obtained for inclosing lands.

BARTON, a township, in the parish of FARNDON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Chester; containing 169 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £105. There is a place of worship for Calvinistic Methodists.

BARTON, a tything, in the parish and union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER.

BARTON, with BRADNOR and RUSHOCK, a township, in the parish and union of KINGTON, hundred of HUNTINGTON, county of HEREFORD, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. E.) from Kington; containing 426 inhabitants.

BARTON, a township, in the parish and union of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Preston; containing 413 inhabitants. The Lancaster and Preston railway crosses the turnpike-road near Barton Lodge.

BARTON (St. George), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, N. division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Nottingham; containing 382 inhabitants. It is bounded by the river Trent, which is here navigable. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 3. 9.; net income, £360; patron, Archbishop of York. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1759. The church has several monuments of the Sacheverel family. On the lofty eminence of Brent's hill, south of the village, are the remains of a Roman camp, and in the vicarage farmyard is a Roman pavement.

BARTON (St. David), a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Somerton; containing 455 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises $945a. 31p.$, is intersected by the roads from Keinton-Mansfield to Butleigh and Baltonsborough respectively, and the river Brue divides the parish from the last named place. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £61; patron and appropriator, the Prebendary of Barton in the Cathedral of Wells. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £170, and there are 54 acres of glebe, with a house. The church is an ancient edifice, in the churchyard of which is a stone pedestal of St. David, preserved when the church was dedicated. There is a place of worship for Independents.

BARTON, a tything, in the parish and union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MAINSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 57 inhabitants.

BARTON, a hamlet, in the parish of BIDFORD, union of ALCESTER, Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK; containing 147 inhabitants.

BARTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Penrith; comprising the chapelries of Martindale and Patterdale-with-Hartsop, and the townships of High Barton, Sockbridge-with-Tirrel, Low Winder, and Yanwith-with-Eamont-Bridge; and containing 1668 inhabitants, of whom 323 are in the township of High Barton. The parish comprises by measurement 15,000 acres, and among its many villages is Pooley, a distinguished place of resort, distant from Penrith five miles. The soil partakes of both clay and gravel, and produces excellent corn and hay; the land lies upon a slope, and is encompassed with lofty mountains, among which, at its western extremity, is Helvellyn, and at its eastern King Arthur's Round Table. In the parish is part of the lake of Ullswater, from which flows the river Eamont, separating Westmorland from Cumberland; and the neighbourhood abounds with scenery of the most picturesque character. Barton Fell contains a great variety of valuable minerals, including jasper, agate, onyx, cornelian, chalcedony, &c., besides spars and petrifications of fish, shells, leaves, &c. At Hartsop and Patterdale are extensive quarries of fine blue slate, and at the latter place is a lead-mine. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 1. 0½.; net income, £130; patron, Earl of Lonsdale; improprators, Earl of Lonsdale, and E. W. Hasell, T. Gibson, and J. De Whelpdale, Esqrs. The glebe consists of 77 acres, and the living has one-third of the tithes of High Barton and Martindale. The church is a large low structure, beautifully situated in the vale of Eamont. Martindale and Patterdale have each a chapel. A free grammar school was founded in 1649, by Dr. Lancelot Dawes and Dr. Gerard Langbaine, natives of the parish, and the latter an industrious antiquary, whose endowment of it has been augmented by subsequent benefactors, to about £90 per annum.

BARTON (St. MARY AND St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of DARLINGTON, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. W.) from Darlington; containing, with the township of Newton-Morrell and part of Stapleton, 631 inhabitants, of whom 567 are in the township of Barton. This parish formerly comprised the chapelries of St. Mary and St. Cuthbert, together forming the township of Barton, both perpetual curacies, of which the latter was in the patronage of the Vicar of St. John's, Stanwick, and the former in that of the Vicar of Gilling. In 1840, the churches being in a dilapidated condition, the two curacies were consolidated into one benefice, and a new church was erected by subscription. The parish, which is on the road from Richmond to Darlington, comprises about 2900 acres, of which 2335 are in the township of Barton; about two-thirds of the land is arable and in profitable cultivation, and the remainder meadow and pasture, with a small proportion of wood and plantations; the surface is varied, and the soil is fertile, and the substratum generally limestone. The village is pleasantly situated on the banks of a small rivulet, and has an ancient cross in the centre.

The church is a handsome structure, erected at an expense of £900, by subscription, aided by a grant of £100 from the Incorporated Society, and £150 by the Ripon Diocesan Society; the east window is embellished with stained glass, and contains the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Commandments, with the royal arms, and the armorial bearings of John Allan, the late George Hartley, and Richard Wilson, Esqrs., and the patron, the late Rev. W. Wharton, vicar of Gilling, who contributed largely to the building of the church, which contains 382 sittings, of which 165 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the alternate patronage of the Vicars of Stanwick-St. John and Gilling, with a net income of £120; improprators, John Allan, Esq., of Blackwell, and others. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £125, and those of the incumbent of Gilling for about £75; 23½ acres of glebe are attached to the benefice of Easby, and 37½ belong to that of Gilling. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school is endowed with £10 per annum; a bequest of £2. 10. per annum is applied to apprenticing a boy, and a few small sums are allotted to the service of the poor.

BARTON-BENDISH, a parish, in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Stoke-Ferry; containing 455 inhabitants. This place derives the affix to its name from a dyke called Bendish, constructed here by the Saxons as a boundary line to the hundred; it formerly consisted of the three parishes of St. Andrew, St. Mary, and All Saints, of which the two latter have been consolidated. The whole comprises 4126*a.* 24*p.*, whereof 3316 acres are arable, 450 meadow and pasture, and the remainder fen and waste. The living of St. Andrew's is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14, with a net income of £260, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes were commuted in 1777 for 308 acres of land, and the glebe comprises 26 acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the early and later English styles, with a square embattled tower, and a south porch in the Norman style. The livings of St. Mary's and All Saints form a rectory, valued at £11, with a net income of £300, and in the gift of Sir H. Berney, Bart.: the tithes were commuted for 320 acres of land, and the glebe comprises 10 acres, with a house. The church of St. Mary is chiefly in the early English style, with a small belfry, the tower having fallen in the reign of Anne: of the church of All Saints there are no remains. In the hamlet of Eastmore was anciently a chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a neat school-house has been built. At the time of the inclosure 40 acres of land were allotted to the poor for fuel.

BARTON-BLOUNT, a parish, in the union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 11 miles (W.) from Derby; containing 68 inhabitants. The manor-house was garrisoned, in Oct. 1644, by Col. Gill, on behalf of the parliamentarians. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 19. 1.; net income, £69; patron, F. Bradshaw, Esq.

BARTON, EARL'S (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WELLINGBOROUGH, hundred of HAMFORDSHOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3¼ miles (S. W.) from Wellingborough; containing 1079 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated near the navigable river Nene, comprises 2330 acres; the soil is fertile, and there are two quarries of stone for building and for road-making. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £195, arising from land allotted on the inclosure in lieu of tithes. The church is a curious edifice, principally in the early, decorated, and later English styles, with a tower of enriched Norman architecture. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyans. Alms-houses for three poor people were founded under the will of Mary Whitworth, in 1823. To the north of the church is a large tumulus, or barrow, of Roman origin.

BARTON-END, a hamlet, in the parish of HORSLEY, union of STROUD, hundred of LONGTREE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 268 inhabitants.

BARTON, GREAT, or BRAMBLE (HOLY INNOCENTS), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of THED-WASTRY, W. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 774 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 15. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir H. E. Bunbury, Bart., whose seat is here: the tithes, with certain exceptions, were commuted for land and a money payment in 1802. The produce of about 100 acres of land is applied to the purchase of fuel for the poor, and to parochial purposes.

BARTON-HARTSHORN (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Buckingham; containing 165 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Chetwood annexed; net income, £80; patrons and improprators, the families of Bracebridge and Viger.

Here was formerly a chapel.

BARTON-IN-THE-CLAY (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of LUTON, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Silsoe; containing 855 inhabitants. This place, which derives its distinguishing affix from its position at the commencement of the clayey soil under Barton Hill, is situated on the road from Luton to Bedford, and on the border of Hertfordshire: the manor formerly belonged to the monks of Ramsey, since whose possession it has been in the hands of many different families. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 9. 7.; net income, £317; patron, the Crown. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1809. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a school is endowed with property producing about £50 per annum, the bequest of Edward Willes, in 1807.

BARTON-LE-STREET (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of MALTON, partly in the wapentake of BULMER, but chiefly in that of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK; containing 419 inhabitants, of whom 185 are in the township of Barton-le-Street, 6 miles (N.) from Whitwell. This parish is bounded on the north by the river Ryle, and, including the townships of Coneysthorpe, Barton-le-Street, and Butterwick, comprises by computation 3200 acres, of which about 1500 are in the township of Barton. The surface is undulated, and the scenery beautifully varied; the soil is of moderate quality, and limestone for building and for burning into lime is extensively quarried. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 8. $6\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £450; patron, Hugh Magnell Ingram, Esq. The church, an ancient structure with a campanile turret, is said to have been erected with materials from the ruins of St. Mary's Abbey, York; it contains some curious specimens of sculpture. A chapel was erected at Coneysthorpe in 1837, at the expense of the Earl of Carlisle, sole proprietor of that township; there is a parochial school at the same place, supported by the Countess; and at Barton is an infants' school, maintained at the expense of the rector.

BARTON-LE-WILLOWS, a township, in the parish of CRAMBE, union of MALTON, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from York; containing 207 inhabitants. The amount of rent-charge for the commutation of the tithes is included in the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BARTON, ST. MARY, a hamlet, in the parish of St. MARY-DE-LODE, GLOUCESTER, union of GLOUCESTER, Middle division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 1674 inhabitants.

living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 17. 1.; net income, £492; patron, Duke of Buccleugh. The glebe consists of 60 acres. The church exhibits specimens of very ancient architecture. A school is supported by voluntary contributions. John Bridges, an industrious collector of materials for the history of Northamptonshire, was a native of the parish.

BARTON-STACEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ANDOVER, hundred of BARTON-STACEY, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Witchurch; consisting of the tythings of Barton-Stacey, Bransbury, Drayton, and Newton-Stacey, and containing 561 inhabitants. It comprises upwards of 4800 acres. A fair is held on the 31st of July. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 2. 1.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £968, and the vicarial for one of £260; and there are 55 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure of the early and decorated English styles, with a square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles, and surmounted by an angular turret. A national school is aided by the vicar; and another school is endowed with £10. 10. per annum, being part of the rental of land left by Dorothy and Elizabeth Wright. A Roman road passed through the parish, and there are vestiges of a strong intrenchment at Bransbury.

BARTON, STEEPLE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOORTON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Deddington; containing 640 inhabitants, of whom 60 are in the township of Steeple-Barton, 531 in that of Middle Barton, and 49 in that of Sesswells-Barton. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £78; patron, Rev. Robert Wright; impropiator, Duke of Marlborough: the tithes were commuted for land and an annual money payment, in 1795. The church is a spacious ancient structure, in the chancel of which are some monuments of the Dormer family. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by the Rev. William Wilson.

BARTON-TURF (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 11 miles (N. N. E.) from Norwich; containing 408 inhabitants. It comprises 1599*a.* 14*p.*, of which 1005 acres are arable, 309 pasture and meadow, 35 woodland, and 167 water; and is situated on the navigable river Ant, which opens out into a large lake or broad on the east side of the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Irstead united, valued in the king's books at £3. 13. 4.; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Norwich. The great tithes of Barton-Turf have been commuted for £290, and the vicarial for £168 per annum; there is half an acre of glebe belonging to the bishop, and the vicar's glebe comprises $27\frac{1}{2}$ acres, besides $7\frac{1}{2}$ in Neatshead parish. The church contains handsome monuments to the Norris family. A school is conducted on the national plan. Under the inclosure act about thirty acres of land were allotted to the poor for fuel.

BARTON-UNDER-NEEDWOOD, a parochial chapelry, in the parish of TATENHILL, union of BURTON-

UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (S. W. by W.) from Burton; containing 1459 inhabitants. This place is the head of one of the five wards into which the ancient royal forest of Needwood has been divided, and comprises 3798*a.* $24\frac{1}{2}$ p. of land; through which the Grand Trunk canal passes. Courts leet and baron are held in October; and fairs on May 3rd and Nov. 28th. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £135; patron and appropriator, Dean of Lichfield. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, is a handsome building in the later English style, erected in the reign of Henry VIII. by Dr. John Taylor, a native of the place. Thomas Russell, in 1593, gave a rent-charge of £50. 10. for the establishment of a free grammar school, in which about sixty-five boys are instructed on Dr. Bell's plan; and a school for girls is partly supported by an endowment of £20 per annum.

BARTON-UPON-HUMBER (ST. PETER), a market-town and parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, N. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 34 miles (N.) from Lincoln, and 167 (N.) from London; containing 3495 inhabitants. This place, called in the Norman survey Berton super Humber, is of great antiquity, and is thought to have been a Roman station; which opinion is in some degree confirmed by the direction of the streets, which intersect each other at right angles. During the Saxon and Danish contests it was of considerable importance, and is said to have been surrounded by a rampart and fosse, some remains of which, called the Castle Dykes, are still perceptible. On the invasion of Anlaf and his confederates in the reign of Athelstan, he is supposed to have landed part of his forces and posted them here to act in concert with the main body of his army, which was stationed at Barrow, previous to the great battle of Brunnam, which took place in the adjoining township, now Burnham. At the time of the Conquest, it was noted for its commerce, and was one of the manors bestowed by William the Conqueror on his nephew, Gilbert de Gaunt, who had a castle here. It continued to flourish as a commercial town till Edward I. gave to Wyke-upon-Hull the appellation of "King's town upon Hull," and made it a free borough, at which time the trade of Barton began to decline.

The town is pleasantly situated on the south bank of the river Humber, at the foot of the northern termination of the range of chalk hills called the Lincolnshire Wolds, and is of considerable extent, consisting of several streets, in which are numerous good dwelling-houses with gardens and orchards attached, and combining with the advantages of a market-town the pleasing appearance of a rural village. The trade is principally in corn, flour, malt, coal, and bones for manure; there are also a large ropery and sacking manufactory, two large tanneries (in one of which the larch bark is used for the finer kinds of leather), an extensive foundry for church bells, which is carried on by Mr. James Harrison, whose grandfather obtained a premium for the best time-piece for finding the longitude at sea, and large manufactories for starch and malt. In the vicinity is a large chalk-stone quarry, producing great quantities of stone, the larger of which are used for repairing the banks of the Humber and other rivers, and for the construction and repair of jetties, and the smaller for mending roads; and the finest quality is sold for making plaster of Paris, and shipped for foreign markets. The market, under an ancient grant, is on Monday, and is well supplied with corn and with provisions of every kind; a market is also held every alternate Monday for fat-cattle, and a fair, chiefly for toys, on Trinity-Thursday and the following day. The ancient ferry to Hessle, across the Humber, which is here about a mile broad, is appurtenant to the manor, which is vested in the crown: it has been for a long time granted to different lessees, and is now combined with the Hull ferry, under lease to the corporation of that town, who have established a steam-packet. There is a station on the line of the Hull and Selby railway at Hessle, just mentioned. The town is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty-session every fortnight; and constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the manor, which is held annually under the crown. A court baron, formerly held every three weeks for the recovery of debts under £2, has been discontinued since the establishment of a monthly court of requests for debts under £5.

The parish comprises 6240 acres, of which about 700 are arable, and 100 plantation; the land adjoining the Humber is of a clayey quality, but the greater part is a fine soil resting upon chalk. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 4. 8.; net income, £261; patrons and improprators, the Uppley family. The great tithes were granted by Gilbert de Gaunt to the abbey of Bardney, and, at the inclosure of the waste lands, the tithe allotment and glebe of the impropriate rectory amounted to more than 1000 acres. By the inclosure act in 1792, the vicarial tithe allotment in the arable fields, amounting to 261 acres, was divided among three parties, in consideration of corn-rents payable half-yearly to the vicar, according to the average price of wheat, now amounting to £300 per annum; in addition to which the vicar has tithe-rent from ancient inclosures, amounting to £30 per annum, the surplice fees, and about five acres of glebe attached to the vicarage-house. St. Peter's church is a spacious structure, principally in the decorated English style, with a tower, of which the upper part is evidently early Norman, and the lower of a much more remote date, being probably one of the very few specimens of Saxon architecture remaining in the kingdom. There is also a church, dedicated to St. Mary, and formerly called the chapel of All Saints, which, having no endowment, is supposed to have been built as a chapel of ease to St. Peter's, and which, according to tradition, was rebuilt by the merchants of Barton; it is partly in the Norman, but chiefly in the early English style, of which latter the tower is a very elegant specimen. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Independents, and Primitive Methodists, and a Roman Catholic chapel has recently been erected. William Long, Esq., Richard Beck, Magdalen George, and Nicholas Fountain, bequeathed property for the support of a school, originally founded in 1722, and for which the trustees, in 1831, erected a schoolroom, wherein 100 boys are instructed on the Lancasterian plan. Thomas Holland, in 1669, gave a rent-charge on land called Paradise close for the maintenance of four almshouses for women; and Christopher Berton, in 1701, left a message called the Chantry for the benefit of the poor. John Tripp, in 1669, devised two oxgangs of land for the clothing of poor people, and Magdalen George also bequeathed property for the same purpose; besides which there are some further bequests. In the south part of the parish is a small encampment, supposed to have been an outpost to the larger station at Burnham, and which has long been planted with trees, and is now styled Beaumont Cote. In November, 1828, a Roman urn of unburnt clay, and of excellent workmanship, was dug up in the West Field of Barton, near the line of the ancient road to Ferriby, containing human bones unconsumed; and near the spot where it had been deposited was discovered a human skeleton, the bones of which mouldered into dust on exposure to the air.

BARTON-UPON-IRWELL, a township, in the parish of ECCLES, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Manchester; containing 10,865 inhabitants. The manufacture of calico and nankeen goods is carried on. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal crosses the Irwell at this place, by means of a stone aqueduct of three arches, which was the first constructed in England over a navigable river; and the Liverpool and Manchester railway also passes through the township. A church, dedicated to St. Catherine, a neat stone building, with an elegant octagonal spire rising to a height of about 100 feet from the ground, was consecrated on the 25th of October, 1843; the site is elevated, and commands extensive prospects. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Roman Catholics. The Eccles parochial school, in the township, is endowed with pew-rents, amounting to £8 per annum; and in another school, twenty children are partly paid for by the trustees under the will of Mr. James Bradshaw.

BARTON'S VILLAGE, a parochial district, in the parish of WHIPPINGHAM, liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E.) from Newport; containing about 700 inhabitants. The district has been recently taken out of the parish of Whippingham; and a church, after the Norman style, of which the first stone was laid by Lady Worsley Holmes, in April 1840, and which contains 400 sittings, has been recently completed at an expense of £1300. The living is a curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Whippingham. A parochial school has also been established.

BARTON-WESTCOTT (St. EDWARD), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Woodstock; containing 290 inhabitants. Good limestone used for building is obtained. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £179; patron and incumbent, Rev. Samuel Young Seagrave.

BARUGH, a township, in the parish of DARTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Barnsley; containing 1266 inhabitants. This township, which is partly the property of Thomas Wentworth Beaumont, Esq., includes the villages of Barugh, Gawber, and Higham, and comprises 1693a. 2r. 21p., of which 1044 acres are arable, about 600 pasture, and 48 woodland; the soil is generally fertile, and the population is employed in weaving, bleaching, in the collieries of Gawber, and in agriculture. Gawber Hall, an ancient mansion, is now a farm-house. The village of Barugh though small, is neatly built, and advantageously situated near the Barnsley canal, which affords facility of conveyance for the produce of the township. A small school is aided by a donation of £2. 2. per annum from Mr. Beaumont, and there is an endowed almshouse for two widows.

BARUGH-AMBO, a township, in the parish of KIRKBY-MISPERTON, PICKERING lythe and union, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Pickering; containing 304 inhabitants, of whom 186 are in Great, and 118 in Little Barugh. The township is situated on the east side of the small river Seven, and comprises by computation 2150 acres. The hamlets of Great and Little Barugh are distant from each other about a mile. Bricks and tiles are manufactured.

BARWELL (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of HINCKLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Hinckley; containing 1607 inhabitants. It is situated near the road from Leicester to Hinckley, and near the Hinckley and Coventry canal, and comprises 2345*a.* 2*r.* 9*p.*, in equal portions of arable and pasture; the population is partly employed in the manufacture of cotton-stockings, which is carried on to a great extent. The living is a rectory, with that of Elmsthorpe united, valued in the king's books at £20. 10. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and incumbent, Rev. George Mettam: the tithes of Barwell have been commuted for a rent-charge of £530, and there are more than 115 acres of glebe. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style. There are chapels of ease at Potters-Marston and Stapleton, in the parish; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school is endowed with about £20 per annum, the bequest of Gabriel Newton, in 1760.

BARWICK, a hamlet, in the parish of ABBOT'S ROOTHING, hundred of ONGAR, N. division of ESSEX; containing 126 inhabitants.

BARWICK (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, 11 miles (N.) from Rougham; containing 32 inhabitants. It comprises 1233*a.* 3*r.* 19*p.*, and contains Barwick House, the residence of D. Hoste, Esq. a neat brick mansion. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; patron and improPRIATOR, Mr. Hoste: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £132, and the vicarial for one of £100; and there are 45 acres of glebe.

BARWICK (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. by E.) from Yeovil; containing, with the hamlet of Stoford, 446 inhabitants. It is situated near the road between Yeovil and Dorchester, and comprises by measurement 784 acres. Flax-spinning is carried on to some extent; and sheep and cattle fairs are held on June 11th and Sept. 28th. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 7., and in the gift of John Newman, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £245, and there are 46 acres of glebe. A school is conducted on the national plan.

BARWICK-IN-ELMET (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Leeds; containing 2275 inhabitants, of whom 1836 are in Barwick township. This place was the seat of Edwin, King of Northumbria, and had its name from a castle of great magnitude and strength, founded by that monarch on an eminence called Hall-Tower Hill, and the walls of which inclosed an area of upwards of thirteen acres; and on the banks of Grimsdike rivulet, which flows on the west, was fought, in 655, the great battle between the Northumbrians and Mercians, in which Penda and many of his vassal princes were slain. The parish comprises by measurement 8325 acres, whereof 1440 are in the township of Roundhay, and the remainder are in Barwick township, which includes Barnbow, Kiddalwith-Potterton, and Morwick-with-Scholes: the substratum consists for a great part of coal and limestone. The Leeds and Selby railway passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the Duchy of Lancaster, with a net income of £1200: the church is a handsome structure, in the later English style. At Roundhay is a district church, built in 1822 by Stephen Nicholson, Esq.; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school, endowed with £14 per annum, is conducted at Barwick; and at Stanks is a school supported by the rector, the schoolroom of which, built in 1839, is licensed for public worship. Of the ancient castle, the only remains are a portion of the ground-works, and the mount of Hall-Tower Hill.

BASCHURCH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ELLESMERE, hundred of PIMHILL, N. division of SALOP, 8 miles (N. W. by N.) from Shrewsbury; containing 1491 inhabitants. It is intersected by the Ellesmere canal, and comprises 8213*a.* 1*r.* 10*p.*, exclusively of the chapelry of Little Ness, which by computation contains 1300 acres: red sandstone for building is quarried. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 16., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £203; improPRIATORS, certain landowners in the parish: the glebe comprises 40 acres. At Little Ness is a chapel of ease. In the adjoining village of Newtown are two schools, endowed by Eleanor Harris, in 1709: and at Baschurch 24 children are taught and clothed in a school supported principally by Rowland Hunt, Esq. Several small sums, bequeathed by divers benefactors, are annually distributed among the poor. Vestiges of a Roman camp may be traced in the neighbourhood.

BASFORD, a township, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Nantwich; containing 85 inhabitants. The Grand Junction railway passes through the township, and has a station on Basford Heath. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £64. 6., of which £58 are payable to the Bishop of Lichfield, and £6. 6. to the vicar of Wybunbury.

BASFORD (ST. LEODGARIUS), a parish, and the head of a union, in the N. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Nottingham; containing 8688 inhabitants. This parish, which is pleasantly situated in the vale of the river Leen, has a rich sandy soil, and is ornamented around the extensive village of Old Basford, with well-wooded scenery, thickly studded with modern mansions. Newly-rising and populous villages, the houses of which are chiefly built of brick and covered with blue slate, have lately sprung up in several parts, the principal of which are New Basford, Carrington, on the Mansfield road, Mapperley-place, and Sherwood. New Basford is situated at the southern extremity of the old village, and consists of several good streets which cross each other at right angles, and the principal occupants of which are persons employed in the manufacture of bobbin-net. The parish abounds with numerous springs of soft water, and has been selected as a place well adapted for the bleaching of cotton-hose and lace, and several large factories have been established for the manufacture of those articles. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 17. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £260; impropiator, Duke of Newcastle: the tithes were commuted for land in 1792. The church, which is situated at the southern extremity of the village, was repaired in 1819, when it received an addition of 212 free sittings. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Methodists of the New Connexion, and Baptists. The poor law union of Basford comprises 43 parishes, of which 38 are in the county of Nottingham, and 5 in the county of Derby, and contains a population of 59,634; the workhouse was formerly the house of industry for 32 parishes in the county, and is a neat modern stone building.

BASFORD, a township, in the parish of CHEDDLETON, union of CHEADLE, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Leek; containing 349 inhabitants.

BASHALL-EAVES, a township, in the parish of MITTON, union of CLITHEROE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Clitheroe; containing 279 inhabitants. This place, long distinguished as the residence of the Talbots, has been variously designated Beckshalgh, Batsalve, Bakesholf, and Bashall, but the first orthography is the true one, viz. Beckshalgh, or "the hill by the brooks," which agrees precisely with its situation: in Domesday book it is styled Baschelf. The township comprises about 3640 acres, and includes the hamlets of Exa and Pagefold. The river Ribble passes on the east.

BASILDON (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, 8 miles (N. W. by W.) from Reading; containing 812 inhabitants. This place appears to have been anciently a place of much greater importance than it is at present, being noticed in Domesday book as having two churches; and in the reign of Edward II. the inhabitants obtained the grant of a weekly market, and a fair on St. Barnabas'-day. The parish comprises 3083*a.* 6*p.*, of which 52 acres are roads and waste; the soil varies, but is principally flinty; the ground is hilly and beautifully romantic, and the vicinity abounds with picturesque scenery. The river Thames here separates the counties of Oxford and Berks, and is crossed by a viaduct of four arches on the line of the Great Western railway, erected at a cost of £25,000. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Ashampstead annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 4½.; patrons, alternately, Rev. William Sykes and the Trustees of the late Rev. C. Simeon; impropiator of Basildon, Rev. W. Sykes, and of Ashampstead, John Hopkins, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £770, and the vicarial for £215 per annum, and the glebe comprises 19 acres. The church contains some hatchments of the family of Fane, formerly proprietors of the estate; also some chaste monuments belonging to the family of Sir Francis Sykes, Bart. In excavating for the railway, a beautiful tessellated pavement was discovered a few inches below the surface of an elevated spot, not far from the Thames; and coins of Vespasian, in a high state of preservation, domestic utensils, and several skeletons, with a Roman sword lying near them, were also found in the immediate neighbourhood.

BASILDON, a chapelry, in the parish of LAINDON, union of BILLERICAY, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, 4½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Billericay; containing 157 inhabitants. This is a place of considerable antiquity, and contains three manors. The mansion of the manor of Barstable was about half a mile from the chapel of Basildon, and is said to have been surrounded by a town, which gave name to the hundred of Barstable; and this is rendered probable by the fact, that foundations of houses have been ploughed up in the vicinity, as well as considerable quantities of human bones. The record of Domesday informs us that the estate of Barstable had been taken from a Saxon freeman, and given to Odo, Bishop of Bayeux; in the reign of Edward III., it was generally holden, with the hundred, of the king. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a neat and substantial edifice, consisting of a nave and chancel, with an embattled tower surmounted by a spire. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £280, payable to the rector and vicar, and there is a glebe of 23 acres.

BASING (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Basingstoke; containing 1172 inhabitants. This place is remarkable for having been the scene of the defeat of King Ethelred I. by the Danes, in 871. At the period of the Norman survey, Hugh de Port held fifty-five lordships in the county, of which Basing was the head. The castle was rebuilt, in a sumptuous manner, by Sir William Paulet, Knt., a lineal descendant from Hugh de Port, created Marquess of Winchester by Edward VI., and one of the most polite noblemen of the age: here, in 1560, he entertained Queen Elizabeth, who again honoured his great-grandson William, the fourth marquess, with a visit, in 1601. John, the fifth marquess, distinguished himself for his gallant defence of his house at Basing, in the cause of Charles I., through a series of sieges that lasted for two years, at the end of which, in Oct. 1645, it was stormed and taken by Cromwell, who ordered it to be burned to the ground. The fortress and its outworks occupied an area of about fourteen acres and a half, through which the Basingstoke canal now passes; the remains consist principally of the north gateway and part of the outer wall. The river Loddon and the London and Southampton railway run through the parish, which comprises about 4000 acres, whereof the surface is undulated, and the soil chalk, clay, and gravel. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Basingstoke: the great tithes, payable to Magdalen College, Oxford, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £705, with a glebe of 19 acres, and those of the incumbent for a rent-charge of £475. The church is a large ancient structure, with a central tower, and contains the family vault of the Paulets, in which all the dukes of Bolton of that family have been interred. National schools have been established.

Corporation Seal.

BASINGSTOKE (St. MICHAEL), a municipal borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of BASINGSTOKE, and in the Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 18 miles (N. E.) from Winchester, and 45 (W. S. W.) from London, on the great western road; containing 4066 inhabitants. In the early part of the Saxon dynasty, Basingstoke was inferior to Old Basing; but at the time of the Conquest it had obtained the superiority, since, in the record of Domesday, it is described as a royal demesne, and as having a market. In 1261, Henry III., at the request of Walter de Merton, founded an hospital here for six poor priests, with preference to those from Merton College, Oxford. In the reign of Henry VIII. Sir William (afterwards Lord) Sandys, in conjunction with Fox, Bishop of Winchester, instituted a guild and erected a beautiful chapel here, which he dedicated to the Holy Ghost. This fraternity was dissolved in the time of Edward VI., and the revenue was vested in the crown; but in the reign of Mary it was re-established, and the income appropriated to the maintenance of a priest, for the celebration of divine service, and the instruction of young men and boys, belonging to the town. During the civil war it was suppressed by Cromwell, and the estates were seized by the parliament; but through the intercession of Dr. Morley, Bishop of Winchester, they were restored in 1670, and appropriated to their former use. Of the chapel, and the buildings connected with it, there are some remains on an eminence at the south-western side of the town, consisting of the south and east walls, and an hexagonal tower at the north-west angle.

The TOWN is pleasantly situated in a fertile and well-cultivated district, near the source of the small river Loddon, and consists of several streets, containing neat and well-built houses; it is paved under an act of parliament granted in 1815, and amply supplied with water and lighted with gas. Races formerly took place in Sept., but they have been latterly discontinued; a spacious reading-room has lately been erected. The trade is principally in corn and malt, which is carried on extensively, and is greatly facilitated by the situation of the town, at the junction of five principal roads, and by the Basingstoke canal, which communicates with the river Wey, near its confluence with the Thames, and was completed in 1796, at an expense of £180,000. The London and Southampton railway, also, has a principal intermediate station here. The chief market is on Wednesday, and has lately been made a pitched market for corn; there is also a minor market on Saturday; and fairs take place on Easter-Tuesday, the Wednesday next after Whitsuntide, and Oct. 11th, which last is also a statute fair: the one formerly held on Basingstoke downs, for cheese and cattle, is now held near the cattle-market, and is entirely a cattle fair. The GOVERNMENT, by charter of incorporation granted by James I., and confirmed by Charles II., was vested in a mayor, seven aldermen, and seven burgeses, assisted by the usual officers, who were superseded in 1836 by a mayor, four aldermen, and 12 councillors, appointed under the Municipal Corporations' Act: four justices, besides the mayor, act for the town, the county magistrates having concurrent jurisdiction. The latter hold a petty-session here for the division, on the first and third Wednesdays in every month; and a court leet is held under the lord of the manor, the jurisdiction of which extends over nineteen tythings. Basingstoke sent members to parliament from the 23rd of Edward I. to the 4th of Edward II., when, it is supposed, the privilege ceased at the solicitation of the inhabitants. The old town-hall has been taken down, and a new and very handsome edifice erected in its stead, containing, besides a good basement, a spacious market for corn, a justice-room of ample dimensions, waiting-room, &c., on the ground floor. The ball-room is of an elegant and chaste character and of good proportions, being 60 feet long and 30 wide, with a convenient orchestra, council-room, ante-room, &c., approached by a light stone staircase. The expense of this elegant structure, which was erected from a design by Mr. Lewis Wyatt, was defrayed partly from the funds of the corporation, and partly by subscription. Behind it is a market-place, for meat, fish, vegetables, &c.

The parish of Basingstoke is co-extensive with the borough, and contains about 4000 acres, of which the surface consists of hill and dale, and the soil is good light earth, suited to the production of barley. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, with Basing and Upper Nately annexed, valued in the king's books at £30. 5½.; net income, £572; patrons and appropriators, President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £783. 7., and the vicarial for a rent-charge of £494. 13.; there are 17 acres of glebe belonging to the college, and 1¾ acre of vicarial glebe. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, in the later English style, with a low embattled tower, and contains a small parochial library, the gift of Sir George Wheler. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, and Independents. The free grammar school, called "the Holy Ghost Chapel School," and originally founded in the reign of Henry VIII. by Sir William Sandys and Richard Fox, Bishop of Winchester, in connexion with the guild of the Holy Ghost, was re-established, after the dissolution of the fraternity in the time of Edward VI. by Queen Mary, and has now a revenue exceeding £200, arising from 105 acres of land. Dr. Joseph Warton, a poet and refined critic, and his brother Thomas, the poet-laureate, received the early part of their education here, under their father, Thomas Warton, B.D., some time Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford, and subsequently master of the school. The Blue-coat school, in which ten boys are clothed, maintained, and educated, was founded and endowed in 1646, by Mr. Richard Aldworth, and with it is united a national school. Another national school, for boys, was established by Dr. Sheppard, late vicar of Basingstoke; and one for girls by his widow, who erected a schoolroom at an expense of £500. Almshouses for eight aged men or women, each of whom receives £6. 18. per annum, were founded and endowed by Sir James Deane, Knt., in 1607; an almshouse on the road to Reading, lately removed from Chapel, is endowed for three widows; and three almshouses, for aged widows of the Independent Congregation, were founded and endowed by Mr. Joseph Page, in 1808. The poor law union of Basingstoke comprises 37 parishes and places, of which 36 are in the county of Southampton, and 1 in the county of Berks, and contains a population of 16,636. On an eminence in the vicinity is an ancient encampment of an elliptical form, 1100 yards in circumference, called Aubrey Camp. John de Basingstoke, a learned Greek scholar, and the intimate friend of Matthew Paris; Sir James Lancaster, an eminent navigator, who, in the reign of Elizabeth, explored the Arctic Sea, and was a great benefactor of the town; and Thomas Warton, above-mentioned, were natives of the place.

BASINGHORPE (THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Corby; containing, with the hamlet of Westby, 137 inhabitants. It comprises 1790 acres, the property of the Earl of Dysart. The living is a vicarage, with Westby, valued in the king's books at £8. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Earl: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £190, and the improper for one of £230; and there are 4 acres of glebe.

BASLOW, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 4 miles (N. E.) from Bakewell; containing 962 inhabitants. This place is situated on the river Derwent, and on the road from Bakewell to Chesterfield. The inhabitants are partly employed in the cotton manufacture, and there are some quarries of ordinary building-stone. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £115; patron, Duke of Devonshire; impropriator, Duke of Rutland: the tithes (those on wool and lamb excepted) were commuted for land in 1822. The chapel, which is chiefly in the later English style, has a tower and low spire at the western end of the north aisle. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans; and about half a mile from the village is Stantonford school, endowed with about £15 per annum.

BASSALEG (ST. BASIL), a parish, in the union and division of NEWPORT, hundred of WENTLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Newport; containing, with the hamlets of Duffryn, Graig, and Rogerstone, 1731 inhabitants. The parish is partly bounded by the river Severn, and comprises about 6500 acres, of which 2633 are arable, 3146 meadow and pasture, and 722 woodland; it is intersected by the river Ebn and the Monmouthshire canal, and the Rumney railway joins the Sirhowey railway here, at a place called Pye Corner. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 6½., and in the gift of the Bishop of Llandaff: the glebe consists of about 1 acre; and the tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £864. 18., of which £509. 19. belong to the Bishop, £327. 19. to the incumbent, and £27 to an impropriator. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a free school, endowed with £20 per annum, is conducted on the national plan. On the brow of a hill, a mile from the village, is a circular entrenchment, called Craeg-y-Saesson, supposed to have been a Saxon camp, a mile from which is one named Pen-y-Park Newydd, probably a fortress of the Britons. A priory was founded here in 1101, which became a cell to the abbey of Glastonbury.

BASSENTHWAITE (ST. BRIDGET), a parish, in the union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Keswick; containing 536 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 7000 acres, much of which is wet heavy land; it includes a portion of the lofty mountain Skiddaw, situated at its south-eastern extremity, and is intersected by the river Derwent. The beautiful lake of Bassenthwaite, or Broadwater, covers about 1500 acres of ground, and the parish is enriched throughout with scenery of a sublime character. There is a mine of antimony in the neighbourhood, and lead-ore has also been found. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £123; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Carlisle: the tithes were commuted for land in 1770. In addition to the parochial church, there is a chapel of ease.

BASSETT-HOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER; containing 30 inhabitants. It is situated near the road from Leicester to Hinckley, about midway between the two towns.

BASSINGBOURNE (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of ROYSTON, hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Royston; containing, with the hamlet of Kneesworth, 1774 inhabitants. A fair is held on the festival of St. Peter and St. Paul. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 10.; net income, £224; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Westminster: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1801. A room adjoining the north aisle has been appropriated to the reception of a parochial library, founded in 1717, by Edward Nightingale. A school, conducted on the Lancastrian plan, was commenced in 1833.

BASSINGHAM (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, Lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Newark, and 9 miles (S. W. by S.) from Lincoln; containing 792 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Witham, comprises 3015a. 28p., of which 1430 acres are arable, about 1494 meadow and pasture, and the remainder roads and waste; the soil is partly clay and partly gravel, and uniformly flat. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 16. 8.; net income, £483; patrons, President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford: the glebe comprises 157 acres. The church is a handsome ancient structure, of which the tower has been rebuilt within the last fifty years. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans, and one for Primitive Methodists; and a school is partly supported by the rector, and partly from the rent of two lanes, called "Meadow lanes."

BASSINGTON, a township, in the parish of EG-LINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Alnwick; containing 11 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the north side of the Aln, near its junction with the Eglingham burn, derives its name from bassin, an old word signifying rushy, and ton, a place of abode; and the surrounding fields, notwithstanding the progress of cultivation, still very much abound with the common rush. The improper tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £16. 7. 6., and the vicarial for one of 8s. 8d.

BASTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Market-Deeping; containing, with Thetford, 765 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 1. 3., with a net income of £231; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the impropriation belongs to Brown's Hospital at Stamford. The tithes were commuted for an allotment of land, in the year 1801.

BASTWICK, a hamlet, in the parish of REPPS, EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of WEST FLEGG, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Acle. Here was anciently a chapel, which has long been in ruins.

BASWICH (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, partly in the union of STAFFORD, and partly in that of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Stafford; consisting of the chapelry of Acton-Trussell with Bednall, and the townships of Baswich and Brompton; and containing 1438 inhabitants, of whom 626 are in the township of Baswich. This parish, which is situated on the road from Stafford to Lichfield, and is skirted by a branch of the river Trent, comprises by measurement 1644 acres of fertile land, and there are some quarries of good building-stone. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal passes through the parish, and the Grand Junction railway within two miles. The living is a vicarage not in charge; net income, £238; patrons, alternately, J. N. Lane and R. Inge, Esqrs.; appropriator, Prebendary of Whittington and Baswich in the Cathedral of Lichfield. A church has just been erected at Walton. Twenty-two children are taught in a school at the expense of three ladies of the parish; and in another, twenty, at that of Mrs. Levett. A national school is supported by subscription.

BATCOMBE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CERNE, hundred of YETMINSTER, Cerne division of DORSET, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Cerne Abbas; containing 171 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1149 acres, of which 172 are arable, 539 pasture, 28 orchard, 27 woodland, and 383 common; the soil is a deep black mould. The living is a discharged rectory, united in 1772 to that of Froome-Vauchurch, and valued in the king's books at £9. 9. $9\frac{1}{2}$.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £130, and there are 45 acres of glebe. The church is a handsome structure in the early English style, with a finely carved roof of oak, and a square tower; on the north side is a private aisle for sepulture, anciently belonging to the family of Minterne.

BATCOMBE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, and forming a detached portion of the hundred of WHITESONE, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Bruton; containing 780 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 3170 acres, of which 670 are arable, and Upton-Noble contains about 640 acres. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Upton-Noble annexed, valued in the king's books at £26. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £690; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Browne. The church at Upton-Noble is an ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BATCOMBE, a tything, in the ancient parish of NYLAND, union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of GLASTON-TWELVE-HIDES, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 11 inhabitants.

BATH, a city, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, 12 miles (E. by S.) from Bristol, 19 (N. N. E.) from Wells, and 107 (W.) from London, on the direct road to Bristol; containing, with the whole of the parish of Walcot, 38,314 inhabitants, and with those of Bathwick and Widcombe and Lyncombe, 53,206. The name of this city is obviously derived from its medicinal springs, the efficacy of which has been celebrated from remote antiquity. It is stated to have been a British town prior to the Roman invasion, and to have been named Caer Badon, or "the place of baths," from an accidental discovery of the medicinal properties of its waters by Bladud, son of Lud Hudibras, King of Britain, who, according to the fabulous histories of those times, having been banished from court on account of leprosy, came to this place, and being cured of that disease by using the waters, built a palace here after his accession to the throne, and encouraged the resort of persons affected with cutaneous disorders. And so favourably was this account received even till the eighteenth century, that his statue was erected in the king's bath, with an inscription to that effect, in 1699. The researches of modern historians, however, have induced them to reject the tradition as entirely destitute of support, and to ascribe the foundation of the city to the ROMANS, in the reign of Claudius, who, having ascertained the healing quality of its waters, constructed, on a skilful and extensive plan, their balnea, consisting of frigidaria, tepidaria, olothesia, sudatoria, &c., for the better enjoyment of the luxury of the bath, and gave to the station the name Aqua Solis. They erected a temple to Minerva, with many votive altars, and numerous other buildings, the remains of which, discovered at various periods, strikingly indicate their splendour and magnificence. They also surrounded the city with walls twenty feet in height, and of prodigious thickness, including an area in the form of an irregular pentagon, of which the larger diameter was 1200 feet, and the smaller 1140. In the centre were the pratorium, the baths, and the temple; and in the walls were four gates terminating the principal streets, from which they constructed roads leading to the neighbouring stations, Verlucio, Ischalis, Abona, &c. After the departure of the Romans from Britain, Bath, then called Caer Palladur, "the city of the waters of Pallas," remained in the possession of the Britons for more than a century, being disturbed only by one or two unsuccessful attacks of the Saxon chieftains, Aëlla and Cerdic, who were bravely repulsed by the renowned King Arthur.

In the year 577 the SAXONS, having nearly overrun the kingdom, fell with irresistible fury on the western part of England; and having gained the memorable battle of Deorham, about eight miles distant, Bath fell a prey to their ravages, and was abandoned to indiscriminate plunder. Its temple was destroyed, its altars were overthrown, and its baths and other splendid monuments of Roman grandeur reduced to a heap of ruins. How long it continued in this desolate state is uncertain, but probably the Saxons, after having retained uninterrupted possession of it for a time, took means to effect its restoration: they rebuilt the walls and other fortifications upon the original foundations, with the old materials, cementing them with a liquid substance, which time has rendered harder than stone; and it is likely that they also directed their attention to the baths, which they soon restored; for the Saxon names of the city were Hat Bathur, "hot baths," and Ace mannes ceaster, "city of invalids." After their conversion to Christianity, a nunnery was erected here, in 676, by King Osric, which was destroyed during the wars of the heptarchy; and on its site a college of Secular canons was founded, in 775, by Offa, King of Mercia, who had taken Bath from the King of Wessex, and annexed it to his own dominions: he also rebuilt the conventual church of St. Peter, in which Edgar was crowned king of England, by Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury, in 973, and the anniversary of his coronation continued to be celebrated in the time of Camden, in commemoration of the numerous privileges which he granted to the citizens on that occasion. Edgar converted the college into a Benedictine monastery, which, with the church, was again demolished by the Danes.

At the time of the NORMAN survey, Bath contained 178 burgesses, of whom 64 held under the king, 90 under different feudatories of the crown, and 24 under the Abbot of St. Peter's. In the first year of the reign of William Rufus, Geoffrey, Bishop of Coutances, and Robert de Mowbray, who had risen in support of the claim of Robert, Duke of Normandy, to the throne of England, obtained possession of the city by assault, and reduced the greater part of it to ashes. From this calamity, however, it soon recovered, under the favour of John de Villula, who, on his promotion to the see of Wells, about the year 1090, purchased the city from Henry I. for 500 marks, and built a new and spacious church here for that see, removing the episcopal chair to this place, where, during the festival of Easter in 1107, he had the honour of entertaining Henry I. In the turbulent reign of Stephen, Bath suffered greatly from its proximity to Bristol, then the head-quarters of the Empress Matilda, and was alternately occupied by the adherents of both parties. It continued in the possession of its bishops until 1193, when Bishop Savaric transferred it to Richard I. in exchange for the abbey of Glastonbury; and this monarch made it a free borough, and invested it with many privileges, in consequence of which it began to participate in the commerce of the country, and to increase in wealth and importance. The manufacture of woollen cloth, which was commenced in England in the year 1330, was established here under the auspices of the monks, on which account the shuttle was introduced into the arms of the monastery. During the civil war in the reign of CHARLES I., Bath was fortified for the king; but the Marquess of Hertford, who commanded the royal forces, having retired into Wales, it fell into the hands of the parliamentarians, and became the head-quarters of the army raised by Waller in that part of the country, to retrieve the loss which his party had sustained in the battle of Stratton. In 1643, the battle of Lansdown, in the immediate neighbourhood, took place, in which the royalists, notwithstanding many local disadvantages, drove the parliamentary forces from the field, and compelled them to retire into the city; in commemoration of which, a monument was erected on the spot in 1720. After this battle the royalists regained possession of the city, which they held till it was finally surrendered to the parliament in 1645. On the restoration of Charles II., the citizens presented a congratulatory address through the celebrated William Prynne, then one of their representatives; and in the autumn of 1663, the king paid a visit to Bath, on which occasion his chief physician having recommended the internal use of the waters, the adoption of this practice became general. After the suppression of Monmouth's rebellion, four persons, who had been condemned by Judge Jeffreys, were executed here.

The CITY continued within the limits prescribed to it by the Romans till the year 1720, and its suburbs consisted merely of a few scattered houses: celebrated only for the medicinal properties of its hot springs, it was for several years visited merely by invalids. The perseverance of Mr. John Wood, an enterprising architect, who was encouraged by the proprietors of land in the vicinity, about the year 1728, first led to its improvement; and the excellent quarries of freestone in the neighbourhood facilitated the execution of an enterprise which has embellished it with splendid edifices, and raised it to the highest rank as a place of fashionable resort. The town is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Avon, along which its buildings extend more than two miles, decorating the acclivities, and crowning the summits, of the fine range of hills by which it is environed. Over that part of the Avon which skirts the eastern side of the town are two stone bridges, one of ancient, the other of modern, erection: a handsome iron bridge has recently been constructed, connecting Walcot with Bathwick, and affording a direct entrance from the London road into that improving part of the town; and, more recently, a similar structure, called the North Parade bridge, has been erected, connecting the parades with Bathwick and Widcombe. Three smaller bridges on the suspension principle, one near Grosvenor-buildings, the other two on the Tiverton side of the city, also add to the public convenience. Among the earliest of the modern improvements is Queen's-square, the houses in which are decorated with columns and pilasters of the Corinthian order; in the centre is an obelisk 70 feet high, erected in 1738 by Beau Nash, to commemorate the visit of the then Prince and Princess of Wales, who occupied a house in the square. The Circus is a noble range of uniform edifices, and the Royal Crescent, also, is characterised by a simple grandeur of elevation, and has, in front, an extensive lawn, which slopes gradually until bounded by a noble avenue leading to and forming part of the Royal Victoria Park, which comprises walks of the most attractive character, and a spacious carriage drive. Above the Crescent are St. James's-square, Cavendish-place and crescent, Somerset-place and Lansdown-crescent, rising successively above each other, and forming so many stations from which may be seen the central parts of this elegant city, encircled as in an amphitheatre of gracefully swelling hills. In the lower part of the town considerable improvements are in progress; the houses which formerly obscured the abbey have been removed, and that ancient and noble edifice has undergone a thorough repair, under the care and from the funds of the old corporation. Through Orangegrove, in the centre of which is an obelisk commemorating the restoration of the Prince of Orange to health by drinking the waters, a carriage road has been formed, and other alterations are in progress, contributing much to the convenience of the public. In the new town, on the eastern bank of the Avon, is Laura-place, a neat range in the form of a lozenge, from which proceeds Great Pulteney-street, an extended series of mansions, at the extremity of which are Sydney-gardens, occupying a spacious area surrounded by buildings forming Sydney-place, not inferior in beauty and elegance to the most splendid part of the city. The city has been lighted with gas since 1819. The hills which surround it abound with springs, within 50 feet of their summits, and no forcing apparatus is required for supplying any part of the town.

All the BATHS belong to the corporation, except some small ones, formerly the property of the Duke of Kingston. In 1811, fears were entertained of the escape of the hot springs, and considerable sums were laid out in puddling the ground through which they rise; and more recently, an individual, in boring for a well, reached one of the hot springs, and the aperture was not closed without much expense and litigation. No inconvenience, however, is at present felt from a deficiency of water in any of the baths. In the 29th of George III. a statute, called the Bath Improvement Act, was obtained, principally for the improvement of the baths and pump-room, under which commissioners were appointed, with power to levy tolls and raise money on mortgage of them; and the corporation, in addition to the payment of an annual sum towards the reduction of the debt thus incurred, disbursed £7163, and gave up buildings and other property valued at £9000, towards the improvements, which consisted principally in rebuilding the pump-room, and in the removal of houses, for the purpose of securing the springs, and rendering the approaches to the baths and pump-room more commodious: the property improved under this act was finally vested in the corporation.

The grand pump-room, the centre of attraction during the fashionable season, was erected in 1797, and is a handsome building, eighty-five feet in length, forty-eight in width, and thirty-four in height. The interior is lighted by a double range of windows, and decorated with pillars of the Corinthian order, supporting a rich entablature and a lofty coved ceiling: at the west end is an orchestra, and at the eastern a well-executed marble statue of the celebrated Beau Nash, under whose superintendance as master of the ceremonies, the elegant amusements of the place were for many years regulated. The principal entrance is through a portico of four lofty columns of the Corinthian order, supporting a triangular pediment, under the tympanum of which is inscribed "APIETON MEN YΑΩP." The king's bath contains 364 tons of water, and is conveniently fitted up with seats and recesses, having also a handsome colonnade of the Doric order, with the statue of Bladyd, the traditionary patron of the waters. The queen's bath adjoining it, has likewise suitable apartments. The cross bath, so called from a cross erected in the centre of it, and the hot bath, so named from its superior degree of heat, the mean temperature being 117° of Fahrenheit, have the convenience of dry and vapour baths; and a small pump-room has been erected. The waters contain carbonic acid and nitrogen gases, sulphate and muriate of soda, sulphate and carbonate of lime, and silicious earth, with a minute portion of oxyde of iron, and are efficacious in gout, rheumatism, palsy, biliary obstruction, and cutaneous disorders. The corporation, with great liberality and taste, have also erected several private baths for the accommodation of invalids, and others; besides a swimming-bath of very large dimensions, probably unrivalled for beauty and commodiousness. A Literary and Philosophical Institution was established in 1820: the buildings occupying the site of the lower assembly-rooms, which were burnt down in 1820, are of the Doric order. The Mechanics' Institution in Queen's-square, erected in 1839, is an appropriate structure in the Grecian style. The Bath and West of England Society for the encouragement of Agriculture, the Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, by the distribution of premiums and medals, was instituted in 1777, at the suggestion of Mr. Edmund Rack; and there are many excellent circulating libraries, the terms of which are reasonable. A handsome building for the Savings' bank has been erected in Charlotte-street, at an expense of £2500.

Among the chief SOURCES OF AMUSEMENT are the subscription assemblies and concerts, which are held during the season, under the superintendance of a master of the ceremonies, whose office, being equally honourable and lucrative, has been warmly contested by the successive candidates. The rooms are superbly elegant; the ball-room is 105 feet long, 43 wide, and 22 high, and the card-rooms, library, and rooms for refreshment, are furnished in a style of great splendour. The city assemblies, for those who are not eligible as subscribers to the upper rooms are held, by permission of the corporation, in the banquet-room of the guildhall. The theatre, a well-adapted edifice, in the centre of the city, among the buildings of which it is distinguished by the loftiness of its elevation, is handsomely fitted up and decorated; the ceiling is divided into compartments embellished with exquisite paintings by Cassali, which were removed from Fonthill Abbey. The building was completed in 1805, and is regularly open during the season; it has been long and deservedly eulogized for the excellence of the performances, and many actors who have attained the highest degree of eminence on the London stage have made their debüt here. Sydney-gardens are laid out with great taste and beauty, and afford an agreeable promenade at all times, and during the summer attract numerous assemblages to public entertainments and exhibitions of fireworks, upon which occasions they are brilliantly illuminated. The Subscription Club-house, in York-buildings, containing a spacious suite of rooms, is established upon the plan of most of the superior club-houses in London; the annual subscription is six guineas and a half. There are subscription billiard-rooms in Milsom-street, to which those only are admissible who are eligible to the assembly-rooms; also two extensive riding-schools, in one of which is a spacious covered ride for invalids in unfavourable weather. Lansdown and Claverton down afford delightful equestrian excursions, displaying much variety, and abounding in interesting scenery. The races take place on Lansdown, the week after Ascot races; and there is a spring meeting in April. On this down, Mr. Beckford, the late proprietor of Fonthill Abbey, erected a tower of considerable height and beauty, commanding a most extensive prospect of the surrounding country.

The town, by means of the river, which is navigable to Bristol, and the Kennet and Avon canal, by which it maintains an inland communication with London and the intermediate places, is favourably situated for TRADE; but the only branches of manufacture carried on are those of woollen cloth, Bath coating, and kerseymere, which are made in the vicinity. The Great Western railway, from London to Bath and Bristol, was opened throughout on the 30th of June, 1841; most of the heaviest works of the line occur in the neighbourhood of this city. The Bath viaduct extends 800 feet in length, and 30 in breadth, and rests on 65 segmental arches, of about 20 feet span, constructed of Bath stone, and presenting a uniformity of design with the other buildings of the city; and connected with this work is an oblique wooden bridge, formed at an angle of 28°, supported on stone piers, and crossing the river Avon, with openings of 99 feet span, by which the railway is carried 36 feet above the level of the river. The Bath station, which covers a space of 13,500 square feet, is elevated 30 feet above the contiguous ground, and is approached by an ascending carriage-way from Pierpoint-street. The markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday, in an area behind the guildhall, the wings of which form the principal entrances: the market-house is extensive and commodious. The corn and cattle markets are in Walcot-street, and were built about twenty-eight years since, by the corporation, at an expense of £6000; the coal-market is in the Sawclose. The fairs are on Feb. 14th and July 10th.

Corporation Seal.

The city enjoyed, under Edgar and other Saxon monarchs, many valuable MUNICIPAL privileges, which were afterwards confirmed by Richard I. and other monarchs, subsequently recognised and enlarged by a charter of Queen Elizabeth, and finally by George III., who made such modifications in the charter as the increasing importance of the place required. By the Act 5th and 6th of William IV. cap. 76, the corporation consists of a mayor, fourteen aldermen, and forty-two councillors, constituting the council of the borough, which is divided into seven wards; the magistrates are twelve in number, and the police force comprises a principal, two superintendents, twelve inspectors, and 132 constables. Since the passing of the above act, quarter-sessions, having been applied for by the council, and granted, are held before the recorder; and as ords of the manor, the corporation hold a court leet, at which the town-clerk presides. A court of requests, also, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £10, is held every Wednesday, by commissioners appointed under an act of the 45th of George III., the jurisdiction of which extends over the city and liberty, the parish of Walcot, the hundreds of Bath-Forum and Wellow, and the liberties of Hampton and Claverton, and Easton with Amrill. The corporation possess a large revenue applicable to civic purposes, and also hold some property, called the Bath Common estate, lying to the west of the city, in trust for all the resident citizens, who participate equally in its profits; it comprises about 100 acres, let as a grazing farm, and is a parcel of the ancient manor or grange of Barton-Regis. The elective franchise was conferred in the reign of Edward I., since which time the city has continued to return two members to parliament; the borough consists of 3534 acres; the mayor is returning officer. The Guildhall is an elegant structure of free-stone; the front is decorated with a portico of four lofty Corinthian columns, rising from a rustic basement, and supporting a triangular pediment, with a rich entablature and cornice, in the tympanum of which are the city arms, and on the apex a finely sculptured figure of Justice; above the cornice is a handsome balustrade, with urns. The building comprises on the ground floor a vestibule, sessions-hall, offices for the courts of record and requests, and for the chamberlain and town-clerk; and in the upper story, a magnificent suite of apartments formerly devoted to civic entertainments. In the mayor's room is a beautiful head of Minerva, or Apollo, of gilt brass, which was discovered in 1727, at the depth of sixteen feet below the surface of the ground, in Stall-street, and is thought to be part of a mutilated statue, the remainder of which is buried near the same spot. The prison is a spacious building, occupying an area of 60 feet in front, and 80 feet in depth, with a large courtyard, and cells in which delinquents are confined previously to their committal to the county gaol.

Jointly with Wells, Bath is the head of a DIOCESE, comprising the county of Somerset; the income of the bishop is £5000. The Abbey church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a venerable and finely-proportioned cruciform structure, in the later English style, of which it forms one of the purest specimens: from the intersection an irregularly quadrilateral tower rises to the height of 162 feet. It occupies the site, and is built partly with the materials, of the conventual church of the monastery, founded by Osric, which had subsisted, under different forms of government, for more than 800 years. This church having become dilapidated, Bishop Oliver King (as it is said, admonished in a dream, of which a memorial is sculptured on the west front,) began to rebuild it in 1495; but dying before it was completed, and the citizens refusing to purchase it from the commissioners of Henry VIII., the walls were left roofless, till Dr. James Montague, bishop of the diocese, aided by a liberal contribution from the nobility and gentry resident in the county, completed it, in the year 1606: the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £695. 6. 1¼. It has now, as before noticed, undergone a thorough repair and embellishment at the expense of the corporation; but not in accordance with the simplicity of its original style. By charter of Elizabeth, the several parishes of St. Peter and St. Paul, (or the Abbey parish,) St. James, and St. Michael, were consolidated into one rectory, to which the vicarage of Widcombe and Lyncombe was annexed; it is valued in the king's books at £20. 17. 11.; net income, £750; patrons, Trustees of the late Rev. Charles Simeon. St. James' church, rebuilt in 1768, is an elegant structure, in the later English style: St. Michael's, rebuilt in 1835, is of early English character, with a lofty and well-proportioned spire of great beauty. The parochial church of Walcot, a spacious edifice within the liberty of the city, was rebuilt in 1780: the living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 19. 9½.; net income, £886; patron, Rev. S. H. Widdrington. Christchurch was erected by subscription in 1798, for the especial accommodation of the poor, and is a fine building, in the later style of English architecture: the living is a perpetual curacy, net income, £210; patron, Rector of Walcot. Trinity church, in St. James'-street, is of recent erection: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £243; patron, Rector of Walcot. At Lambridge, also, in the parish of Walcot, a church has been built, called St. Saviour's; and Portland chapel, in the same parish, late a Roman Catholic chapel, has been purchased by the Rev. S. H. Widdrington, who, under the sanction of the Bishop, has converted it into a Protestant chapel, annexed to the rectory. St. Mark's church, in the parish of Widcombe and Lyncombe, is a modern edifice: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £169; patron, Rector of Bath. St. Mary Magdalene's, an ancient edifice overspread with ivy, near Beachen cliff, is a parochial chapel and perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Crown. St. Mary's chapel, in Queen-square, built by subscription in 1735, is a handsome Grecian edifice, of which the exterior is of the Doric, and the interior of the Ionic, order. The Octagon chapel, in Milsom-street, was erected in 1767, and is much admired for the elegance of its style. Margaret chapel, in Margaret-buildings, is a spacious and handsome structure, of early English architecture. The chapel in Lansdown-place, erected in 1794, and dedicated to All Saints, is a good specimen of the decorated style, and has twelve fine windows, in which are painted the heads of the Apostles, and an east window, ornamented with a painting of the Last Supper. Kensington chapel, a neat modern building near the London road, was erected by subscription, in 1795; and Laura chapel, an elegant and well-arranged edifice in Henrietta-street, in 1796. There are three places of worship for Wesleyans, two for Baptists, and one each for the Society of Friends, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, Moravians, and Unitarians; also two Roman Catholic chapels.

The Free Grammar school was founded by Edward VI. in 1552, and endowed with lands belonging to the dissolved religious houses: the management is vested in the trustees of the public charities of the city, who appoint the master, and allow him a salary of £60 per annum, and an excellent house. The rectory of Charlcombe was annexed to the mastership by the late Rev. William Robins, for the instruction of ten additional boys, sons of freemen, or inhabitants of the city, in classical and commercial learning. The Blue-coat charity school, for 50 boys and 50 girls, was established in 1711, by Robert Nelson, Esq., and is chiefly supported by subscription: an apprentice-fee of £6 is given with each boy, and one of £5 with each girl, on leaving the school. There are also two other free schools for girls; besides a national school at Weymouth House; one on the Lancasterian plan, called the Bath and Bath-Forum school, in Ladymead; several infants' and adults' schools; and a Roman Catholic free school. The Catholics have also a noble seminary at Prior Park, near the city, which property was purchased a few years since by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Baines, Roman Catholic Bishop of Siga. The Bath Hospital, open to the poor from every part of the kingdom, whose maladies require the use of the Bath waters, is maintained by voluntary contributions, and is under the direction of a president and governors, incorporated by act of parliament, who have a common seal, and are empowered to fill up vacancies in their own body. The Bath United Hospital combines the objects of the late city dispensary and casualty infirmary, and a spacious building has been erected for it near the cross bath; this and the West Walcot dispensary, and an infirmary in Pierrepoint-street, for curing diseases of the eye, are also supported by subscription. There are three societies for the relief of women during childbirth; an asylum for the support of young females, and for instructing them in household work; a house of protection for orphans and destitute females; an establishment for aged, and an asylum for young females; a penitentiary; and charitable institutions of various kinds, adapted to the wants of the distressed poor, and to the mitigation of almost every species of calamity, all of which are liberally supported and judiciously regulated. St. John's Hospital, for the maintenance of six aged men and six women, was founded in the reign of Henry II. by Reginald Fitz-Jocelyn, who endowed it with lands then producing £22 per annum; attached is a neat chapel, in which the master, who must be a clergyman of the Established Church, officiates daily. Partis' College, a capacious range of building, occupying three sides of a quadrangle, on the upper road to Bristol, and comprising a chapel and separate dwellings for 30 decayed gentlewomen, ten of whom must be either the widows or daughters of clergymen, was founded and endowed by Mrs. Partis, in fulfilment of the intention of her husband, Fletcher Partis, Esq., who died before it was carried into effect. The poor law union of Bath comprises 24 parishes and places, and contains a population of 69,232.

THE REMAINS OF ANTIQUITY, found at different times in the city, are of British, Roman, and Saxon origin, and clearly demonstrate the fact of its having been severally occupied by those people. Among the British antiquities are celts, or stone hatchets, hand millstones, boars' teeth, and amber beads, discovered in their burial-places; also a small silver coin, having on the obverse a rude head in profile, and on the reverse a star, or wheel. Among the Roman were found, in 1753, a pedestal with a Latin inscription; in 1755, parts of the Roman baths, and several of the large tubulated bricks, which conveyed the heat to the sudatoria; and in 1790 a votive altar, fragments of fluted Corinthian columns, basso-relievos, and other relics of the temple of Minerva, besides numerous coins of the emperors Nero, Trajan, Adrian, Antonine, Gallienus, Claudius Gothicus, Maxentius, and Constantine, with some of Carausius, who assumed the Roman purple in Britain. On digging the foundation of the new bridge over the Avon to Walcot, the remains of an old ford were observable, and a leaden vessel was found, containing some hundreds of denarii, and several small brass coins from the time of the Emperor Valens to that of Eugenius: for the reception of these a room was appropriated by the corporation, in which they are deposited, with a due regard to classification. The Saxon remains, exclusively of coins, coffins, &c., consist of what is still visible in the city walls, erected by them on the Roman foundation, in which are inserted fragments of the ruined temple, pieces of sculpture, and parts of triumphal arches, intermixed with the original materials. In a stone coffin was also discovered a small copper box, in the form of a rouleau, divided into two parts, the upper part being covered by a slide, probably intended for perfume, and the lower part filled with small silver coins resembling the early Saxon scatta. John Hales, called the "ever memorable," was a native of the city, and received the rudiments of his education in the grammar school. Benjamin Robins, a celebrated mathematician, and the writer of the account of Commodore Anson's voyage round the world, was also born here, in 1707. And closely connected with Bath for several years, though not a native, was Ralph Allen, Esq., of Prior Park, an elegant mansion, one mile south of the city, which was in his time the resort of several of the wits and literati of the age: this gentleman, supposed to be the original of Fielding's Allworthy, in his novel of Tom Jones, died in 1764, and was interred at Claverton, where a handsome monument has been erected to his memory. Bath gives the title of Marquess to the family of Thynne, of Longleat House.

BATHAMPTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred or liberty of HAMPTON and CLAVERTON, though locally in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Bath; containing 355 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Bath-Ford, and valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 1.; impropriator of Bathampton, Robert Fisher, Esq.

BATHEALTON, or BADIALTON (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, hundred of MILVERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S.) from Wiveliscombe; containing 135 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 860 acres, of which the soil is fertile, and the lands are in fine cultivation; stone of good quality for building is quarried to a considerable extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. Edward Webber: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £195, and the glebe comprises 45 acres, with a house. The church was erected in 1572. A parochial school is supported by T. H. King, Esq., and the rector. A mile westward is a circular intrenchment, called Castles, within the area of which some Roman coins have been discovered.

BATH-EASTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. E.) from Bath; containing, with a portion of the liberty of Easton and Amrill, 2191 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1600 acres; the village, divided into Upper and Lower, is situated near the Great Western railway, and on the London road, in a pleasant valley, bounded by lofty hills on the west, north, and east, and by the Lower

Avon on the south. On the western side is Salisbury hill, on the summit of which are vestiges of an intrenchment, nearly circular, supposed to have been constructed by the Saxons, when they besieged Bath, in 577: some antiquaries are of opinion that this hill was anciently crowned by a temple, erected by Bladud, in honour of Apollo. The rough building-stone called oolite is found here. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of St. Catherine annexed, valued in the king's books at £9. 6. 5., and in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £510, of which £210 are payable to the Dean and Canons, and £300 to the incumbent, who has also a glebe of 3 acres. The church is in the later English style, with a square tower 100 feet high, and was enlarged in 1834 by the addition of an aisle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and in 1818 a national school was built, by the late learned and estimable vicar, the Rev. J. J. Conybeare, which has been enlarged, partly at the expense of the present incumbent, the Rev. Spencer Madan. The Roman Fosseway passes through the parish. At a villa here, resided Sir John Miller, whose lady established a literary festival for the recitation of prize poems, which were published, under the title of "Poetical Amusements:" she died in 1781.

BATH-FORD (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bath; containing 1099 inhabitants. The village is situated in a picturesque neighbourhood, on the banks of the Avon, which was anciently crossed by a ford; and the Great Western railway passes through the parish. The manufacture of paper affords employment to more than forty persons. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Bathampton consolidated, valued in the king's books at £8. 18.; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Bristol; impropriator of Bath-Ford, John Wiltshire, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £114, and the vicarial for one of £160; there are 12 acres of glebe. Here are vestiges of a Roman camp, and a tumulus; and, in 1691, a Roman hypocaust, with a Mosaic pavement, altar, urns containing coins, and other ancient relics, were discovered.

BATHLEY, a township, in the parish of NORTH MUSKHAM, union of SOUTHWELL, N. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Newark; containing 252 inhabitants.

BATHWICK, a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 4973 inhabitants. This elegant suburb to the city of Bath, from which it is separated by the river Avon, at the beginning of the last century consisted only of a few scattered houses unpleasantly situated on an extensive marsh, frequently inundated by the river. From the discovery here of a large portion of those interesting relics which are deposited in the museum at Bath, this place appears to have formed, at a remote period of antiquity, no inconsiderable part of that city, and to have retained its importance during the successive occupation of Bath by the Britons, Romans, and Saxons. Within the last ten years, it has greatly increased in extent and population; and now contains some of the most elegant ranges of building which adorn that city; it is connected with Bath by handsome bridges over the Avon. The Kennet and Avon canal, in its course through Sydney-gardens, has been made available to the introduction of a pleasing variety into the grounds; and two elegant iron bridges, which have been erected over it, form an interesting feature in the scenery of the place. There is a manufactory for broad cloth in the parish; and, in addition to the Kennet and Avon canal, the Somersetshire coal canal passes through it. The living comprises a consolidated rectory and vicarage, with the rectory of Wolley annexed; the rectory valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and the vicarage, at £8. 3. 4.; patron, Duke of Cleveland: the tithes of Bathwick have been commuted for a rent-charge of £105, and there are five acres of glebe. The church, which was erected in 1820, is a handsome and spacious structure, in the decorated English style, with a beautiful altar-piece, painted and presented by Mr. B. Barker.

BATLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DEWSBURY, partly in the Lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, and partly in the wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, containing 14,278 inhabitants, of whom 7076 are in the township of Batley, 2 miles (N.) from Dewsbury. This place is of great antiquity, its name signifying in Saxon the Field of Batt or Batta; it is noticed in Domesday survey as having a church, which was subsequently granted in the reign of Henry I. to the Canons of St. Oswald in Nostal priory. The manor was for eighteen generations held by the Copley family, and subsequently became the property of the Earl of Wilton, its present lord, and chief proprietor of the town. The parish comprises 6390 acres, of which 2140 are in the township of Batley, 2590 in that of Morley, 1120 in that of Gildersome, and 540 in that of Churwell; the two former are in the Agbrigg division, and the two latter in that of Morley. The soil is fertile, and the substratum abounds with coal and freestone of good quality; the population is partly agricultural, but mostly employed in the manufacture of woollen-cloths, blankets, pilot-cloth, carpets, coverlets, and flushings. The village is pleasantly situated on the Dewsbury and Gomersal road, in a valley watered by a small rivulet, and is very extensive. A court of requests for the recovery of small debts was established in 1839, when a building was erected for the purpose in the Elizabethan style; the court is held monthly, and takes cognizance of debts of the amount of £7. 10. Batley is also within the honour of Pontefract, in which are held courts for the recovery of debts not exceeding £15.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 11. 8.; net income, £200; patrons, alternately, the Earls of Cardigan and Wilton. The tithes for the township of Batley were commuted for land in 1803. The church, which was rebuilt in the reign of Henry VI., is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square machicolated tower: on the north of the chancel is the chapel belonging to Howley Hall, the seat of Lord Saville in the reigns of James I. and Charles I., to whom he was councillor of state, in which is a long brass plate inscription to his memory. A district church was erected at Gildersome by subscription about 80 years ago, and another at Morley about 10 years since, by a grant from the Church Building Society; both are in the early English style. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Methodists of the New Connexion, and Wesleyans. A free grammar school was founded by the Rev. William Lee, who, in 1612, endowed it with a house and garden for the master, and with lands now producing an income of £133. 13., of which the master has a salary of £120 for instructing 60 scholars: the school-house was rebuilt in 1818, with funds derived from the sale of coal under the lands. A school for girls was founded by subscription in 1787, and is supported partly by the interest of £200 out on security, which is paid to a mistress, who has also a house and garden. Both schools are under the superintendence of 12 trustees, of whom the vicar for the time being is one. Joshua Scofield, in 1806, bequeathed the interest of £60 for the instruction of children, and £40 for the support of a Sunday school.

BATLEY CARR, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish and union of DEWSBURY, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 1 mile (N.) from Dewsbury; containing 2144 inhabitants. This place, which is situated in a pleasant valley on the Bradford road, forms a suburb of Dewsbury, part of which township is included within its district, and is inhabited chiefly by persons employed in the manufacture of woollen-cloths, pilot-coatings, and druggets, for which Joshua Ellis, Esq., has an extensive establishment. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1841, at an expense of £2000, raised by subscription, aided by grants of £300 by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, £350 by the Ripon Diocesan Society, and £300 by the Incorporated Society, and by a contribution of £200 by Joshua Ellis, Esq., of Highfield; Mr. Ellis also subscribed £500 towards its endowment, and Mrs. Ellis presented a rich and massive service of communion plate; the church, which was consecrated on the 5th of Oct. 1841, is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles, and contains 630 sittings, of which 296 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150; patron, Vicar of Dewsbury.

BATSFORD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON-ON-STOUR, Upper division of the hundred of KIPTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (N. W.) from Moreton-in-the-Marsh; containing 79 inhabitants, and comprising 922a. 1r. 27p. The railroad from Stratford-on-Avon to Moreton terminates here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 3. 9., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £255, and the glebe consists of 96 acres. The church was rebuilt and enlarged in 1822, at the expense of Lord Redesdale, who has a handsome seat here, and whose relative, Lord Chancellor Freeman, was buried in the church in 1710; where is a handsome monument to his memory.

BATTERSBY, a township, in the parish of INGLEBY-GREENHOW, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 5¼ miles (E. by S) from Stokesley; containing 93 inhabitants. This was an ancient demesne of the crown, and according to the Domesday survey was called Badresbi; it was afterwards the property of the Balliols, and at an early period came to the Percys, with whom it continued till the time of Elizabeth, after which the estate passed to the Eures and the family of Foulis. The township lies near the road between Whitby and Stokesley, through Kildale, and forms part of the district named Cleveland.

BATTERSEA (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WANDSWORTH and CLAPHAM, partly in the E., but chiefly in the W., division of the hundred of BRIXTON, E. division of SURREY, 3 miles (S.) from London; containing, with the hamlet of Penge (which see) 6887 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book called Patricesey or Peters-ey, was so named from having anciently belonged to the abbey of St. Peter, at Westminster: it was formerly of much greater extent than it is at present. The family of St. John had a venerable mansion here, of which there are still some remains; and it was the favourite resort of Pope, who, when visiting his friend Lord Bolingbroke, usually selected as his study, in which he is said to have composed some of his celebrated works, a parlour wainscoted with cedar, overlooking the Thames. The parish comprises 2108*a. 2r. 39p.*, and the village is pleasantly situated on the southern bank of the river, over which there is a wooden bridge, connecting it with Chelsea. The neighbourhood has long been celebrated for the production of vegetables for the London market, especially asparagus, which was first cultivated here. There are several manufactories, including chymical-works, large cement-works, a brewery, malt-house, lime and whitening manufactories, a silk factory, a pottery for crucibles, and Brunel's machinery for sawing veneers; and along the banks of the Thames are some coal-wharfs; the manufacture of kid gloves is also carried on very extensively. The London and Southampton railway has its commencement at Nine-Elms, in the parish, the offices at which station, fronting the road, exhibit a neat elevation and arcade, nearly commensurate with the principal entrance in the centre, and contain all the necessary apartments. Immediately behind is the passengers' shed, extending nearly 300 feet, with four lines of way, and resting on two lines of iron columns twelve feet high; other lines of way lead to the carriage, horse, and locomotive departments, which were unfortunately injured by an accidental fire recently, to the extent of £40,000. The county magistrates hold a meeting at Wandsworth, an adjoining parish, where also a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £5, is held, the jurisdiction of which includes this place. The lord of the manor likewise holds a court leet at Wandsworth, at which a head-borough and constables for Battersea are appointed.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 15. 2½.; net income, £982; patron and proprietor, Earl Spencer. The church, which was handsomely rebuilt of brick, in 1777, has a tower surmounted by a small spire, and, standing on the margin of the river, forms an interesting object viewed from the water: the window over the altar is decorated with portraits of Henry VII., his grandmother, Margaret Beauchamp, and Queen Elizabeth, in stained glass; and the interior contains some interesting sepulchral monuments, among which are, one by Roubilliac, to the memory of Viscount Bolingbroke and his lady, and one to the memory of Edward Winter, an officer in the service of the East India Company, on which is recorded an account of his having, singly and unarmed, killed a tiger, and on foot defeated sixty Moors on horseback. Collins, author of the Peerage and Baronetage of England; his grandson, David Collins, Lieutenant-Governor of New South Wales, and author of a History of the English Settlement there; and William Curtis, a distinguished botanical writer, were buried here. A chapel of ease in Battersea Fields, a neat building in the later style of English architecture, was erected in 1829, partly by a subscription of £2277 among the parishioners, partly by a rate amounting to £1327, and partly by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners; the minister is appointed by the vicar, and derives his stipend from a subscription fund of £1450, and from the pew-rents. In the hamlet of Penge, a small chapel capable of accommodating about 200 persons, was built by subscription, in 1838; and there are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. A school for the instruction of twenty boys, to which a national school has been united, was founded and endowed by Sir Walter St. John, in 1700, and has an endowment of £85 per annum, arising from 30 acres of land, and an annuity of £7. 16., bequeathed a few years since. There are also, in Battersea Fields, a girls' and an infants' school, supported by subscription. Sir Walter and Lady St. John left £300, directing the interest to be applied in apprenticing boys or girls; and there are several charitable bequests, the principal of which is one by John Parvin, who left £2000 four per cent. bank annuities. The workhouse for the union is pleasantly situated on St. John's Hill, in the parish, and was built in 1838, at an expense of about £16,000.

BATTISFORD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Needham-Market; containing 520 inhabitants, and comprising 1544*a. 3r. 2p.* The framework of the late Royal Exchange, London, erected by Sir Thomas Gresham, was made here, Sir Thomas residing in the adjoining parish of Kingshall, and having considerable property in this. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £8. 0. 7½.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Edward Paske, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400. The church is chiefly in the decorated English style, and consists of a nave and chancel; the interior was thoroughly repaired in 1841. Here was anciently a commandery of the Knights Hospitallers, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £53. 10.

BATTLE, or BATEL (St. Mary), a market-town, parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of BATTLE, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, 7 miles (N. W.) from Hastings, 63 (E. by N.) from Chichester, and 56 (S. E.) from London; containing 2999 inhabitants. This place, previously called Epiton, derives its present name from the memorable battle fought here, October 14th, 1066, between Harold, King of England, and William, Duke of Normandy. Though generally called the battle of Hastings, it took place at this town, where, in fulfilment of a vow, the Conqueror founded a magnificent abbey for monks of the Benedictine order, in which were preserved, until its suppression, the sword and royal robe worn by him on the day of his coronation, and the celebrated roll on which the names of the warriors who accompanied him to England were inscribed: he conferred on it the privilege of sanctuary, raised it to the dignity of a mitred abbey, and invested its abbots with the power of saving a criminal from execution, if accidentally passing at the time: at the dissolution its revenue was £987. 0. 10½. The parish is situated in a beautiful valley, bounded on the west, south, and south-east by wood-crowned eminences; and the town, which is built on rising ground, consists chiefly of one irregular line of houses forming three several streets, well lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. The manufacture of fine gunpowder, established at a very early period, and for which the town has attained the highest celebrity, is carried on to a very great extent; and there is a large tannery. The market, granted by Henry I. on Thursday, has fallen into disuse, but a corn market is held on the second Tuesday in every month. The fairs are on Whit-Monday and Nov. 22nd, and two following days; and a large sheep fair is held on the 6th of Sept.; a great number of horned-cattle are sent from this part of the country to the London market. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty-sessions here for the district on the second Tuesday in the month; but this being a franchise, the inhabitants are exempt from serving on juries at the assizes and sessions for the county. A coroner and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. Here is a house of correction, appropriated for the reception of persons apprehended in the Battle district of the county, and of others summarily convicted by the magistrates, whose terms of imprisonment do not exceed one month.

The LIVING is a vicarage, and an exempt deanery, still retaining the exercise of its jurisdiction, and valued in the king's books at £24. 13. 4.; net income, £396; patron and impropiator, Sir Godfrey V. Webster, Bart. The church is a spacious structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early and later English styles, with a square embattled tower, and contains some ancient brasses, and a fine altar-tomb to Sir Henry Browne. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. In 1791, Mrs. Elizabeth Langton bequeathed £1500 for the instruction of fifteen boys and fifteen girls, and £200 for purchasing books, from the interest on which sums a master and mistress are allowed £60 per annum; and a national school for girls, and an infants' school, for which appropriate buildings were erected in 1840, are supported by subscription. The poor law union of Battle comprises fourteen parishes and places, under the care of eighteen guardians, and contains a population of 12,034 inhabitants. Of the ancient abbey there are still considerable remains; the gateway, a beautiful specimen of the decorated English style, is in entire preservation, and many parts of the conventual buildings have been retained in the present magnificent mansion of Battle Abbey. Southward of the grounds is a place called Tellman Hill, where William is reported to have mustered his army the evening before the battle; and to the north is another, named Callback Hill, from which it is said he recalled his troops from pursuing the vanquished enemy. The Rev. Edmond Cartwright, D.D., a celebrated writer, but better known as the inventor of the power-loom, was buried here.

BATTLEBURN, a hamlet, in the parish of KIRKBURN, union of DRIFFIELD, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (W. S. W.) from Great Driffeld; containing 14 inhabitants. It comprises, with Eastburn, one large farm, the property of Lord Hotham and Alexander Bosville, Esq.

BATTLEFIELD (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, liberties of SHREWSBURY, N.

division of SALOP, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Shrewsbury; containing 64 inhabitants. This place derives its name from a sanguinary battle fought here on the 22nd of July, 1403, between Henry IV. and the rebels under Percy, Earl of Northumberland, in which nearly 2300 gentlemen (among whom was Lord Henry Percy, the valiant Hotspur), and about 600 private soldiers, were slain. The king, in grateful commemoration of the victory, immediately founded on the spot a college for Secular clerks, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £54. 10. 4. The parish comprises by computation 700 acres, and is situated on the road from Shrewsbury to Whitchurch and Drayton. A fair for horned-cattle and sheep is held on the 2nd of August. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £240, derived from land; it is in the patronage of Mrs. Corbet, to whom also the impropriation belongs. The church, built upon the spot on which the battle of Shrewsbury was fought, suffered much in the time of the commonwealth, but would, if restored, be a beautiful specimen of the perpendicular style. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

BATTLEDEN (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WOBURN, hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Woburn, on the road from Dunstable to Fenny-Stratford; containing 179 inhabitants. The manor was, in 1706, purchased by Allen Bathurst, Esq., a distinguished political character during the reigns of Anne and George I., of whom the former created him a baron, of Battlesden, which was for some years his country seat, and the resort of the most celebrated wits of the time, until it passed to another family. The living is a rectory, with that of Potsgrove annexed, valued in the king's books at £12. 9. 7.; net income, £306; patron, Sir G. P. Turner, Bart.

BATTRAMSLEY, a tything, in the parish of BOLDRE, union of LYMINGTON, E. division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, Lymington and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON: containing 302 inhabitants.

BATTYEFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of MIRFIELD, union of DEWSBURY, Lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, W. riding of YORK. This place is situated on the river Calder, near the western extremity of the parish, and on the road between Dewsbury and Elland; the surface of the land is undulated, the soil good, producing earlier crops than the neighbouring districts, and the scenery rich and beautiful. There are several small coal-mines, which afford employment to a portion of the population, but the inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the woollen manufacture, and in making cards for the machinery in the cotton and woollen mills, which latter branch of industry is carried on to a considerable extent. The Calder and Hebble navigation, and the Manchester and Leeds railway pass in the vicinity. Field-Head House, the handsome seat of Frank Wormald, Esq., Terrace Cottage, that of Samuel Wood Haigh, Esq., and West House, the residence of Mrs. Jonas Brook, are situated here. A district church was erected in 1840, on a site given by Benjamin Wilson, Esq., of Bank House, at an expense of £1778, of which £700 were granted by the Incorporated Society, and the remainder subscribed by the landowners and parishioners: it is a handsome structure in the early English style, with a square tower, and contains 700 sittings, of which 350 are free, and was consecrated and dedicated to Christ, 28th of October, 1840: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar, and was augmented, in 1841, with £114 by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. A national school was built in 1841, on a site also given by Mr. Wilson, at a cost of £540, raised by subscription, aided by a grant of £175 from the Education Committee, and £85 from the National Society; it is capable of receiving 400 children, and is also used as a Sunday school.

BAUGHURST, a parish, in the union of KINGSCLERE, forming a detached portion of the hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Basingstoke; containing 528 inhabitants. It comprises 1675*a.* 15*p.*, and is intersected by a turnpike-road from Basingstoke to Aldermaston, Newbury, &c. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 1., and in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £339. 8., and there are 2 acres of glebe.

BAULDOXFEE, a tything, in the parish of ELING, union of NEW FOREST, hundred of REDBRIDGE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 931 inhabitants.

BAULKING, a chapelry, in the parish of UFFINGTON, union of FARRINGDON, hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Great Farringdon; containing 193 inhabitants, and comprising 1442*a.* 1*r.* 13*p.* The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas; the vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £165, and the impropriate for one of £150.

BAUMBER, or BAMBURGH (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of HORNCASTLE, N. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. W.) from Horncastle; containing 371 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book called Badburgh, is supposed to have taken its name from the river Bane, on which it is situated; it stands on the road between Horncastle and Lincoln, and contains by computation nearly 4000 acres. The manor and parish formerly belonged to the Earls of Lincoln, who became Dukes of Newcastle, and the remains of whose ancient mansion may still be seen. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £37; patron, Duke of Newcastle.

BAUNTON (St. CHRISTOPHER), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1½ mile (N. by E.) from Cirencester; containing 187 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Miss Masters, to whom also the impropriation belongs; net income, £67. The Roman Fosseway passes along the eastern border of the parish.

BAVANT, NORTON.—See NORTON-BAVANT.

BAVERSTOCK (St. EDITH), a parish, in the union of WILTON, hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, 8 miles (W.) from Salisbury; containing, with the hamlet of Hurdcott, 194 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated near the road from Salisbury to Hindon, and on the river Nadder, comprises 1168 acres by measurement; the soil is fertile, and chalk, clay, and green sandstone are found in abundance, the last containing numerous fossils. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. 2½., and in the gift of Exeter College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £295, and the glebe consists of 52 acres. The church was repewed a few years since, and otherwise underwent considerable repair; and on the occasion of re-opening it, in July 1834, the foundation stone of a parochial school, adjoining it, was laid by the Bishop of Bath and Wells. There is a spring called Merrywell, the water of which is efficacious in curing diseases of the eye.

BAVINGTON, GREAT, a township, in the parish of KIRK-WHELPINGTON, union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 14 miles (N. N. E.) from Hexham; containing 69 inhabitants. This place has been possessed by various families, including the Umfravilles, Strothers, Swinburnes, Shaftos, Ogles, and Harles; and is now the property of several persons. The lofty hills of basalt, which form a marked and peculiar feature of this township, are part of a vast bed, which may be traced from Cumberland, by Glenwhelt and the Roman wall, to Little Swinburn, where it divides into two branches: the western sides of the hills are very precipitous; and the soil, except of that portion called the Plashetts, is for the principal part dry, rich, and mostly in grass; on the whinstone hills it is thin, and apt to burn in drougthy summers. A lead-mine was opened here some years since, but the speculation failed. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £25. 19. 7., and the vicarial for £35. 10. 7. There is a place of worship for Scottish Presbyterians.

BAVINGTON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of THOCKINGTON, union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12 miles (N. N. E.) from Hexham; containing 91 inhabitants. This place is on the road from Alnwick to Hexham, and has been the seat of the Shaftos since the reign of Edward I. Bavington Hall, the residence of the present representative of that family, is a handsome mansion surrounded with fine plantations. At a school, established in 1829, fifteen children are paid for by Mr. Shafto. The Erringburn has its source in the township.

BAWBURGH, or BABUR (St. MARY AND St. WALSTAN), a parish, in the union and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. W.) from Norwich; containing 404 inhabitants. This place is distinguished as the birthplace of St. Walstan; he lived at Taverham, where he died in 1016, and his remains were removed hither, and enshrined in a chapel in the parish church. The resort of pilgrims to visit his shrine greatly enriched the vicar and officiating priests, who, in 1309, rebuilt the church; but the chapel in which the remains of the saint were deposited was demolished in the reign of Henry VIII., though the walls are still a little above the surface of the ground. The road from Norwich to Walton, and the river Yare run through the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 17. 6.; net income, £100; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £227, and there are 93 acres of appropriate glebe. The church is in the early English and perpendicular styles; the nave is separated from the chancel by the remains of a beautifully carved screen. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by J. J. Gurney, Esq.

BAWDESWELL (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of EYNSFORD, E. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Reepham; containing 582 inhabitants. The road from Norwich to Fakenham runs through the village. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £208; patron, E. Lombe, Esq. The church is in the later English style, with a square brick tower, built at the west end of the chancel in 1740. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. John Leeds, in 1730, bequeathed a house and 16 acres of land, now let for about £20 per annum, to provide instruction for 12 boys of Bawdeswell, and 8 of Foxley; and at the inclosure in 1808, two acres of land were allotted as gravel, and 35 acres for fuel to the poor.

BAWDRIP (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of NORTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Bridgwater; containing 425 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 19. 7., and in the gift of Edward Page, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £340, and the glebe consists of $38\frac{1}{2}$ acres.

BAWDSEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of WILFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Woodbridge; containing 468 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the coast of the North Sea; and at the mouth of the river Deben is a haven, which affords convenient anchorage for small vessels. In the 11th of Edward I. permission was obtained for a market to be held on Friday, but it has long been discontinued; there is, however, a fair on September 8th. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £170; impropiators, Executors of the late John Wilson Shephard, Esq. The old church, which had a large and lofty steeple, useful as a sea-mark, was accidentally burnt to the ground on November 5th, 1841. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BAWSEY (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Lynn; containing 28 inhabitants. It comprises 1034*a. 1r. 3p.*, of which 342 acres are arable, 262 pasture and meadow, 417 heath and warren, and 11 woodland. From the heath great quantities of gray sand is obtained, and sent to the glass-houses in various parts of the kingdom. The living is a discharged sinecure rectory, valued in the king's books at £4, and in the gift of A. Hammond, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £90, and there is about an acre of glebe; but the church is in ruins.

BAWTRY, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of BLYTH, union of DONCASTER, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 45 miles (S. by E.) from York, and $153\frac{1}{2}$ (N. by W.) from London, on the great north road; containing 1083 inhabitants, of whom 741 are in the east, and 342 in the west district. This town is situated on the river Idle, which separates the counties of York and Nottingham, and near the Roman road leading from Agelocum, Littleborough, to Danum, Doncaster. It comprises three streets, the principal of which is very spacious, and contains many handsome and well-built houses; it is partly paved, and lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water from springs and from the river, over which a neat substantial stone bridge was erected in 1811, at an expense of £4000. The trade, which has greatly declined since the construction of the Chesterfield canal, and the erection of a bridge over the Trent at Gainsborough, arises chiefly from the inland navigation, and consists in supplying London, Hull, and other places with corn, oak-timber, and stone, of which last, that called the Roche Abbey stone is much esteemed by statuary and architects. The river is navigable for craft of from twelve to twenty-four tons' burthen, by which means the town is furnished with coal, grocery, &c. The market is on Thursday; and fairs for horses, horned-cattle, and sheep are held on the Thursday in Whitsun-week, and Old Martinmas-day. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. Bawtry Hall, formerly the residence of the Dowager Lady Galway, is situated at the southern extremity of the town, in the midst of extensive and beautiful pleasure-grounds. The chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, was erected in the reign of Henry II., and repaired in 1686, and the tower, which is strengthened by buttresses, and crowned with pinnacles, was added in 1712; it was repewed and repaired in 1839, by subscription, at a cost of £700, of which £50 were contributed by Trinity College, Cambridge, and £50 by the Church Building Society. Magdalen chapel at Bawtry hospital has been rebuilt at a cost of £600 by H. M. Greaves, Esq., by whom also the officiating clergyman is paid. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and a small schoolroom has been built by subscription on the waste land adjoining the town, and is called the "Bawtry free school." At Scrooby, one mile distant, was a palace belonging to the Archbishops of York, in which Cardinal Wolsey resided, and afterwards Archbishop Sandys, whose daughter is interred in the chancel of the chapel; the remains have been converted into a farm-house.

BAXBY, a hamlet, in the township of THORNTON, parish of COXWOLD, union of EASINGWOLD, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK; containing 28 inhabitants.

BAXTERLEY, a parish, in the union of ATHERSTONE, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Atherstone; containing 228 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in a sequestered part of the county, near the Derby Junction railway, comprises by computation 825 acres of fertile land, of which about 25 are common and wood: limestone is found, but not worked. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the alternate patronage of the Crown and Dr. Johnstone: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £182, and the glebe consists of 46 acres. The church is a very ancient structure, of which the tower was rebuilt in 1607 by Hugo Glover, brother to Mrs. Lewis who was burnt at Coventry for her adherence to the Protestant faith, during the Popish persecution in the reign of Mary, and who was interred in the church. A school is supported by the rector.

BAYDON (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of RAMSBURY, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and N. divisions of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile

(N. E.) from Aldbourn; containing 335 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Cirencester to Newbury, comprises by measurement 2350 acres of fertile land; the village stands on an eminence on the high road, commanding extensive and finely varied prospects over the surrounding country. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £110; patron, and impropiator, A. Meyrick, Esq.: at the inclosure, in 1779, land was apportioned in lieu of tithes. The church is an ancient and very handsome edifice, containing some Norman details. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Baptists. The celebrated Sir Isaac Newton had a residence, with a small estate, in the parish.

BAYFIELD (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Holt; containing 21 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated in the deep and well-wooded vale of the Glaven, and comprises 780a. 1r. 26p., of which 682 acres are arable, 76 pasture and meadow, and 41 woodland; the surface is undulated, and the views from the higher grounds are very fine. The living is a discharged sinecure rectory, valued in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of Mrs. J. E. Best: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £168. 6. The church, which is mantled with ivy, has long been in ruins.

BAYFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Hertford; containing 357 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 1612 acres of land, of which the soil is clay. The living is annexed to the rectory of Essendon: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £282. The church is a neat brick edifice, rebuilt by subscription in 1804, and containing an ancient octangular font ornamented with quatrefoils and roses. A national school was built in 1833.

BAYFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of STOKERTRISTER, union of WINCANTON, hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Wincanton; containing 222 inhabitants.

BAYHAM, a hamlet, in the parish of FRANT, union of TICEHURST, hundred of ROTHERFIELD, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Lamberhurst. Here are some remains of a monastery of Præmonstratensian canons, which is described in the article on FRANT. Bayham gives the title of Viscount to the Marquess of Camden, who has a seat here.

BAYLHAM (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Needham-Market; containing 275 inhabitants. The river Orwell and the Stow-Market, and Ipswich canal bound this parish, which comprises 1332a. 3r. 19p., and is intersected by the road from Colchester to Stow-Market. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 4. 9½., and in the gift of the Rev. J. C. Aldrich: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £300, and the glebe consists of 39 acres. A school is principally supported by the rector and the Misses Rodwell.

BAYNTON, a tything, in the parish of EDINGTON, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, Whorwelsdown and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 33 inhabitants.

BAYSWATER, a hamlet, in the parish of PAD-DINGTON, Holborn division of the hundred of OSSUL-

STONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 1 mile from Cumberland-gate, London, on the Uxbridge road. Bayswater, which may now be considered as a suburb to the metropolis, consists of several ranges of neat houses and of some handsome detached residences; it has been much increased by ranges of new buildings branching off from the main street towards the north and south, and is desirable as a place of residence from its vicinity to Kensington gardens, which are situated on the south. It is lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from a reservoir originally constructed for the use of Kensington palace, and subsequently granted to the proprietors of Chelsea water-works, on the condition that the supply of the palace should be regularly continued. Near the extremity of the hamlet is the principal entrance to the Hippodrome, recently established as a race-course by a proprietary holding 5000 shares of £10 each; the grounds comprise within the inclosure nearly 150 acres, called Victoria park, commanding from many points extensive and pleasing views of the surrounding country. Notting Hill is a continuous range of handsome buildings, between which and Shepherd's Bush Norland-crescent has been erected. Sir John Hill, M.D., a voluminous writer, resided here many years, and cultivated the plants from which he prepared his medicines, on the spot now occupied by the proprietor of the Bayswater tea-gardens. An episcopal chapel was built by Mr. Edward Orme, in 1818.

BAYTON (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of CLEOBURY-MORTIMER, Lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Cleobury-Mortimer; containing 468 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the north and west by a portion of Shropshire, from which it is partly divided by the river Rea, comprises 1748a. 1r. 11p., and is intersected by the road from Worcester to Cleobury-Mortimer. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Mamble, and valued in the king's books at £5. 0. 2½.: the tithes were some years since commuted for 180 acres of land. The church, a plain edifice, has been recently enlarged.

BAYWORTH, a hamlet, in the parish of SUNNINGWELL, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS; containing 75 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel of ease to the rectory of Sunningwell, but it has gone to decay.

BEACHAMPTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Buckingham; containing 248 inhabitants. It contains about 1383 acres subject to tithes; the land is in general clayey and stoney, and is intersected by the river Ouse, and situated near the Grand Junction canal, from which there is a branch canal to Buckingham. Lace-making is carried on. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 16. 5½., and in the gift of Caius College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £345, and the glebe comprises 27 acres. William Elmer founded a free grammar school in 1652, and endowed it with freehold lands, now producing £60 per annum, and he also bequeathed, in addition to other benefactions, £5 per annum for apprenticing a poor boy. The remains of the fine old mansion of Lord Latimer, whose widow was married to Henry VIII., are still to be seen, with the royal arms in different parts.

BEACHAMWELL.—See BEECHAMWELL.

BEACHFIELD, a township, in the parish of WORTHEN, hundred of CHIRBURY, S. division of SALOP; containing 35 inhabitants.

BEACHLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of TIDENHAM, hundred of WESTBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Chepstow; containing 224 inhabitants. This place is situated on a small peninsula at the mouth of the Wye, formed by the junction of that river with the Severn, over which latter is the Old Passage ferry, lately improved by the erection of stone piers and an establishment of steam-packets; it is remarkable for its early vegetation, the salubrity of its air, and the beauty of its surrounding scenery. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £16; patron, Vicar of Tidenham; impropiator C. S. Stokes, Esq. The chapel, which is in the early English style, was consecrated on Sept. 10th, 1833, and is dedicated to St. John; it was made a district church in 1842. A neat national school was erected in 1840, at the expense of Robert Jenkins, Esq.

BEACONSFIELD (ALL SAINTS), a market-town and parish, in the union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 36 miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and $23\frac{1}{4}$ (W. by N.) from London; containing 1732 inhabitants. This place comprises 4548a. 11p., of which 3568 acres are arable and meadow land, 778 woodland, and 172 roads and waste. The town, which occupies 29 acres, is situated on a hill, and is supposed to have derived its name from a beacon formerly erected there; it consists of four streets, which meet in a convenient market-place in the centre, and the houses are in general well built, of handsome appearance, and amply supplied with water. The environs, in which there are some handsome seats, abound with beautiful scenery, and the air is remarkably salubrious. The market is on Thursday; and the fairs, chiefly for horses, horned-cattle, and sheep, are held on Feb. 13th, and Holy-Thursday. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 2. 8½; net income, £545; patrons, President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is an ancient building of stone and flint, with a tower, and contains a mural tablet to the memory of Edmund Burke, who died at his seat called Gregories, in the parish, and was interred here: in the church-yard is a monument of white marble, to the memory of Edmund Waller, the poet, who died Oct. 21st, 1687. There is a meeting-house for Independents; and a school is partly supported by subscription.

BEADLAM, a township, in the parish and union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 3 miles (E.) from Helmsley; containing 158 inhabitants. This place, which adjoins the village of Nawton, in Kirkdale parish, is situated on the road between Helmsley and Kirkby-Moorside; a portion of the land is moor and woodland. Lord Feversham is chief owner of the soil, and lord of the manor.

BEADNELL, a chapelry, in the parish of BAMBROUGH, union of BELFORD, N. division of BAMBROUGH ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Belford; containing 323 inhabitants.

The surface of the land is rather level, and of the soil, which is generally good, two-thirds are arable, and the rest luxuriant pasture; coal is abundant, and there are quarries of excellent limestone. The village is pleasantly situated on the sea-shore, having a small harbour; and several vessels are employed in conveying lobsters, cured herrings, and other fish to London, and lime is exported in large quantities to Scotland. Races were annually held until 1826, when they were removed to Belford. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Perpetual Curate of Bambrough, with a net income of £79: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £40. 14. The church, built in 1792, is a neat stone structure with a spire, and contains 250 sittings, of which some are free. A school is conducted on the national plan, and the trustees of Lord Crewe allow the master £10 per annum, and the use of a house and garden. Here is a small castle, which formerly belonged to the family of Forster; and close to the sea are remains of a chapel, supposed to have been a cell to Coldingham monastery.

BEAFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of TORRINGTON, hundred of SHEBBEAR, Black Torrington and Shebbear, and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (S. E. by E.) from Great Torrington; containing 713 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 15. 7½, and in the gift of Thomas May, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £244, and there are 64 acres of glebe. The church was damaged by lightning in 1799, but has been repaired and newly pewed. At Wooley Park are some remains of a Danish encampment.

BEAGHALL, or BEAL, a township, in the parish of KELLINGTON, Lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (E.) from Ferry-Bridge; containing 568 inhabitants. This place is situated on the south side of the river Aire, and on the road from Ferry-Bridge to Snaith, and comprises by computation 1570 acres, including the farm of Kellingley, of which the greater portion is the property of Sir Samuel Crompton, Bart. A bridge crosses the river at the village, and leads to Birkin. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £393, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, and the vicarial, for one of £101. 11. 3.; and there is a glebe of $2\frac{3}{4}$ acres. A school, rebuilt in 1833, is endowed with £5 per annum; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A curious Roman swivel, which was four feet under ground, has been dug up here.

BEAKSBOURNE (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of BRIDGE, and within the cinque-port liberty of HASTINGS (of which it is a member), though locally in the hundred of Bridge and Petham, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Canterbury; containing 332 inhabitants. This parish, on account of its distance from Hastings, had formerly a local jurisdiction, a mayor, and a prison; but it is now united with Canterbury, the Archbishops of which once had a palace here, long since converted into a private dwelling-house. The parish comprises by measurement 1139 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, arising from tithes, £170, with a permanent addition of £50 annually from the Archbishop, who is patron and appropriator. A national school is partly supported by subscription.

BEAL, with LOWLIN, a township, in the parish of KYLOE, union of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, in ISLANDSHIRE, county of DURHAM, though locally northward, and for parliamentary purposes connected with the N. division, of NORTHUMBERLAND; adjoining Berwick, and containing 180 inhabitants.

BEALINGS, GREAT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of CARLFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W.) from Woodbridge; containing 377 inhabitants. It comprises 965 acres of land, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil light, and subject to inundation from a confluence of small streams, which run into the river Deben at Woodbridge, and thence into the sea. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 4. 7., and in the gift of Lord Henniker: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £8. 10., and the rectorial for one of £297. 5.; and there are 11 acres of glebe.

BEALINGS, LITTLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of CARLFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Woodbridge; comprising by admeasurement 712 acres, and containing 322 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. $3\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £140; patron, F. Smythies, Esq. A school is supported by subscription.

BEAMINSTER, a market-town and parish, in the union and hundred of BEAMINSTER, Bridport division of DORSET, $17\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Dorchester, and $137\frac{1}{4}$ (W. S. W.) from London; containing, with the tything of Langdon, 3270 inhabitants. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., Prince Maurice, commanding a party of royalists engaged in besieging Lyme, took up his quarters in this town, which, in a few days after, was nearly reduced to ashes by fire, stated by some historians to have been occasioned by accident, and by others to have been the result of a quarrel between the French and the Cornish men in the service of the king, who set fire to it in five different places. It was rebuilt by means of a parliamentary grant of £2000, but was again nearly destroyed by a fire which occurred in 1684: in 1781, it experienced a similar calamity, but the greater part of the buildings having been insured, it soon recovered its former prosperity. The town is pleasantly situated on the river Birt, which is formed by the union of several small springs that rise in the immediate vicinity; the houses are in general modern and well built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The manufacture of woollen cloth, which formerly flourished here, is at present on the decline, and that of sail-cloth is now the principal source of employment; there is also a pottery for the coarser kinds of earthenware. The market, granted to William Ewel, prebendary of Sarum, in the 12th of Edward I., is on Thursday; and a fair is held on Sept. 19th, for cattle. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the hundred. The quarter-sessions for the county, now held at Dorchester, were formerly held here; and in 1638, an order of session was issued for building a house of correction at the expense of the division. The town-hall is a neat and commodious edifice, in which the public business is transacted.

The parish contains the manors of Beaminster Prima and Secunda, forming two prebends in the Cathedral of Salisbury; the former valued in the king's books at £20. 2. 6., and the latter at £22. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$. The LIVING is a vicarage, annexed to that of Netherbury: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £220, and those of the incumbent for one of £300. The church, founded in honour of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, is a stately edifice, in the later style of English architecture, with a fine tower, 100 feet high, and richly ornamented with sculptured designs of the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, the Ascension, and other subjects of scriptural history. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free school was founded in 1684, by Mrs. Frances Tucker, who endowed it with £20 per annum for the master, leaving also £30 per annum for apprenticing boys: the endowment now produces about £140, and the number of scholars is 100. The Rev. Samuel Hood, father of Lords Hood and Bridport, was master of the school early in the eighteenth century. An almshouse for eight aged persons was founded in 1630, by Sir John Strode, of Parnham, Knt., the income of which amounts to £20. Gilbert Adams, Esq., in 1626, gave £200 to the poor; and the Rev. William Hillary, in 1712, bequeathed the reversion, after ninety-nine years, of land in the parish of Carscombe, worth £35 per annum, for the benefit of twelve distressed families. The Knowle estate, in the parish, has been in the possession of the Daniels since the reign of Henry VIII., and there is a burial-ground for the family upon it. Dr. Thomas Sprat, Bishop of Rochester, and the Rev. Thomas Russel, Fellow of New College, Oxford, who distinguished himself by his defence of Warton's History of English Poetry, were natives of the town.

BEAMISH, a township, in the chapelry of TANFIELD, parish of CHESTER-LE-STREET, union of LANCHESTER, Middle division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Gateshead; containing, with the township of Lintz-Green, 2671 inhabitants. It stands in the deep-wooded vale of Team, which expands itself near the house of Beamish into a fine strath, bordered on all sides by rising grounds of irregular form, richly clothed with luxuriant forest-trees. The mansion, which contains some curious old portraits, is one of the best family residences in the county, having been much improved, and is remarkable for the handsome evergreens that ornament its pleasure-grounds: the old park of Beamish occupies an upland site to the south of the Team. There is a great quantity of coal in the township, worked from what is called the Tanfield colliery, and it also contains some iron-ore.

BEAMSLEY, a township, partly in the parish of ADDINGHAM, but chiefly in that of SKIPTON, union of SKIPTON, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Skipton; containing 235 inhabitants, of whom 176 are in the Skipton portion. This township, which includes Great Beamsley in the parish of Skipton, and Little Beamsley in that of Addingham, is situated on the eastern side of the river Wharfe, and comprises by computation 1820 acres of fertile land; Beamsley Hall, the residence of Robert Dickson, Esq., is a handsome mansion pleasantly situated, and the prevailing character of the scenery is varied, and in some parts picturesque. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. An hospital was founded and endowed, in 1593, by Margaret, Countess of Cumberland, for 13 poor women, 7 from Skipton, 5 from Silsden, and 1 from Stirton with Thorlby; and an estate at Harewood was afterwards left to the charity by her daughter, Anne, Countess of Pembroke. In 1809, timber was felled on the lands to the amount of £1176, of which part was invested in the Navy 5 per cents. The inmates have each separate apartments, and the buildings contain a chapel, in which prayers are read daily by a chaplain, who has £20 per annum; the Earl of Thanet, as representative of the founder, is trustee, and the annual income is £332.

BEANACRE, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of MELKSHAM, Melksham and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 257 inhabitants.

BEANLEY, a township, in the parish of EGLINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Alwick; containing 176 inhabitants. This was formerly the head of a barony, the lord of which had the power of inflicting capital punishment; Gallow-Haw, on the western side of the Breamish, having been the place of execution. It comprises about 1700 acres, of which 1000 are pasture and moorland, and 700 arable; the soil, generally, is a light gravel, the surface mountainous, and the views very extensive. The river Breamish, abounding in trout, runs through the township, which is the property of the Duke of Northumberland, and is divided into two farms, occupied by two of the Duke's bailiffs, Ralph Storey and Andrew Ker Moffat, Esqrs. On an elevated spot, called Beanley Plantation, are vestiges of an encampment, having a double fosse and rampart; the road which led to it is plainly discernible. Percy's Cross, erected in memory of Sir Ralph Percy, an officer attached to the Lancastrian party, who fell in battle against the Yorkists, in 1464, stands on Hedgeley Moor, a short distance from the village. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £125. 18., and the vicarial for one of £55. 18.

BEARD, a hamlet, in the parish of GLOSSOP, union of HAYFIELD, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Chapel-en-le-Frith; containing 290 inhabitants. The inappropriate tithes of this hamlet, with those of Ollersset, White, and Thornsett, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £92. 10., and the vicarial for £15.—See NEW MILLS.

BEARL, a township, in the parish of BYWELL-ST. ANDREW, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (E.) from Corbridge; containing 36 inhabitants. This is a large farm, standing nearly two miles north from Bywell, and was some years since the property of Mr. Anthony Wailes and Mrs. Charlton, of whom it was purchased by T. W. Beaumont, Esq., for £22,000. The road from Corbridge to Heddon passes at a short distance north of the village.

BEARLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Stratford; containing 231 inhabitants, and comprising 939 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £62; patrons, Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge; impropiator, John Phillips, Esq. There is a school in which the greater portion of the children are paid for by the wealthier landowners.

BEARSTEAD (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of MAIDSTONE, hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Maidstone; containing 605 inhabitants. It is intersected by the lower Dover road, and comprises by measurement 627 acres, of which about 400 are arable, and the rest pasture; the surface is undulated, the soil sandy, and the chief produce hops and corn. A fair is held on the third Tuesday in July; and there are petty-sessions on the first Monday in every month. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £191; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Rochester: there are about two acres of glebe. The church is an ancient edifice, in the early English style, with a square tower. A national school for this and three other parishes was built by subscription in 1839, on a piece of ground given by the Dean and Chapter, and their lessee, Mr. Alderman Lucas.

BEARSTON, a township, in the parish of MUCKLESTON, union of MARKET-DRAYTON, Drayton division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Drayton; containing 101 inhabitants.

BEARWARD-COTE, a township, in the parish of ETWALL, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY; containing 36 inhabitants.

BEAUCHAMP-ROOTHING, county of ESSEX.—See ROOTHING, BEAUCHAMP.

BEAUCHAMP-STOKE.—See BEECHING.

BEAUCHIEF-ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty, formerly part of the parish of NORTON, in the union of ECCLESALL-BIERLOW, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Dronfield; containing 74 inhabitants. The living is a donative; patron, P. Pegge Burnell, Esq. The chapel is a small edifice, erected about 1660, with the exception of the tower, which formed part of a monastery of Præmonstratensian canons, founded here in 1183, by Robert Fitz-Ranulph, and dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £157. 10. 2. The liberty, comprising about 1000 acres, was, by a deed executed at a court held at Richmond, March 14th, 1601, exempted from assessment for taxes.

BEAUDESERT (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, Henley division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Henley-in-Arden; containing 205 inhabitants. This place derives its name from a strong castle, erected here soon after the Conquest, by Thurstane de Montfort, which, from the beauty of its situation, was called Beldesert, and continued the chief seat of his descendants for several ages, but was probably either demolished or suffered to go to ruin about the time of the war between the houses of York and Lancaster, that the contending parties might not take advantage of it in their military operations. The parish comprises 1242*a.* 2*r.* 19*p.*, of which 586 acres are arable; it is almost entirely surrounded by a range of hills, and is intersected by the Birmingham road; the soil is tolerably good, and consists principally of clay and marl. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £170, and the glebe consists of 141 acres, with a glebe-house. The church is partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English style, with a richly ornamented Norman arch between the nave and the chancel. The Rev. Richard Jago, a poet of some note, was born here in 1715, during the incumbency of his father.

BEAULIEU, a liberty, in the union of NEW FOREST, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Lymington; containing, with an extra-parochial district within its limits, 1339 inhabitants. This place is situated on a river of the same name, which rises in the New Forest, at the foot of a hill about a mile and a half to the north-east of Lyndhurst, and is navigable hence for vessels of fifty tons' burthen to the Isle of Wight channel, which bounds the parish on the south. This river, on reaching the village, which stands on the road between Hythe and Lymington, spreads into a wide surface, covering several acres, on the eastern side of which stood Beaulieu Abbey, founded in 1204, by King John, for thirty monks of the reformed Benedictine order, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary: its revenue, at the Dissolution in 1540, was £428. 6. 8. It had the privilege of sanctuary, and afforded an asylum to Margaret of Anjou, wife of Henry VI., after the battle of Barnet, and to Perkin Warbeck, in the reign of Henry VII. Beaulieu has long been noted for the manufacture of coarse sacking: near the village of Sowley, within the liberty, were formerly two large mills belonging to some iron-works; and at Buckler's Hard, another populous village in the liberty, situated on the Beaulieu river, and inhabited principally by workmen employed in ship-building, many vessels of war have been built. At Sowley is a fine sheet of water, abounding with pike, some of which are of very large size, weighing nearly 28lbs. Fairs for horses and horned-cattle are held on April 15th and Sept. 4th.

The LIVING is a donative; net income, £85; patron and impropiator, Lord Montagu. The chapel, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, was formerly the refectory of the ancient abbey, the church of which, situated to the south-east, has been entirely destroyed: it is a plain building of stone, with strong buttresses, and has a beautiful old stone pulpit, the only one similar to which in the kingdom, is that at Magdalene College, Oxford: the edifice was enlarged in 1840. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A school, commenced in 1822, is supported by Lady Montagu, at an expense of about £100 annually. New school-rooms for the accommodation of 100 boys and 100 girls were erected by his lordship in 1839, and there are also two infants' schools. The ruins of the ancient abbey are situated in a beautiful valley, nearly circular in form, bounded by well-wooded hills, and surrounded by a stone wall, nearly entire in many places, and mantled with ivy. Near the abbey was a building, called an hospital, inhabited by the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, where travellers and persons in distress were relieved, and the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £100; it was founded a little previously to the abbey, and, from the beauty of its situation, gave the name of Beaulieu to the place. About two miles distant, and very near the seashore, is Park Farm, anciently one of the granges attached to the abbey, which, like others appertaining to that establishment, possessed the privilege of having divine service celebrated in it, under a bull of Pope Alexander I. The chapel is remaining, though much dilapidated, and adjoins the farm-house, a massive stone building of equal antiquity; its length is 42 feet, and breadth about 14; the interior is divided into two compartments by a stone screen, which reaches to the roof. At a short distance from this, on the road to Beaulieu, are the ruins of the extensive barn and the chapel of St. Leonard, the former measuring in length 226 feet, in breadth 77, and in height 60, and formerly the principal grange belonging to the abbey.

BEAU-MANOR, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (S. W.) from Loughborough; containing 87 inhabitants. This place was anciently the residence of the Beaumont family, who, in 1389 and 1390, had the honour of entertaining Richard II. and his Queen at their mansion called Beau-Manor Park; it afterwards became the residence of Frances, Duchess of Suffolk, niece of Henry VIII., and mother of Lady Jane Grey, and subsequently of Sir William Hericke, one of the tellers of the exchequer in the reign of James I.

BEAUMONT (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, and E. division of the county of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Carlisle; containing 288 inhabitants. About the year 1323, Robert Bruce, King of Scotland, encamped with his army for five days at the village, and hence sent detachments to ravage the circumjacent country. The parish comprises by measurement 1497 acres of land, of which the soil is a rich black loam, alternated with sand; the village is pleasantly situated on the river Eden, and the Carlisle canal passes through the parish. At the hamlet of Sandsfield, on the western bank of the Eden, vessels of sixty tons' burthen, belonging to the port of Carlisle, receive and discharge their cargoes. There is an extensive salmon fishery in the river, the property of the Earl of Lonsdale. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Kirk-Andrews-upon-Eden in 1692, and valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 8.: the glebe consists of about 12 acres. The church stands upon a considerable elevation. The celebrated wall of Severus crossed the parish.

BEAUMONT cum MOZE (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Manningtree, and 13 (E.) from Colchester; containing 451 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2908 acres, and lies near the extremity of an inlet of the North Sea, between the Naze and Harwich. The tide comes up to Beaumont wharf, which is connected with a short canal for conveying coal, corn, and manure to and from London. The living is a rectory, to which that of Moze was united in 1678, valued in the king's books at £18, and in the gift of the Governors of Guy's Hospital: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £775, and there are 46 acres of glebe. The church is a plain edifice, having a piscina in the chancel. There is a small place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by the rector and parishioners. Some ancient silver coins were dug up in 1806.

BEAUMONT-CHASE, an extra-parochial district, in the union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of MARTINSLEY, county of RUTLAND, but also extending into the counties of LEICESTER and NORTHAMPTON; containing 22 inhabitants.

BEAUMONT-LEYS, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Leicester; containing 29 inhabitants.

BEAUSALL, a chapelry, in the parish of HATTON, union of WARWICK, Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Warwick; containing 292 inhabitants, and comprising 1581 acres.

BEAWORTH, a tything, in the parish of CHERITON, union of ALRESFORD, hundred of FAWLEY, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from New Alresford; containing 153 inhabitants. Many hundreds of coins, supposed to be of William the Conqueror and William Rufus, were discovered in June 1833, an account of which appeared in the 26th volume of the Archæologia.

BEAWORTHY (St. ALBAN), a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Black Torrington and Shebbear, and N. divisions of DEVON, 10 miles (N. N. W.) from Oakhampton; containing 405 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Oakhampton to Holsworthy; the land, which is of a clayey quality, is principally in tillage. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 6.; net income, £143; patron, Sir William Molesworth, Bart. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by the incumbent.

BEBINGTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and Lower division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER; consisting of the chapelry of Tranmere, and the townships of Higher and Lower Bebington, cum Spittle, and Storeton; and containing 5008 inhabitants, of whom 844 are in the township of Higher, and 1187 in that of Lower, Bebington, 5 miles (S.) from Birkenhead. The parish is situated on the banks of the river Mersey, and is intersected by the road from Neston to Liverpool, and the railway from Chester to Birkenhead; it comprises about 4700 acres of fertile land, and freestone of peculiarly fine texture and of a beautiful whiteness is quarried for building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £30. 13. 4.; patron and incumbent, Rev. R. M. Fielden. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £700, and the glebe comprises only the grounds and garden of the rectory-house. The church is a handsome structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early, decorated, and later English styles, with a tower surmounted by a spire. A proprietary chapel has recently been erected at Rock Ferry; and there is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. Adjoining the church is a schoolroom built in 1655, and endowed by the parishioners with 20 acres of land, producing £30 per annum; and a national school for boys and girls, and an infants' school, are supported by subscription.

BEBSIDE, a township, in the parochial chapelry of HORTON, union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Morpeth; containing 91 inhabitants. This place was anciently a manor held under the barons of Bolam, but previously to 1204 "Bebesette" had become part of the possessions of the convent of Tynemouth, which continued to hold lands here till the Dissolution. Among other persons connected with the spot, were Bertram Monboucher, lord of Horton, and Sir John de Mitford, of Mitford, who both had lands here, the former in the reign of Richard II., and the latter in that of Henry VI.; and subsequent proprietors have been the Dudleys, Ogles, and Wards; it is now the property of Robert Ward, Esq., of London. The old mansion, with a tower in the centre, has lately undergone repair. There were formerly slitting-mills and shops for forty nailers, with a "considerable dwelling-house," of which nothing now remains except a building divided into small tenements, inhabited by a few poor families. Freestone is quarried; and a water-mill for grinding corn was erected some years since. The township pays a small modus in lieu of all tithes.

BECCLES (St. MICHAEL), an incorporated market-town and parish, in the union and hundred of WANGFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 44 miles (E. N. E.) from Bury-St. Edmund's, and 109 (N. E. by N.) from London; containing 4086 inhabitants. This town, which suffered greatly from fire in 1586, and again in 1662, is pleasantly situated on the navigable river Waveney, by which it is bounded on the north and west. It consists of several spacious streets, diverging from the market-place, well paved, and lighted with gas; the houses in general are handsome and well built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The environs, which abound with pleasing scenery, afford agreeable walks; and the theatre and assembly-rooms form two handsome ornamental buildings. Races are held annually on a fine course near the town, on which are two commodious stands. The trade is principally in corn, malt, and coal, and is carried on to a considerable extent: the market is on Saturday, and fairs are held on Whit-Monday for cattle, and Oct. 2nd for horses and pedlery; there are also statute fairs. Adjoining the town is a tract of fen lands, originally about 1400 acres in extent, which was granted by Henry VIII. in 1540, (after the dissolution of the abbey of Bury-St. Edmund's, to which the manor formerly belonged,) to William Rede and his heirs, in trust for the benefit of himself and other inhabitants of the town; there are now remaining about 940 acres, and there are also upwards of 200 held for charitable purposes. In 1543 the inhabitants were incorporated by letters-patent of Henry VIII., but, in consequence of protracted disputes between them and the family of Rede, concerning the grant of the fen lands, the charter was surrendered to Queen Elizabeth, and a new one granted, in 1584, which was confirmed in 1588, and by James I. in 1605. The government is now vested in four aldermen, and twelve councillors, from whom a mayor is chosen; the borough is co-extensive with the parish. A court of quarter-sessions is held for the county; petty-sessions are held for the district every Saturday, and manor courts occasionally. The sessions-hall being inconvenient, a new one is about to be erected; the house of correction has

part of the possessions of the convent of Tynemouth, which continued to hold lands here till the Dissolution. Among other persons connected with the spot, were Bertram Monboucher, lord of Horton, and Sir John de Mitford, of Mitford, who both had lands here, the former in the reign of Richard II., and the latter in that of Henry VI.; and subsequent proprietors have been the Dudleys, Ogles, and Wards; it is now the property of Robert Ward, Esq., of London. The old mansion, with a tower in the centre, has lately undergone repair. There were formerly slitting-mills and shops for forty nailers, with a "considerable dwelling-house," of which nothing now remains except a building divided into small tenements, inhabited by a few poor families. Freestone is quarried; and a water-mill for grinding corn was erected some years since. The township pays a small modus in lieu of all tithes.

The parish contains 1893*a.* 2*r.* 14*p.*, of which 950 acres are common; the soil on the high grounds is wet and clayey, and in the lower parts sandy. The LIVING is a rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of St. Mary Ingate; the rectory valued in the king's books at £21. 12. 3½, and the vicarage at £7. 6. 8.: it is in the gift of the Earl of Gosford, and the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £350. The church is a spacious and elegant structure, in the later style of English architecture, and consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles; the porch is of beautiful design and elaborate execution, and the interior is appropriately ornamented. A collection of books, formerly kept in a room over the porch, has been removed to the subscription library established in 1836. A chapel for reading the burial service, and a burial-ground, were consecrated in 1823; and a cemetery, with a chapel for all denominations, was established in 1840. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Methodists. A grammar school was founded and endowed under the will, dated in 1714, of the Rev. Dr. Fauconberge, a native of the town, with an estate of 132 acres, in the parish of Corton, producing about £183 per annum. Dr. Routh, the learned President of Magdalene College, Oxford, received the rudiments of his education at the place. The free school in Ballygate-street was founded and endowed in 1631, by Sir John Leman, Knt., alderman of London, who devised several parcels of land for its support, containing altogether 112 acres, and yielding a rent of £196. Here are also a national, a British and foreign, and an infants' school, supported by subscription; eight almshouses are occupied by poor widows, and there is a fund for apprenticing a boy every year. An ancient hospital for lepers, of uncertain foundation, with a chapel dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was granted, in 1676, to the corporation of Beccles, for the benefit of the poor. Here were also several guilds; and an ancient church, dedicated to St. Peter, distinct from the present church.

BECCONSALL, with HESKETH, a chapelry, in the parish of CROSTON, union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 11 miles (N. by E.) from Ormskirk; containing 553 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Croston. A rent-charge of £140 has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes.

BECHTON, a township, in the parish of SANDBACH, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2½ miles (S. E.) from Sandbach; containing 809 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes close to the salt-works here. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £192. 11. 10., and the vicarial for one of £192. 18. 9.

BECKBURY (St. MILBURGH), a parish, in the union of SHIFFNALL, and within the liberties of the borough of WENLOCK, S. division of SALOP, 4 miles (S.) from Shiffnall; containing 312 inhabitants. It is situated about two miles south of the great Holyhead road, and comprises by measurement 1321 acres: red rock-stone is found, suitable for building. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 4., and in the gift of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £333, and there are 31 acres of glebe, with a house. In the church is a table monument of alabaster to the memory of Richard Houghton and his lady. In the Windmill field is a tumulus, which was opened in 1840, and which, about four feet beneath the surface, contained human bones.

BECKENHAM (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of BROMLEY, hundred of BROMLEY and BECKENHAM, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 1¾ mile (W.) from Bromley, and 10 (S. S. E.) from London; containing 1608 inhabitants. The name of this place, compounded of the Saxon terms, Bec, a brook, and Ham, a dwelling, is derived from a small stream which passes through the parish, and falls into the river Ravensbourne. In the reign of Henry VIII., Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, entertained that monarch, when on his journey to visit Anne of Cleves, with great pomp, at the manor-house. The village is pleasantly situated, and contains some neat dwelling-houses; and in the neighbourhood are many handsome villas. The Croydon railway passes along the north-western angle of the parish. A fair, chiefly for toys, is held on the Monday before St. Bartholomew's day. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 18. 9., and in the gift of J. Cator, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £893. 10., and there are 27 acres of glebe. The church is a neat structure, erected about the beginning of the seventeenth century, with a lofty spire, which, having been destroyed by lightning in 1790, was recently rebuilt. Mrs. Mary Watson, in 1790, bequeathed property for the instruction of children, which was vested in the purchase of £1401. 12. 7. New South Sea Annuities, producing an annual dividend of £42. 0. 10., to which subsequent benefactions have been added; a school-house was erected in 1818, and about 80 children are taught upon the national system. Dr. Asheton, the projector of a plan for providing for widows by survivorship, was rector of the parish towards the close of the seventeenth century.

BECKERMET (St. BRIDGET'S), a parish, in the union of WHITEHAVEN, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 630 inhabitants. The village of Great Beckermet lies partly in this parish, and partly in that of Beckermet-St. John, 3 miles south from Egremont. The parish is situated on the north bank of the Calder, adjoining the ocean, and contains the sequestered ruins of Calder Abbey, described under Calder-Bridge. Freestone is obtained. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £87; patron and proprietor, H. Gaitskell, Esq. The parochial church stands about half a mile south-west of the village; and a church, in the early English style, has just been erected at Calder-Bridge, at the expense of Capt. Irwin.

BECKERMET (St. JOHN'S), a parish, in the union of WHITEHAVEN, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 2½ miles (S.) from Egremont; containing 468 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £57; patron and proprietor, H. Gaitskell, Esq. The church is a small ancient edifice. A portion of the town of Egremont is included within this parish, in which also stands a private residence, called Woto-Bank, with the etymology of which is connected an interesting fabulous tale, chosen by Mrs. Cowley for the subject of a romantic poem entitled "Edwina," published in 1794.

BECKETT, a tything, in the parish and hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Farringdon; comprising 792a. 2r. 25p., and containing 42 inhabitants. The manor, soon after the Conquest, became the property of the crown, and the manor-house was occasionally made a royal residence. Dr. Shute Barrington, the late Bishop of Durham, was born here in 1734.

BECKFORD (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMB, partly in the hundred of TIBALDSTONE, and partly in the Upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Tewkesbury; containing, with the hamlets of Grafton, Bangrove, and Didcote, 461 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises about 1800 acres, is situated on the road from Tewkesbury to Evesham, and abounds with freestone of good quality. The living is a vicarage, with Ashton-under-Hill annexed, valued in the king's books at £16. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £317; patron, Rev. John Timbrill, D.D.; impropiator, W. Wakeman, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1773. The church is a very ancient structure. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel. An alien priory of Augustine Canons, a cell to the abbey of St. Martin and St. Barbara, in Normandy, formerly existed here: upon its suppression, the revenues amounted to £53. 6. 8.

BECKHAM, EAST (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Cromer; containing 56 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 800 acres, nearly all arable land. The living is annexed to the rectory of Aylmerton, and the church has long been a ruin.

BECKHAM, WEST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (E.) from Holt; containing 179 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 835 acres, of which 767 are arable, 18 pasture, and 50 common, now under inclosure, by an act obtained in 1840. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, the appropriators; net income, £82. The church is a building, chiefly in the early English style, of which the tower has been many years down.

BECKHAMPTON, a tything, in the parish of AVEBURY, union of MARLBOROUGH, hundred of SELKLEY, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and N. divisions of WILTS, 6 miles (W.) from Marlborough; containing 155 inhabitants. The village, which adjoins Beckhampton downs, is situated on the road from Bath to London, which here divides into two branches, one leading through Devizes, and the other through Calne and Chippenham. There was formerly a chapel.

BECKINGHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E.) from Newark; containing, with the hamlet of Sutton, 462 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road between Newark and Sleaford; the land is partly arable, and partly rich pasture. The living is a rectory, with Stragglethorpe annexed, valued in the king's books at £41. 6. 8.; net income, £697; patron, Thomas Marsland, Esq.: the tithes of the township were commuted for land and a money payment in 1769; the glebe consists of 400 acres. The church is partly Norman, and partly in the early English style; the tower, ornamented with pinnacles, is later English. There is a place of worship for Methodists; and a national school was built by Mr. Marsland, in 1840.

BECKINGHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, within the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Gainsborough; containing 491 inhabitants. It comprises 2412 acres; the road from Gainsborough to Bawtry passes through the village, and the navigable river Trent runs along the border of the parish. The living is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, valued in the king's books at £6. 15. 3.; net income, £110; appropriators, Chapter of Southwell and Prebendary of Beckingham. The tithes were commuted for land in 1779; the glebe consists of 60 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school, endowed with about £15 per annum, is conducted on the national plan. Dr. William Howell, the historian, was born here.

BECKINGTON (St. GREGORY), a parish, in the union and hundred of FROME, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. E.) from Frome; containing, with the hamlet of Rudge, 1190 inhabitants. The manufacture of cloth was formerly extensively carried on, and still exists to a limited degree. The living is a rectory, with that of Standerwick annexed, valued in the king's books at £19. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Rev. Langford Sainsbury: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £464, and there are 72 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. The church contains the remains of Samuel Daniel, poet-laureate and historian, who died here in 1619; and of William Huish, rector of the parish, and one of the editors of the Polyglott Bible, who died in 1688. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyans. Thomas Beckington, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and a distinguished statesman, was born here in 1645.

BECKLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of HEADINGTON, partly in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, and partly in that of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Wheatly; containing, with the hamlet of Studley, in Bucks, and that of Horton, in Oxon, 763 inhabitants. The manor was part of the private property of Alfred the Great: in the thirteenth century it belonged to Richard, Earl of Cornwall, who had a castellated mansion here, formerly the residence of the barons of St. Walery, a portion of the site of which is now occupied by a dovecote, supposed to be a relic of the fortress. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £112; it is in the patronage of the family of the incumbent, the Rev. T. L. Cooke, to whom, and the Earl of Abingdon and Sir Alexander Croke, the impropriate tithes belong. The church is in the early and decorated English styles, with an embattled tower between the nave and chancel, and contains some monuments to the Crokes, of Studley, a hamlet in the parish. A school is chiefly supported by the vicar. Studley Priory was founded in the reign of Henry II. by Bernard de St. Valori, or Walery, in honour of the Virgin Mary, and amply endowed for fifty nuns: its revenue, at the Dissolution, was valued at £84. 4. 4 $\frac{1}{4}$., and the remains are incorporated with the present mansion, called Studley Priory: the conventual church was taken down, and a domestic chapel erected within the mansion, which, by permission of the owner, is open to tenants and others upon the estate. The Roman road from Alchester to Wallingford passed through the parish, and fragments of Roman pottery have been found in the vicinity.

BECKLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of RYE, hundred of GOLDSBUR, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Rye; containing 1412 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Rother, which separates the counties of Kent and Sussex; it comprises by measurement 4800 acres, of which about 1500 are in woods and plantations, and the remainder arable and pasture land in good cultivation; about 360 acres are planted with hops. Iron-ore and sandstone are found, and formerly there was an extensive furnace for smelting iron-ore. The village is pleasantly situated on the road from Rye to London; the surrounding scenery is rich in sylvan beauty, and from many parts extensive and finely varied prospects are obtained. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 6. 8., and in the gift of University College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1000, and the glebe comprises 25 acres, with a handsome house, built in 1840 by the patrons. The church is a handsome edifice in the decorated English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and schools on the national plan are supported by subscription. There are several chalybeate springs.

BECK-ROW, a hamlet, in the parish and union of MILDENHALL, hundred of LACKFORD, W. division of SUFFOLK; containing 744 inhabitants.

BECKSWELL.—See BEXWELL.

BEDALE (ST. GREGORY), a market-town, parish, and the head of a union, chiefly in the wapentake of HANG-EAST, but partly in that of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK, containing 2803 inhabitants, of whom 1250 are in the town, 33½ miles (N. W.) from York, and 223 (N. N. W.) from London. The parish comprises 8702a. 1r. 24p., and contains the townships of Aiskew, Bedale, Burrell with Cowling, Crakehall, Firby, and Langthorne, and the hamlet of Rands-Grange. The town, which has been considerably improved of late, is of prepossessing appearance; it is pleasantly situated on the banks of a stream flowing into the river Swale, near Scruton, and consists of one principal street, which is lighted with gas from works erected in 1836. The houses are in general of brick, and irregularly built; the air is pure, and the neighbourhood, which is well cultivated, affords many pleasant walks and much picturesque scenery. Among the more recent buildings is a handsome structure, erected in 1840, containing apartments for the savings' bank, a suite of assembly-rooms, and apartments for holding petty-sessions. Several extensive wool-staplers carry on business here, and give employment to numerous wool-combers. The North-Allerton station on the line of the Great North of England railway is seven miles distant. The market is on Tuesday; and on the same day in alternate weeks is a large fair for fat-cattle and sheep, established in 1837. Other fairs are held on Easter-Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, and July 5th and 6th, for horses, horned-cattle, and sheep; and Oct. 10th and 11th, and the last Monday but one before Christmas-day, for cattle, sheep, hogs, and leather, the supply of the last article being the most considerable of any in the north of England. The horses are generally of superior value, the surrounding country being famed for its breed of hunters and race-horses.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £89. 4. 9½., and in the alternate patronage of Miss Peirse and Myles Stapylton, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1713. 16. 3., and there are 176 acres of glebe. The church is in the early English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, and of remarkable strength, having been used as a place of security from the incursions of the Scots: it contains several interesting monuments, one of which is to the memory of Sir Brian Fitz-Alan, lord-lieutenant of Scotland in the reign of Edward I., who resided in a castle near the church, of which there are no remains. A district church was erected in 1840 at Crakehall, for the townships of Crakehall, Rand, East Brompton, and Langthorne; it was built by private subscription, and by aid from the Church Building Society, and is endowed with £100 per annum out of the living of Bedale. There are places of worship for Methodists, Particular Baptists, and Roman Catholics. A school for boys, formerly in the churchyard, was removed in 1816 to a more convenient room erected by Henry Peirse, Esq., in the market-place; it is supposed to have existed prior to the dissolution of religious houses, and was endowed by Queen Elizabeth with £7. 11. 4. per annum, and afterwards by the Countess of Warwick with £13. 6. 8. per annum, which latter sum, together with a gratuity of £50 from the rector, and £10 from the Hazlefatt estate, is paid to the master; the first sum of £7. 11. 4. being appropriated to the instruction of scholars in the old building in the churchyard, which was re-opened as a grammar school a few years ago. There is also a girls' national school, supported by subscription. Samwaies hospital, a neat stone building, containing apartments for six men, was founded by P. Samwaies, D.D., in 1698; Christ's hospital, at Firby, was founded in 1608 by John Clapham, for a master and six brethren of the age of 60 years or upwards, to be all single men; and the Widows' hospital was founded by Robert Younge about 1666, for the residence of three widows of Bedale. There are also numerous bequests for the poor. The union of Bedale, comprising 23 parishes and places, contains a population of 8596. Sir Christopher Wray, lord chief justice of the court of queen's bench in the reign of Elizabeth, was a native of the place.

BEDBURN, NORTH, a township, in the parish of ST. ANDREW-AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 5¼ miles (N. W.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 457 inhabitants. This place, which was anciently a possession of the Eure family, comprises the hamlets of Green-Head and Fir-Tree, and lies on the north side of Witton-le-Wear, and the village is at the junction of the roads to Witton and Bishop-Auckland: the river Wear passes on the west. Smelting-works are said to have been carried on here, at a place now called Smelt-house.

BEDBURN, SOUTH, a township, in the chapelry of HAMSTERLEY, parish of ST. ANDREW-AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 8 miles (N. W. by W.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 350 inhabitants. This township, which is situated between the river Wear and the Bedburn rivulet, comprises 8068 acres, of which 5000 are arable, meadow, and pasture, 1068 wood and plantations, and the remainder waste; the soil is light and sandy, but not unfertile. The surface is diversified with hills and glens, and the neighbourhood abounds with picturesque and romantic scenery. The Grove, the occasional residence of Robert Surtees, Esq., and Hoppyland Park, the seat of G. F. L. Blenkinsop, Esq., are both in the township, and at its north-western extremity is an earthwork of remote antiquity, called "The Castles," of oblong form, surrounded by a lofty rampart of loose pebble stones, with an outer ditch, supposed to have been a British fortress. At Bedburn Forge is a manufactory for edge-tools, spades, &c. which, prior to the year 1820, was used for bleaching linen cloth and yarn by a chemical process.

BEDDINGHAM (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of WEST FIRLE, hundred of TOTNOW, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, 2 miles (S. E.) from Lewes; containing 268 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2283*a. 3r. 1p.*, and includes part of the South Downs; it is bounded on the west by the river Ouse, and is intersected by the road from Lewes to Eastbourne. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of West Firle united, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. 10.; net income, £345; patrons, alternately, the Bishop, and the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The impropriation of Beddingham belongs to the Dean and Chapter, and that of West Firle, to Viscount Gage. The church is a handsome structure, and has evidently been of larger dimensions than at present. A parochial school is supported by subscription. Several relics of antiquity, consisting of swords, bracelets, and Roman coins, with some skeletons, were dug up in a field in 1800.

BEDDINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CROYDON, Second division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, E. division of SURREY, 1½ mile (W.) from Croydon; containing, with the hamlet of Wallington, 1453 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by admeasurement 4900 acres, is intersected by the river Wandle; the soil is light and gravelly, and towards the north the surface is flat. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Representative of the late Admiral Sir B. H. Carew: the tithes, with those of Wallington, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1200, and there are 49 acres of glebe. The church, beautifully situated in Beddington Park, close to the ancient mansion, is a handsome edifice, with a fine tower, chiefly in the later English style: it was built in the reign of Richard II., and contains some monuments to the memory of the Carew family. Several schools are supported by subscription, and there are bequests to the poor, the principal of which is one of £1000 by Mrs. A. P. Gee, in 1825. The first orange-trees introduced into England are said to have been planted in Beddington Park. Roman urns and other relics have been discovered.

BEDFIELD (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 4¾ miles (W. N. W.) from Framlingham; containing 358 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £14, and in the gift of the Earl of Stradbroke: the glebe consists of 24 acres, and the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £375. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower. About £56, the produce of land, are annually distributed among the poor.

BEDFONT, EAST (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of STAINES, hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Hounslow; containing, with the hamlet of Hatton, 982 inhabitants. This is a polling-place for the election of knights of the shire. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £288; patron and appropriator, Bishop of London. Opposite the entrance to the church are two yew-trees, the branches of which, meeting at the top, form an arch, and have been fantastically cut so as to represent two cocks in a fighting attitude; in the thick foliage of one of them appears the date 1704 (an eccentric individual having made a bequest in that year for keeping them thus trimmed), and in that of the other are seen the initials H. I. G. R. T.

BEDFORD, a borough and market-town, and the head of a union, in the county of BEDFORD, of which it is the capital, 50 miles (N. N. W.) from London; containing 9178 inhabitants. This place, called by the later Britons Lettwydur, and by the Saxons Bedanford or Bedicanford (expressive of its character as a place of public accommodation at the passage of a river), derives its name from its situation near an ancient ford over the Ouse. In 571, a battle was fought here between the Britons and the West Saxons, the latter being commanded by Cuthwulf, brother of Ceawlin, third king of Wessex, in which the Britons were defeated with considerable loss. The town, having been almost destroyed by the Danes, was restored by Edward the Elder, who greatly enlarged it, by erecting a fort and other buildings on the opposite side of the river; but in 1010 it suffered again from an irruption of the Danes, who committed most dreadful ravages in their progress through the country. After the Conquest, Payne de Beauchamp, third baron of Bedford, built a strong castle here, which was besieged and taken by Stephen in the war with the Empress Matilda; and when the barons took up arms against King John, William de Beauchamp, who then possessed it, having taken part with the insurgents, delivered the castle into their possession, but it was subsequently besieged and ultimately taken for the king by Falco de Brent, upon whom that monarch bestowed it, as a reward for his services. In the reign of Henry III. Falco, having committed excessive outrages, for which he was fined £3000 by the king's itinerant justiciaries at Dunstable, seized the principal judge and imprisoned him in the castle, which, after a vigorous siege, and an obstinate defence, memorable in the history of those times, was taken, and, by the king's order, demolished, with the exception of the inner part, which was given for a residence to William de Beauchamp, to whom

Henry restored the barony, which he had forfeited in the preceding reign. Of this fortress only a part of the intrenchments, and the site of the keep, now converted into a bowling-green, remain. The ancient barons of Bedford were lord almoners at the coronation of the kings of England, and, as an inheritor of part of the barony, the Marquess of Exeter officiated at that of George IV., receiving the usual perquisite of a silver alms-basin, and the cloth upon which the sovereign walked from Westminster Hall to the Abbey. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., this town, which had been garrisoned for the parliament, surrendered to Prince Rupert, in 1643; the parliamentary troops, under Col. Montague, afterwards entered it by stratagem, and carried off some money and horses, which had been brought thither for the use of the royalists.

The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale, watered by the river Ouse, which is here navigable for barges, and over which is a handsome stone bridge of five arches, erected in 1813, at an expense of £15,137, replacing a former bridge of great antiquity. It consists of one spacious street, nearly a mile in length, intersected at right angles by several smaller streets, and is rapidly increasing, from the advantages of gratuitous education at the excellent and richly endowed free schools, adapted to every class of the community, operating as an inducement to families to settle here; it is well paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. Races are held in the spring and autumn, a king's plate having been run for, for the first time, at the autumnal meeting of 1832; assemblies take place during the winter; a small theatre is opened occasionally; there is a public library, with an extensive and well-assorted collection of valuable books, and a museum; and several book-clubs have been established. The principal branches of manufacture are those of lace and straw-plate, in which many women and children are employed; a good deal of iron is manufactured into agricultural implements, and a considerable trade in corn and coal, by means of the Ouse, is carried on with Lynn and the intermediate places. The market-days are Monday, for pigs only; and Saturday, for corn and provisions: the former market is held in the southern, and the latter in the northern, division of the town. The fairs are on the first Tuesday in Lent, April 21st, July 6th, Aug. 21st, Oct. 12th, and Dec. 19th, for cattle; and there is a wool fair also on the 6th of July. The GOVERNMENT, until 1836, was in accordance with a charter of incorporation granted by Charles II., confirming the prescriptive privileges of the borough and the charters previously granted; but by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV. c. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 17 councillors, exclusively of the mayor, who belongs to the last-named class; and the borough is divided into two wards, the municipal and parliamentary boundaries being the same. The mayor is a justice of the peace by virtue of his office, and four other gentlemen have been appointed justices, concurrently with the county magistrates. The borough first sent representatives to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has returned two members; the mayor is returning officer. The assizes and quarter-sessions for the county are held in the town, where also the election of the knights of the shire takes place; the sessions-house, rebuilt in 1753, is a neat stone edifice, in St. Paul's-square. The county gaol, rebuilt in 1801, is a handsome structure, surrounded by a high brick wall at the north-western entrance into the town, and contains seven wards or divisions for the classification of prisoners, with airing-yards, in one of which is a tread-mill. The county penitentiary, or new house of correction, a large brick building on the road to Kettering, was erected in 1819.

The borough comprises the PARISHES of St. Cuthbert, St. John, St. Mary, St. Paul, and St. Peter Martin. The parish of St. Cuthbert comprises about 250 acres by measurement. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £129: the tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1795. The parish of St. John contains by computation 18 acres. The living is a rectory not in charge, with the mastership of St. John's hospital, in the town, annexed; net income, about £380: the advowson till lately belonged to the corporation. The church is a neat structure, in the later English style, with a handsome tower, but it has been much modernised. The parish of St. Mary contains 490 acres, of which 275 acres are plough land, and 215 pasture; the soil is gravel. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 4. 9½.; net income, £273; patron, Bishop of Lincoln: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1797. The church is in the later English style, with a plain square tower. The parish of St. Paul contains 771a. 1r. 34p., of which the greater part is arable, the pasture being chiefly on the banks of the Ouse; the surface is level, rising gradually on the north towards Clapham hill. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of Lord Carteret, with a net income of £230; the glebe consists of about 63 acres. The church, of which a portion was built in the 12th century, is a spacious and venerable structure, partly in the early, and partly in the decorated English style, with a handsome tower surmounted by an octagonal spire, and a north and south porch in the later style. An additional church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected, in the pointed style, in 1839-40, by subscription, aided by £500 from the Incorporated Society; it contains 1000 sittings, of which 500 are free; and Lord Carteret has contributed £2700 towards its endowment. The parish of St. Peter Martin comprises 547a. 3r. 18p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 13. 1½., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £204: the tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1795. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower, the upper part of which has been recently restored, and having, at the southern entrance, a beautiful Norman arch. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Moravians; and a chapel has lately been erected, denominated the Primitive Episcopal or Reformed Church of England, the minister of which styles himself Bishop.

The Free Grammar school of the Bedford charity was founded in 1556, and endowed with property, consisting of houses and land, by Sir William Harpur, a native of the town, and lord mayor of London in 1561, whose statue, in white marble, is placed in a niche over the entrance: it has eight exhibitions of £80 per annum each, tenable for four years, in either of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, six of which are restricted to boys whose parents are inhabitants of the town, and the remaining two are open to all scholars educated in the school, whether or not children of inhabitants. Under the same endowment there are an English commercial school for 196 boys, a national school for boys and girls, and an hospital for the maintenance and education of fifty children of both sexes: the entire amount given annually in apprentice fees is £1500. Handsome school premises in connexion with the charity have been lately erected, to which an extensive addition in a corresponding style of architecture has been since made. From the same fund were founded and endowed twenty almshouses, each containing four apartments, for ten aged men and ten aged women, decayed housekeepers; and forty-six additional houses have since been erected, on the northern side of Dame Alice-street, so called in honour of the founder's lady. The sum of £800 is annually given, in marriage portions of £20 each, to maidens of good character, in the town, (being daughters of resident householders belonging to either of the parishes,) £500 for the relief of decayed housekeepers, and other pecuniary donations to the poor, all arising from the same endowment, which, owing to the increased rental of the estate, yields an annual income of more than £13,000. A school was founded in 1727, and endowed with lands producing £46. 10. per annum, by Mr. Alexander Leith; and a Green-coat school, now united to the national school, was established in 1760, and endowed with £33. 15. 6., per annum, by Alderman Newton, of Leicester, for twenty-five boys, for clothing whom the endowment is now appropriated.

The house of industry, erected by act of parliament, in 1796, at a cost of £5000, is now the workhouse of the Bedford union, which comprises forty-four parishes and places, and contains a population of 31,767. The county lunatic asylum, a handsome brick building on the road to Amptill, was erected in 1812, at an expense, including the furniture, of £17,975, and will accommodate sixty-five patients. The county infirmary, on the same road, is a substantial edifice, with a stone front, towards the erection and endowment of which the late Samuel Whitbread, Esq., gave £10,000, and Lord Hampden £1000; it contains a small museum, and a medical library consisting of nearly 2000 volumes. The Marquess of Tavistock, at the election for the county in 1826, presented £2000 to the institution, in lieu of entertaining the freeholders; and the Duke of Bedford contributes £100 per annum. Eight almshouses, for unmarried persons of either sex, were founded and endowed in 1679, by Mr. Thomas Christie. An hospital, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is supposed to have been established and partly endowed by Robert de Parys; its revenue, at the Dissolution of religious houses, was £21. 0. 8.; the charity was then confirmed, and the mastership is now annexed to the rectory of St. John's. A monastery of uncertain foundation existed here at a very early period, in the chapel of which Offa, King of Mercia, who had been a great benefactor to it, was buried; the chapel being afterwards undermined by the Ouse, sunk with the tomb of that monarch into the river. About three-quarters of a mile west of the town, on the bank of the river, are some remains of the conventual buildings of Caldwell Priory, which was instituted in the reign of John, by Robert, son of William de Houghton, for brethren of the order of the Holy Cross, and the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £148. 15. 10. At Newenham, a mile east of the town, are considerable vestiges of a priory of Black canons, which, in the reign of Henry II., was removed thither from Bedford, where it had been originally founded by Simeon Beauchamp; and at Elstow church, formerly Helenstowe, two miles distant, on the road to Clophill, are the interesting ruins of a nunnery, established by Judith, niece of William the Conqueror, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and to St. Helen, mother of Constantine the Great; the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £325. 2. 1. John Bunyan, author of the "Pilgrim's Progress," was confined for twelve years and a half in the county gaol, from which he was ultimately released on the intercession of the Bishop of Lincoln. Bedford confers the title of Duke on the noble family of Russell.

BEDFORD, a district chapelry, in the parish and union of LEIGH, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Leigh; containing 4187 inhabitants. The manufacture of muslin and fustian is extensively carried on. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas, was erected in 1840, by grants from the Commissioners and the Diocesan Society, and is a neat structure of brick, with a tower; net income of the incumbent, £150. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Roman Catholics.

BEDFORD-CIRCUS, a precinct and chapelry, in the county of the city of EXETER, S. division of DEVON; containing 190 inhabitants.

BEDFORDSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north and north-east by Huntingdonshire, on the east by the county of Cambridge, on the south-east and south by that of Hertford, on the south-west and west by that of Buckingham, and on the north-west by that of Northampton; it lies between the parallels of $51^{\circ} 50'$ and $52^{\circ} 22'$ (N. Lat.), and between the meridians of $9'$ and $42'$ (W. Lon.), and includes 463 square miles, or 296,320 statute acres. There are 21,235 inhabited houses, 519 uninhabited, and 210 in the progress of erection; and the population amounts to 107,936, of whom 52,190 are males, and 55,746 females. At the time of the Roman conquest of Britain, this territory formed part of the possessions of the Cassii; and on the consolidation of the Roman dominion, it was included in the division of Southern Britain, called Flavia Casaiensis. During the heptarchy, the northern part appears to have been occupied by the South Mercians, and the southern by the East Saxons. Bedfordshire, by the act founded on the recommendation of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, is now within the diocese of Ely, and province of Canterbury; it forms an archdeaconry, in which are included the deaneries of Bedford, Clapham, Dunstable, Eaton, Fleet, and Shefford; and contains 123 parishes. For purposes of civil jurisdiction it is divided into nine hundreds, namely, Barford, Biggleswade, Clifton, Flitt, Manshead, Redbornestoke, Stodden, Willey, and Wixamtree; and it contains the borough, market, and county town of Bedford, the corporate and market town of Dunstable; and the market-towns of Amptill, Biggleswade, Harrold, Leighton-Buzzard, Luton, Potton, and Woburn. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, and two burgesses for the borough of Bedford: the county is included in the Norfolk circuit, and the assizes and sessions are held in the shire-hall at Bedford, at which town are the county gaol and old house of correction, and the penitentiary or new house of correction.

The form of the county is a very irregular parallelogram, the sides of which are deeply indented by projecting, and in some instances nearly isolated, portions of the adjoining shires. The soil comprises every species commonly seen in upland districts, from the strongest clay to the lightest sand; although the various kinds are frequently found in remarkably small patches, and so internixed that no accurate delineation of them can be given. The agricultural improvements that have taken place in modern times, but which have not been very extensively introduced, are mainly owing to the exertions of the 5th Duke of Bedford. The county has long been noted for its abundant produce of wheat and barley, the Vale of Bedford being one of the finest corn districts in the county; rye and oats are cultivated only to a limited extent, as beans are thought more profitable, and on the clay soils are less exhausting than oats. The natural meadows on the banks of the rivers are distinguished for their richness, but the quantity of pasture land is not very considerable; in the southern part of the county, however, and in the neighbourhoods of Ampthill and Woburn more especially, are many large dairy-farms, the produce of which, being chiefly butter, is sent to the London market. The breeding and fattening of calves is carried on in the vicinity of Biggleswade. The woods occupy about 7000 acres, and are almost wholly situated on the slopes of the hills, which consist of cold wet woodland clays; and various extensive plantations have been made by the principal proprietors of land. The high chalky downs, which constitute a large portion of the southernmost part of the county, comprise about 4000 acres of bleak and barren land, in many parts consisting only of a mass of hard chalk, called hurlock, or clunch, with a slight covering of loamy soil, barely sufficient to nourish a scanty crop of indifferent herbage. The northern acclivities of the Chiltern hills are, in many places, the steepest in the county, and are totally inaccessible to the plough; but, with the exception of this tract, the waste lands occupy only a very small proportion of its surface. The Manufactures are almost entirely confined to the platting of straw and the making of thread-lace, the latter being pursued in every part of the county, excepting only in the southern districts, where it has been superseded by the straw manufacture. Straw-platting was formerly confined to the chalk district, at the southernmost extremity of the county, but was so much encouraged about the commencement of the present century, as to spread rapidly over the whole southern part of it, as far as Woburn, Ampthill, and Shefford. Here many of the male, and nearly the whole female, population are employed in this manufacture; in like manner as those of the middle and northern parts are in making thread-lace. A considerable quantity of mats is made in the vicinity of the Ouse, to the north-west of Bedford. The principal rivers are the Ouse and the Ivel, the former of which becomes navigable at Bedford, and the latter at Biggleswade, and they unite at Tempsford. The Grand Junction canal crosses a small south-western portion of the county, in the valley of the Ouzel, near Leighton-

Buzzard; and, in the vicinity of the same town, the London and Birmingham railway runs, for a short distance, parallel with the course of the Ouse, but does not pass through the county.

Bedfordshire contained the Roman station called by Antonine Durocbriva, and by Richard of Cirencester Forum Dianae, at Dunstable; and that designated by Ptolemy Σαλῆραι, and by the geographer of Ravennas Salinae, near the village of Sandy. It was intersected by the great Roman roads Ikeneld-street and Watling-street, by a military way running for a considerable distance within its south-eastern border, and by several vicinal ways. The most remarkable military intrenchment is that called Totternhoe Castle, on the brow of a high hill about two miles to the north-west of Dunstable, consisting of a lofty circular mount surrounded by ditch and ramparts: a little south-eastward of this is a camp in the form of a parallelogram, about 500 feet long, and 250 broad. About a mile from Dunstable is the large circular encampment called Maiden Bower, about 2500 feet in circumference, and formed by a single ditch and rampart: there is another extensive fortification of the same kind, and nearly of a circular form, near Leighton-Buzzard; a third circular intrenchment, 112 feet in diameter, is situated about four miles from Bedford, on the road to Eaton-Socon; and on a hill overlooking the site of the ancient Salinae, is a large Roman camp of an irregular oblong form. At the period of the Reformation, there were fourteen religious houses, besides a commandery of the Knights Hospitallers, six hospitals, and one college of priests: the most considerable remains are those of Elstow Abbey and Dunstable Priory, and there are smaller vestiges of Warden Abbey, of the Grey friars' Monastery at Bedford, and of the priories of Bushmead, Harrold, Newenham, and Caldwell. Of ancient castles there are few remains, except the strong earthworks which yet mark their sites, and of which the most remarkable are situated at Arlsey, Bedford, Bletsoe, Cainhoe, Mappershall, Puddington, Ridgmont, Risinghoe, Sutton, Thurleigh, Toddington, and Yielding. Among the mansions of the landed proprietors, those most worthy of particular notice are Woburn Abbey, and Ampthill, Luton Hoo, Wrest, Brogborough, Bletsoe, and Melchbourn Parks. There are mineral springs at Barton, Bedford, Bletsoe, Blunham, Bromham, Bushmead, Clapham, Cranfield, Holcutt, Milton-Ernest, Odell, Pertenhall, Risley, Silsoe, and Turvey; they possess different properties, some being saline, and others chalybeate, but none of them are much frequented.

BEDHAMPTON, a parish, in the union of HAVANT, hundred of PORTSDOWN, Fareham and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (W.) from Havant; containing 533 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2415 acres, about one-half of which is under tillage, and the other divided in nearly equal portions between woodland and pasture; the soil in the lower part is a rich black loam, and in the upper part a strong clay; there are some chalk-pits, and two extensive flour-mills. The village is delightfully situated on the shore of Langston harbour, and commands some splendid views: there are some fine springs of water, to one of which considerable medicinal qualities are attributed. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 9.; patron, Rev. Henry Reid: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £320. 10., and the glebe consists of 26 acres. The church is a very neat structure.

BEDINGFIELD, or BEDINGFELD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Eye; containing 336 inhabitants, and comprising 1753*a. l. r.* 7*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of J. J. Bedingfield, Esq., whose family received their name from the parish: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, and the glebe consists of 3 acres, to which is attached a good parsonage-house. The church is in the early English style, and has a nave and chancel, with an embattled tower. A national school is supported by subscription. The produce of land to the amount of about £35 per annum is partly applied to the repairing of the church, and partly to general purposes; and £15 per annum, from land left by B. Bedingfield and S. Pakes, are distributed among the poor. There are several ancient moated houses; and a few years ago some silver coins were found of Edward I.; and a curious leaden seal of Pope Innocent VI. was dug up in the glebe.

BEDINGHAM (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of LODDON, E. division of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Bungay; containing 316 inhabitants. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1841. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5; patron and impropiator, J. W. Gooch, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £280. 10., and the vicarial for one of £141. 3.; and the glebe comprises about 11 acres. The church consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a chapel at the east end of each aisle, and a circular tower, of which the upper part is octagonal; the font is curiously sculptured, and in the chancel are some handsome monuments to the Stow family. Another church, dedicated to St. Mary, formerly stood in the churchyard; and the living consisted of medieties, which have long been united.

BEDLINGTON (St. Cuthbert), a parish, in the union of MORPETH, E. division of CHESTER ward, county of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Morpeth; forming a detached portion of the shire, lying at the south-eastern corner of Castle ward, in Northumberland, with which county it is connected for parliamentary purposes; and containing 3155 inhabitants, of whom 2023 are in the township of Bedlington. This district was purchased about the beginning of the tenth century by Cutheard, second bishop of Chester, who gave it to the see, by which means it was annexed in jurisdiction to the body of the county palatine lying between the Tyne and the Tees; it anciently had courts and officers of justice within its own limits, and these were appointed under commission from the bishop of Durham, and consisted as well of justices, escheators, and sheriffs, as of coroners and all other appropriate officers. The town stands on high ground, and in a pleasant situation, and consists principally of one long street of considerable width, forming a kind of sloping avenue to the river Blyth, which glides past, between steep banks. The parish, commonly called Bedlingtonshire, and including the townships of North Blyth, Cambois, Choppington, Netherton, and East and West Sleekburn, is on the coast of the North Sea, and is bounded on the north by the Wansbeck, and on the south by the Blyth, which is navigable for small craft, and affords facility of conveyance for the produce of the Bedlington iron-works. At these works, which are among the oldest and most extensive in the kingdom, are manufactured chain-cables, bolts, bar and sheet-iron, and all the heavier articles in wrought iron, which are conveyed to the port of Blyth, where they are shipped for London: the buildings occupy an exceedingly romantic site, the banks on each side of the river rising to a very considerable height, while the impatient waters hasten rapidly along, and, in passing over a dam, form a very beautiful cataract. There are also some extensive collieries, and several quarries producing grindstones, scythe-stones, and whetstones of superior quality. Within the limits of the township is Hartford House, a fine seat, erected by the late William Burdon, Esq., and delightfully placed on the north bank of the Blyth. Petty-sessions for the district are held occasionally. The LIVING, of which the net income is £454, is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Durham, who are also appropriators: the church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, whose remains are said to have rested here, on the flight of the monks from Durham, upon the approach of the Conqueror, in 1069, was enlarged and repaired in 1818, on which occasion three monumental stones were found, at a depth of five feet below the surface, of the usual coffin-lid shape, one of which was inscribed with the name of the person whose remains it protected. A school is conducted on the national plan, and chiefly maintained by subscription; and there is also a school supported by the Bedlington Iron Company. At the eastern extremity of the village is a petrifying spring, called Spinner's Well.

BEDMINSTER (St. John the Baptist), a parish, and the head of a union, partly in the county of the city of BRISTOL, and partly in the hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, E. division of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by W.) from Bristol; containing, with the tythings of Bishport and Knowle, 17,862 inhabitants. This large and populous place anciently consisted only of a few cottages; but, from its proximity to Bristol, from which it is separated only by the new cut formed for the conversion of the natural channel of the river Avon into a floating harbour, and also from its situation on the main road from the western counties, it has become a considerable suburb to that city. Here are tanneries and rope-walks, and many of the inhabitants are employed in collieries. The parish comprises about 5000 acres, chiefly pasture land, and in the environs are several gardens, with the produce of which the occupiers supply the city of Bristol. It constitutes the endowment of a prebend in the cathedral of Salisbury, and a court-leet for the prebend is held here. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of St. Mary's and St. Thomas' Redcliffe and Abbot's-Leigh annexed, valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 4., and in the gift of the Prebendary of Bedminster and Redcliffe: the appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £69, and the vicarial for one of £400. The church displays various portions of ancient architecture, with modern insertions: a spire on the tower was thrown down in 1563. St. Paul's district church, in the later English style, with a tower, was erected in 1831, by grant of the Parliamentary Commissioners, at an expense of £8673. 6.:

the living is a vicarage not in charge; net income, £180; patron, Vicar of Bedminster. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Methodists, of which that belonging to the Independents is one of the most handsome and spacious buildings of the kind in the kingdom; and the principal entrance is adorned with Grecian columns, and the exterior coated with freestone. Schools are maintained by voluntary contributions, and an hospital, including also a dispensary, has been recently instituted, and is liberally supported. About the close of the twelfth century, Robert de Berkeley founded an hospital, dedicated to St. Catherine, for a master and several poor brethren; it stood on the western side of a street near the extremity of Brightlow bridge, and was subsequently used as a glass-manufactory, but has since been converted into small tenements. Another hospital was founded by a member of the same family, but every vestige of it has disappeared. The poor law union of Bedminster comprises twenty-three parishes and places, and contains a population of 36,268.

BEDNALL, with ACTON-TRUSSELL, a chapelry and township, in the parish of BASWICH, union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Stafford; containing 574 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1018 acres, of which 898 are cultivated and chiefly arable, and 120 are plantations. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Acton-Trussell: the chapel is a small old building, dedicated to All Saints.

BEDSTONE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of KNIGHTON, hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 4½ miles (N. E.) from Knighton; containing 139 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 908 acres, of which the surface is diversified with hill and dale, and the soil in general a sharp gravelly earth. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.; net income, £230; patron, E. Rogers, Esq. A school is partly supported by subscription.

BEDWARDINE (St. JOHN), a parish, in the union of WORCESTER, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 1 mile (S. W. by W.) from Worcester; containing 2663 inhabitants, and comprising about 250 acres. The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence rising from the western bank of the Severn, by which it is separated from the city of Worcester. A fair is held on the Friday before Palm-Sunday, on which day (by ancient usage, originating in a grant of certain privileges by the prior of Worcester, in the reign of Edward IV.) the mayor and corporation of Worcester walk in procession through the village. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £635; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The church is an ancient edifice, partly Norman, but chiefly in the later English style. Charity schools for boys and girls, afterwards united, were respectively founded and endowed by Milbarrow Doelittle and Mercy Herbert, in 1737, each having granted land for the purpose, now producing £45 per annum: there is also a rent-charge of £25, bequeathed by Timothy Nourse, in 1698, for apprenticing and clothing children.

BEDWARDINE, ST. MICHAEL, county of WORCESTER.—See MICHAEL (St.), BEDWARDINE.

BEDWAS (St. BARROG), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT, partly in the hundred of CAERPHILLY, county of GLAMORGAN (South Wales), but chiefly in the Lower division of the hundred of WENTLLOOG, county of MONMOUTH; containing 800 inhabitants, of whom 458 are in the hamlet of Upper, and 284 in that of Lower, Bedwas, 9 miles (W. by N.) from Newport. The parish, which is intersected by the river Rumney, abounds with coal, of which some mines are in full operation. The living is a rectory, with Ruddy annexed, valued in the king's books at £10. 14. 9½., and in the patronage of the Crown: the great tithes of Bedwas, belonging to the Bishop of Llandaff, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £187. 12. 6., and the bishop has also 100 acres of glebe. A school is endowed with £23 per annum, derived from land.

BEDWELTY (St. SANNAN), a parish, in the union of ABERGAVENNY, division of BEDWELTY, hundred of WENTLLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, 16 miles (N. W.) from Newport; containing, with the hamlets of Ishlawrcoed, Ushlawrcoed, and Mamhole, 22,413 inhabitants. The parish contains extensive veins of iron-stone, and is intersected in every direction by numerous tramroads; the Rumney railway also commences here, and joins the Sirhowey railway, in the parish of Bassaleg. There are several foundries on a very large scale, for an account of which, see Tredegar. The Rock inn is a polling-place for the election of knights of the shire. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £192; patron, Bishop of Llandaff. The church is of early English architecture: the churchyard, which commands extensive and variegated prospects, is surrounded with some trifling remains of an intrenchment. A district church has been erected at Tredegar, in the parish, by aid of grants from the Parliamentary Commissioners and the Incorporated Society; and in 1839, an act was passed, to empower the Rhymney Iron Company to erect and endow another church. There are several places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists; and a school for girls is supported by contributions.

BEDWIN, GREAT (St. MARY), an incorporated market-town and parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINWARDSSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 5½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Hungerford, 23 (N.) from Salisbury, and 70½ (W. by S.) from London; including the tythings of Crofton with Wythall, East and West Grafton, Martin, Wexcombe, and Wilton, and containing 2178 inhabitants. This place, supposed by Dr. Stukeley to be the Leucomagus of Ravennas, derives its name from the Saxon Beegwyn, or Bedgwyn, expressive of its situation on an eminence in a chalky soil. It was anciently a city of great extent, and the metropolis of Cissa, one of the three sons of Ælla, the Saxon chieftain, who invaded Britain in 477; and Cissa, when viceroy of Wiltshire and part of Berkshire, is said to have enlarged and strengthened Chisbury Castle, now a noble relic of Saxon earthwork, about a mile to the north-east of the town, in the parish of Little Bedwin. In 674, a battle was fought here between Wulfhere, King of Mercia, and Æscuin, a nobleman in the service of Saxburga, Queen of Wessex, in which, after a desperate struggle, the latter was victorious. The parish comprises by measurement 9353 acres of land, chiefly arable, with a good quantity of wood, and some pasture and down; the soil consists principally of good mellow earth, resting on chalk; the surface presents numerous softly-rounded eminences, crowned with luxuriant plantations overhanging the picturesque valleys; and to the south the hills rise higher, and stretch towards Salisbury Plain. The Kennet and Avon canal passes through the parish, and affords a medium for the conveyance of excellent coal. The market is on Tuesday; and fairs are held on April 23rd and July 26th; the market-house is an ancient building situated in the principal street.

A portreeve, who is customarily called mayor, a bailiff, and other officers, are annually chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The borough sent representatives to all the parliaments of Edward I., from the close of whose reign to the 9th of Henry V., there were frequent intermissions; but since then it constantly returned two members, until its disfranchisement by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 10.; net income, £212; patron and impropriator, Marquess of Ailesbury. The Dean of Sarum exercises episcopal jurisdiction over the parish, and appoints a surrogate. The church, the only remaining one of seven which are said to have anciently existed here, appears to have been erected at various times, and exhibits good specimens in all the styles of architecture, from the Norman to the later English: it is a cruciform structure, with a lofty embattled tower rising from the intersection, and contains several ancient memorials, among which are the figure of a Knight Templar, and the monument of Sir John Seymour, father of the Protector Somerset, and of Lady Jane Seymour, consort of Henry VIII., who were born at Wolf Hall, now a farm-house, in the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school for the instruction of ten boys was endowed in 1825, by William Cox, who bequeathed £8 per annum; and Sir Andrew Hungerford, in 1694, left an annuity of £10 for apprenticing poor boys. A national school has been built at an expense of about £250. Half a mile to the north-east are some vestiges of a Roman building, now scarcely discoverable; and a fine tessellated pavement was preserved till within the last few years. Dr. Thomas Willis, a celebrated physician, was born here in 1621.

BEDWIN, LITTLE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Hungerford; containing 597 inhabitants. This place, in some documents called East Bedwyn, is intersected by the Bath and Bristol road, and by the Kennet and Avon canal, and comprises by measurement 4204 acres of good arable and pasture land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Marquess of Ailesbury: the tithes have been commuted for rent-charges of £33. 10. and £256. 12., the former payable to his lordship, and the latter to the incumbent. The Dean of Sarum exercises episcopal jurisdiction in the parish, and appoints a surrogate. The church is a handsome structure in the decorated and later English styles, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire. Within the mounds of Chisbury Castle, comprising an area of fifteen acres, are the remains of a chapel, now used as a barn: the spot is said to have derived its name from Cissa, a Saxon chieftain, who resided here during the early period of the heptarchy, and the chapel is supposed to have belonged to some religious house established at an early period, of which the history is not known. The ancient Wansdyke traverses the parish in a direction nearly east and west.

BEDWORTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Coventry; containing 4253 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Coventry to Leicester, and comprises 2157a. 2r. 38p., of which the soil is fertile, and the substrata are chiefly coal, iron-stone, and limestone; the rateable annual value of the mining property being returned at £1116. There are two collieries in operation; iron-stone is exported in great quantities, and limestone is extensively quarried, and burnt into lime. The throwing of silk, also, and manufacture of ribbons, are carried on, employing from 1500 to 2000 hands. The Coventry and the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canals unite in the parish, and from the principal colliery a tram-road has been laid down for the conveyance of the produce; the rateable annual value of the canal property in the parish is £1273. Fairs for cattle are held, but they are not much frequented. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 11½., and in the gift of the Earl of Aylesford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £270, and the glebe comprises 200 acres. The church, in the year 1827, underwent a thorough repair, and was considerably enlarged. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. The Rev. Nicholas Chamberlain, a former rector, left for charitable purposes, by will dated June 24th, 1715, property now producing about £1000 per annum, to be applied to the erection of schools and almshouses: upwards of 500 children are taught on the national plan under the will; and twelve aged men, and the same number of women, with a nurse to attend them, are lodged in the houses.

BEEBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Leicester; containing 115 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1418 acres, of which 219 are arable, and the remainder pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 2. 6., and in the gift of the Earl of Shaftesbury: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £300, and the glebe consists of 34 acres, with an excellent residence.

Corporation Seal.

The church is a handsome structure in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by about 10 feet of a spire, which was commenced, but not completed. A school is supported by the rector.

BEECH, a liberty, in the parishes of STONE and SWINNERTON, union of STONE, N. and S. divisions of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD; containing 120 inhabitants.

BEECHAMWELL, a district, comprising the parish of All Saints, and the united parishes of St. John and St. Mary, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Swaffham; containing 246 inhabitants. The district consists of 3813 acres, of which about 2000 are rabbit warren, the whole the property of J. Motteux, Esq., lord of the manor. The living of All Saints is a discharged rectory, with that of Shingham annexed, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £98, and the glebe contains 3 acres: the church is a ruin. St. John's and St. Mary's are discharged rectories consolidated, valued jointly at £9. 13. 4.; net income, £191; patron, Mr. Motteux. The church of St. John's was taken down many years since; that of St. Mary's is an ancient structure, thoroughly repaired in 1835. A school was erected by Mr. Motteux, in 1835.

BEECH-HILL, a tything, in the parish of STRATFIELD-SAYE, union of BASINGSTOKE, hundred of READING, county of BERKS, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Reading; containing 261 inhabitants, and comprising S11a. 18p. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

BEECHING, or BEAUCHAMP-STOKE (St. STEPHEN), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 5¼ miles (E. by S.) from Devizes; containing 187 inhabitants. It is situated between the Marlborough downs and Salisbury plain, and comprises about 800 acres of well-cultivated land, of which the soil consists of clay and sandy loam, and a dark rich mould. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 2. 11., and in the gift of George Wyld Henegge, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £285, and there are 30 acres of glebe. On recently opening a tumulus, a considerable quantity of stags' horns and human bones was discovered.

BEEDING (St. PETER), a parish, partly in the union of STEYNING, and partly in that of HORSHAM, hundred of BURBEACH, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX; comprising Upper and Lower Beeding, and containing 1389 inhabitants, of whom 614 are in the former, 1 mile (E.) from Steyning, and 771 in the latter. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £112; patrons and improprators, President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The church consists of a nave and chancel, separated by a screen, with a low embattled tower at the west end, and seems to have had formerly a south aisle, as there are two arches remaining in the south wall. Schools are conducted on the national plan. An alien priory of Benedictine monks was founded about 1075, the revenue of which, amounting to £26. 9. 9., was given to the Magdalen College, in 1459: it stood on the brow of a high bank on the north side of the church, but every vestige of the buildings was removed about fifty years since; when the rectory-house was built upon its site. A large tumulus was opened on Beeding Hill in 1800, in which more than 100 Roman urns were found.

BEEDING, LOWER, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish of BEEDING, union of HORSHAM, hundred of BURBEACH, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Horsham; containing 775 inhabitants. This place, which comprises the forest of St. Leonard and the estate called New Park, is intersected by a branch of the river Arun which has its source within the forest near Ashfold. Iron-stone is found, and building-stone of excellent quality is plentiful, and extensively quarried. In 1840 a church was erected at Plummer's plain, on the road from Handscross to Horsham, by subscription, aided by a grant from the Incorporated Society: it is a neat edifice, and contains about 200 sittings, of which one-half are free. The living is endowed with a rent-charge on land of £135, and is in the gift of the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, who have built a handsome parsonage-house, attached to which are 20 acres of land. A chapel, dedicated to St. John, was erected on the Coolhurst estate in 1839, at the expense of Charles Scrase Dickins, Esq., who also gave the site which includes an extensive cemetery. The celebrated Lord Erskine resided for many years at Holmebush.

BEEDON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of WANTAGE, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from East Ilsley; containing, with the tything of Stanmore, 334 inhabitants, and comprising 2026a. 1r. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 10. 10.: the tithes have been commuted for £171 per annum, of which £27 are payable to Sir J. Reade, Bart., the patron, and £144 to the incumbent, who has also 28½ acres of glebe.

BEEFORD (St. LEONARD), a parish, chiefly in the union of DRIFFIELD, but with portions in the unions of BRIDLINGTON and SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Beeford and Dunnington, and the chapelry of Lissett, and containing 977 inhabitants, of whom 766 are in the township of Beeford, 8 miles (E. S. E.) from Great Driffield. This place is of considerable antiquity, it being recorded in Domesday book that there was a church here at the time of that survey; and this church was given, within a century after the Conquest to the priory of Bridlington, by Ernald de Montbegun. The parish is on the road from Hull, through Beverley, to Bridlington and Scarborough, and comprises about 4000 acres, of which 897 are pasture, 120 woodland, and the remainder arable. The village is long and straggling, and on the road towards Upton are many small garths or inclosures, where foundations of houses seem formerly to have existed. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York, with a net income of £779: the tithes of Beeford township were commuted for land and a money payment in 1766. The church, which stands nearly in the centre of the village, is a spacious edifice, in a rich style of architecture, and consists of a nave, south aisle, and chancel, with a tower, which is of handsome appearance, and presents a good specimen of the later English. At Lissett is a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. James: it is a small building of ancient date; those parts that remain unaltered being, probably, of the twelfth, or the early part of the thirteenth century. A rectory-house was built a few years since. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and a school is conducted on the national plan. An experiment has been made here of the allotment system, with about 20 acres of land divided into 68 gardens, and the advantages derived from the plan have been very great.

BEELEY, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Bakewell; containing 406 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £98; patron, Duke of Devonshire; impropiator, Duke of Rutland: land and a money payment were assigned in lieu of all tithes in 1811. The chapel is dedicated to St. Anne. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £10 per annum from the Duke of Devonshire.

BEELSBY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (S. W.) from Grimsby; containing 181 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2200 acres, and contains some chalk-quarries, which are chiefly used for roads and lime. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell; net income, £450: the glebe consists of about half an acre.

BEENHAM-VALLENCE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of READING, county of BERKS, 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Reading; containing 421 inhabitants. It comprises 1732*a. 1r. 14p.*, and is bordered on the south by the Kennet and Avon canal. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 17.; net income, £211; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Bushnel; impropiator, Sir C. Rich, Bart.: the tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1811. The Rev. J. Stackhouse, author of the History of the Bible, was vicar of the place, and was interred in the church, in which there is a monument to his memory.

BEER, a chapelry, in the parish of SEATON, union of AXMINSTER, hundred of COLYTON, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, 3½ miles (S. S. W.) from Colyton; containing 1231 inhabitants. The Cove of Beer is highly favourable for fishing, and in 1820, Lord Rolle obtained an act for constructing a pier and improving the harbour. Edward Colston bequeathed land, producing about £500 a year, for maintaining and teaching 100 boys of Idstock and Beer. Lady Rolle left £7000 three per cents., for charitable purposes, from which fund almshouses for twenty-five poor fishermen and twenty infirm widows, and schools, have been erected and endowed.

BEER, a tything, in the parish of HIGH HAM, union of LANGPORT, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 45 inhabitants.

BEER-ALSTON, formerly a borough and market-town, in the parish of BEER-FERRIS, union of TAVISTOCK, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Tavistock and S. divisions of DEVON, 14 miles (N.) from Plymouth, and 211 (W. S. W.) from London. This place, about the year

1295, received the grant of a weekly market and an annual fair, which have been for a considerable time discontinued. It is pleasantly situated within a mile of the navigable river Tamar, but consists only of a few mean houses. Some lead-mines, opened in the reign of Edward I., produced abundance of ore, from which a great quantity of silver was separated; after a long period of disuse they were again worked, but their produce had greatly diminished. A portreeve and other officers are annually chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor, which is held under a large tree, where also the election of the parliamentary representatives took place. The elective franchise was conferred in the 27th of Elizabeth, since which time the borough returned two members until its disfranchisement by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. There was formerly a chapel of ease to the rectory of Beer-Ferris. The Independents and Wesleyans have places of worship.

BEER-CROCOMBE (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. W. by N.) from Ilminster; containing 179 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 12. 6., and in the gift of Col. Wyndham: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £185, and there are 56 acres of glebe.

BEER-FERRIS (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of TAVISTOCK, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Tavistock and S. divisions of DEVON, 7½ miles (S. by W.) from Tavistock; containing, with the borough of Beer-Alston, 2142 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the navigable river Tamar, and on the east by the Tavey, which unite at its southern extremity, and fall into the English Channel on the western side of Devonport, thus forming almost a peninsula, twenty-five miles in circumference; the scenery is beautifully diversified with hill and dale. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 1. 0½.; net income, £700; patron, Viscount Valletort. There is a school endowed with £30 per annum.

BEER-HACKET (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Sherborne; containing 103 inhabitants, and comprising 907 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 8½., and in the gift of the Rev. John Munden and W. Helyer, Esq., the latter of whom has every fourth presentation: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £164, and the glebe consists of 38 acres.

BEER-REGIS (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of BEER-REGIS, Wareham division of DORSET, 7 miles (N. W.) from Wareham, and 113 (S. W.) from London; comprising the tythings of Milbourn-Styleham, and Shitterton; and containing 1684 inhabitants. This place, which is supposed by Dr. Stukeley to have been the Ibernium of Ravennas, derives its name from the Saxon Byrig, and the adjunct from its having been held in royal demesne. Elfrida, after the murder of her stepson, is said to have retired hither to avoid suspicion; and King John, who occasionally made this his residence, granted the inhabitants the privilege of a market, in the seventeenth year of his reign. Edward I. made it a free borough, but it does not appear to have ever returned any members to parliament. A great part of the town was destroyed by fire in 1634: it experienced a similar calamity in 1788, and, in 1817, another destructive fire occurred, in which the parish registers were burnt. The parish comprises about 6000 acres, consisting of arable land, lying on chalk, and of which the surface is in general hilly. The town is pleasantly situated on the small river Beer; the houses, in general, are modern and well built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The market was on Wednesday, but has fallen into disuse: a fair is held, Sept. 18th and the four following days, on Woodbury Hill, for horses, horned-cattle, sheep, cloth, and cheese. The LIVING which, in conjunction with Charmouth, formerly constituted the golden prebend in the cathedral of Salisbury, is a vicarage, with Winterbourne-Kingston annexed, valued in the king's books at £25. 5., with a net income of £330, and in the gift of I. S. W. S. E. Drax, Esq., to whom also the impropriation of Beer-Regis belongs; impropiators of Winterbourne-Kingston, E. M. Pleydell, Esq., and others. The great tithes of Beer-Regis have been commuted for a rent-charge of £820. 7. 6., and the vicarial for one of £305. 2. 6. The church is a spacious ancient structure, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A charity school was founded and endowed by Thomas Williams, Esq., in 1719; the annual income is about £20. On Woodbury Hill, about half a mile from the town, is a circular camp, comprehending an area of ten acres; and to the west of it are the site of the ancient chapel of Sancta Anchoretta, and a well, called Anchorer's well. Dr. John Moreton, Archbishop of Canterbury, and a cardinal, and Dr. Tuberville, Bishop of Exeter, were natives of the place.

BEERHALL, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of AXMINSTER, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON.

BEES, ST. (St. BEGA), a parish, in the union of WHITEHAVEN, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; comprising the town of Whitehaven, and the townships of St. Bees, Ennerdale, Eskdale, Wasdale-Head, Hensingham, Kinneyside, Low-side Quarter, Nether Wasdale, Preston Quarter, Rottington, Sandwith, and Weddiker; and containing 19,687 inhabitants, of whom 557 are in the township of St. Bees, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Egremont. The parish extends for about ten miles along the coast, which in some parts is rocky and precipitous, and contains coal, limestone, and freestone; lead-ore is obtained at Kinneyside, where there are smelting-furnaces; and iron-ore was formerly got in Eskdale. A lighthouse, erected in 1717, and subsequently destroyed by fire, was rebuilt in 1822, on a promontory called St. Bees' Head, and is furnished with nine reflectors, affording a strong light, which, from its elevated position, is seen at a great distance. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £103; patron and impropiator, Earl of Lonsdale. The church was formerly the conventual church of a monastery, founded about 650, by Bega, or Begogh, an Irish female, who subsequently received the honour of canonization. The monastery was destroyed by the Danes, but was restored in the reign of Henry I., by William de Meschines, lord of Copeland, as a cell to the abbey of St. Mary at York; and in 1219 it was pillaged by the Scots. Its revenue, at the Dissolution, was estimated at £149. 19. 6. The church is cruciform, having a strong tower of early Norman architecture, but the rest of the edifice is in the decorated English style: the nave is used for the celebration of divine service; and the chancel, which had long lain in a ruinous state, was repaired in 1819, and fitted up as a school of divinity, in connexion with a clerical institution, founded by Dr. Law, a late bishop of Chester, for the benefit of young men intended for holy orders, who do not complete their studies at Oxford or Cambridge, but receive ordination after having studied for a certain period at this place; they can, however, only enter upon their ministry within the province of York. In addition to this, there is a celebrated Free Grammar school, founded by letters-patent, dated April 24th, 1583, obtained by Edmund Grindall, Archbishop of Canterbury, whereby its management is entrusted to a corporation of seven governors, of whom the provost of Queen's College, Oxford, and the rector of Egremont, are always two, the former enjoying the privilege of nominating the master, who chooses an usher. The annual income, arising from land, is £125; and the school enjoys the advantage of a fellowship, and two scholarships at Queen's College, Oxford, with the privilege of sending a candidate to be examined for one of five exhibitions, founded at the same college by Lady Elizabeth Hastings; a fellowship and three scholarships at Pembroke College, Cambridge; a scholarship of £4 a year at Magdalen College, Cambridge; and, in failure of scholars from the school at Carlisle, eligibility to two exhibitions founded by Bishop Thomas, at Queen's College, Oxford.

BEESBY, formerly a distinct parish, now united to Hawerby, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY HAVERSTOE, parts of LINSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Louth; containing 43 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Hawerby: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £221. 17. 7., and there are nearly 44 acres of glebe.

BEESBY-IN-THE-MARSH (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Alford; containing 157 inhabitants. It comprises 1169*a. 2r. 20p.*, of which 627 acres are arable, 518 meadow and pasture, and 26 woodland and plantations: the surface is slightly varied, and the scenery of pleasing character; the soil is a silty clay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £212. 17., and the glebe comprises 42 acres. The church was nearly rebuilt in 1840, at an expense of £300, chiefly by subscription, aided by a parochial rate.

BEESTON, a hamlet, partly in the parish of NORTHILL, and partly in that of SANDY, union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Biggleswade; containing 406 inhabitants.

BEESTON, a township, in the parish of BUNBURY, union of NANTWICH, First division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Tarporley; containing 428 inhabitants. This place takes its name from a castle founded by Ranulph de Blundeville, about 1220, which was made a royal garrison in the war between Henry III. and the confederate barons. In 1643, the castle was held by a detachment of the parliamentary forces, but was subsequently taken by the royalists, who, after sustaining a protracted siege in 1645, were compelled, from want of provisions, to surrender it to the parliamentarians, by whom it was demolished early in the following year. The remains occupy an eminence overlooking the Vale Royal, and consist of part of a tower, which guarded the principal entrance to the inner court, flanked by semicircular bastions, and surrounded by a moat excavated in the solid rock: the outer walls were defended by eight round towers irregularly placed, and now covered with ivy.

BEESTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of ST. FAITH'S, hundred of TAVERHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Norwich; containing 46 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 622 acres, of which 404 are arable, 137 pasture, and 81 woodland; and is intersected by the road from Norwich to North Walsham. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8.; net income, £217; patron, F. R. Reynolds, Esq. There are some slight remains of the church, which was destroyed two or three centuries since. Beeston Old Hall, built in 1610, is a fine specimen of ancient domestic architecture.

BEESTON (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 10 miles (E. N. E.) from Norwich; containing 48 inhabitants, and comprising 518*a*. 1*r*. 2*p*. Beeston Hall, a Gothic mansion in a small park, has long been the residence of the Prestons, one of whom, Jacob Preston, received an emerald ring, still preserved in the family, from Charles I., when upon the scaffold, as a last tribute of affection. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the gift of Sir J. H. Preston, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £136, and there are 31 acres of glebe. The church was nearly rebuilt by the late Sir Thomas Preston. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BEESTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of LAUNDITCH, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Litcham; containing 661 inhabitants. This place is supposed to have been formerly of some importance, the foundations of houses having been discovered in various parts. The parish comprises 2064*a*. 3*r*. 7*p*., of which 1529 acres are arable, 453 pasture, 10 woodland and plantations, and the remainder gardens and roads. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of the Rev. C. B. Barnwell, lord of the manor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £543, and the glebe comprises about 25 acres, with a house. The church is in the later English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school is partly supported by endowment; and 20 acres of land were allotted to the poor at the inclosure in 1814.

BEESTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Nottingham; containing, with the hamlet of Beeston-Ryelands, 2807 inhabitants.

It is bounded on the south-east by the river Trent, and comprises about 1500 acres, the soil of which is light, and lies on gravel. The inhabitants are principally employed in the manufacture of hosiery and lace, and a large silk-mill has recently been erected. A branch of the Nottingham canal, called Beeston Cut, crosses the parish on the south-east, to its junction with the Trent. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 15.; net income, £257; patron, Duke of Devonshire; impropiators, Lord Middleton and B. Strey, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1806. Considerable portions of a Roman road, uniting with the "old Coventry road," in the adjoining parish of Attenborough, and the remains of an ancient building, are discernible. There are some wells in the village, the water of which is slightly chalybeate.

BEESTON, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. PETER, within the liberty of the borough of LEEDS, and locally in the wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (S. W. by S.) from Leeds; consisting of 5 townships, and containing 2175 inhabitants. This chapelry comprises by computation 1409 acres; the surface is varied, rising into eminences of considerable elevation, and the scenery is pleasingly diversified; the substratum abounds with coal of good quality, which has been wrought for more than two centuries, and of which several mines are still in operation. Beeston Hall, the ancient manor-house, is the seat of William Wilkes Hill, Esq., one of the lords of the manor; Beeston Park, the residence of James Leather, Esq., is finely situated, and Cross Flatts House, that of Joseph Rogers, Esq., is a good mansion. The village is on an eminence commanding a view of the town of Leeds, and the surrounding country; the air is remarkably salubrious, and several of the houses are neatly built: the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the collieries and in the woollen manufactures, which are carried on to a great extent in the vicinity. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the incumbency of the Rev. Joseph Wardle, and patronage of the Vicar of Leeds, with a net income of £189, and a glebe-house. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure in the early English style, of which, notwithstanding numerous alterations and repairs, it still retains some well-executed details, and in the east window are some remains of stained glass. A pewter flagon and a plate of the same material have been used in the celebration of the Communion ever since the reign of Richard I.; the cup is of silver, very ancient in form, but without a date. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and some small bequests are distributed among the poor.

BEESTON-REGIS (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Cromer; containing 265 inhabitants. The parish comprises 822*a*. 1*r*. 17*p*., of which 526 acres are arable, 54 meadow, 21 woodland, and the remainder heath and common; the surface is undulated, and the soil clayey and sandy. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £135; the glebe originally consisted of 21 acres, all of which have been washed away by the sea, excepting 4½ acres. The church is chiefly in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower; on the south side of the chancel are two sedilia of stone, and a piscina; and in the north aisle is an altar-tomb, with effigies in brass. A school was erected in 1836. Here are some remains, consisting chiefly of the west end of the church, with a small tower, and part of the chapter-house of a priory of Augustine canons, founded in the reign of John, by Lady Isabel de Cressey, and the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £50. 6. 4.

BEETHAM (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND; containing, with the townships of Beetham, Farleton, Haverbrack, Methop with Ulpha, and Witherslack, 1656 inhabitants, of whom 845 are in the township of Beetham, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Burton-in-Kendal. The parish comprises by computation 12,000 acres, and consists of lofty mountains, situated at the south-western extremity of the county, on both sides of the estuary of the river Kent, which is navigable for small craft as far as the hamlet of Storth, and on the shore of which are two wharfs, where slate and other articles are shipped for various ports on the western coast. The Kendal and Lancaster canal, the river Belo, and some smaller streams, also intersect the parish, through which a new road was formed between Lancaster and Ulverstone, about 1820. The sands are well adapted for bathing, though the place is not much resorted to for that purpose. There is a manufactory for paper and pasteboard at the village, and limestone abounds within the parish.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 7. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster; net income, £159; impropiator, G. Wilson, Esq.: the glebe consists of about 68 acres. A grammar school, built about 1663, and rebuilt in 1827, has an endowment of £40 per annum, arising from land; and a school, commenced in 1830, is partly supported by charity. Near the grammar school-house stood an ancient chapel, dedicated to St. John, where human bones have frequently been dug up: the site has been converted into a garden. Beetham Hall, formerly a fortified mansion, situated within a spacious park, is now in ruins; and at a short distance to the south are the ruins of Helslack and Arnside towers, which were probably erected to guard the bay of Morecambe, there being remains of similar towers on the opposite shore. In digging a grave near one of the pillars in the nave of the church, in Aug. 1834, upwards of 100 silver coins, chiefly of the reigns of William the Conqueror, and his son William Rufus, with a few of Edward the Confessor and Canute the Dane, were discovered, in a fine state of preservation.

BEETLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of LAUNDITCH, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. by W.) from East Dereham; containing 394 inhabitants. The parish, into which a portion of the ancient parish of Bittering has merged, comprises about 2200 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to East Bilney, and valued in the king's books at £9. 7. 11.; net income, £387; patron, John Collison, Esq. The church is chiefly in the decorated English style, with a square tower; on the south side of the chancel is a piscina of good design.

BEGBROOK (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Woodstock; containing 110 inhabitants, and comprising 609*a.* 2*r.* 39*p.* The living is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of Brasenose College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £145, and there are 37 acres of glebe. The church is in the Norman style, of which it contains some good details. A school is partly supported by subscription. A little westward from the church is an ancient military work, called Round Castle.

BEGGARMONDS, a hamlet, in the township of BUCKDEN, parish of ARNCLIFFE, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWACROSS, W. riding of YORK. This place is remarkable for its remote and almost inaccessible situation, near the source of the river Wharfe. It takes its name from a rivulet called Beckur, and was once a lodge for the keepers of Buckden forest, during the time of the Percys; in ancient documents it is designated "a lodge in a vast wilderness," and in 1499 consisted of four tenements only, the number of which is not much greater at the present day.

BEIGHTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ROTHERHAM, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 6 miles (E. S. E.) from Sheffield; containing 1121 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the banks of the river Rother, comprises by measurement 3009 acres, and contains several coal-mines, belonging to Earl Manvers; stone is quarried for building and for mending roads, and the manufacture of scythes is carried on in the hamlet of Hackenthorpe. The North-Midland railway passes through the parish, and has a small station here. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with some rectorial tithes of Hackenthorpe, and valued in the king's books at £6. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £250; patron, Earl Manvers: the tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1796, and the glebe consists of about 36 acres, with a parsonage-house. The church is internally very neat, and was repaired in 1816; on a beam of the roof is a date, supposed to be 1100. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans at Hackenthorpe. In 1666, William Jessop bequeathed land, producing about £14 per annum, for apprenticing children, and other charitable purposes; and a school has an endowment of about £5 per annum. Some ancient earth-works on the east bank of the Rother, about half a mile from Beighton, are thought to have formed part of a Roman station.— See article on HACKENTHORPE.

BEIGHTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BLOFIELD, hundred of WALSHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. W. by S.) from Acle; comprising 1016*a.* 37*p.*, and containing 288 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, and in the gift of R. Fellowes, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £420, and there are 10 acres of glebe. The church, chiefly in the decorated style, consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with a low square tower, and contains remains of a carved screen.

BEIGHTON, county of SUFFOLK.— See BEYTON.

BELAUGH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Coltishall; containing 161 inhabitants. It comprises 854*a. 3r. 18p.*, of which 647 acres are arable, 182 pasture and meadow, and 21 water. The village is picturesquely situated on the summit and side of an abrupt acclivity, which rises within a semicircular curve of the river Bure. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Scot-tow consolidated, valued in the king's books at £6; patron, Bishop of Norwich. The tithes have been com-muted for a rent-charge of £222, and there are 2 acres of glebe, with a small house; a rent-charge of £12. 5. is also payable to the rector out of the parish of Hove-ton, St. John. The church was thoroughly repaired in 1831. A school is chiefly supported by the rector.

BELBANK, a township, in the parish of BEW-CASTLE, union of LONGTOWN, ESKDALE ward, E. divi-sion of CUMBERLAND; containing 445 inhabitants. There are collieries and lime-works at Oakshaw, in the township.

BELBANK, a township, in the parish of STAPLE-TON, union of LONGTOWN, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N.) from Brampton; con-taining 124 inhabitants.

BELBROUGHTON (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BROMSGROVE, Lower division of the hun-dred of HALFSHIRE, Stourbridge and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Bromsgrove; containing 1765 inhabitants. The parish is divided into the manors of Belbroughton, Brian's Bell, Fairfield, and Broomhill; and is bounded on the north by a detached portion of Staffordshire and a part of Salop: it comprises 4733 acres, and is intersected by the road from Bromsgrove to Stourbridge. The manufacture of lay-knives and scythes is carried on extensively; and fairs take place on the last Monday in April, and the Monday before St. Luke's-day. A sheriff's court, for the recovery of small debts, is held on the third Wednesday in every month. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19; net in-come, £1244; patrons, President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. There is an endowment of about £10 per annum for the instruction of children.

BELBY, a township, in the parish and union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK, 1½ mile (E. by N.) from Howden; containing 58 inhabitants. It is situated on the road between How-den and Balkholme, and comprises by computation 440 acres of land, laid out in two farms.

BELCHAMP-OTTON (ST. ETHELBERT AND ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 5¼ miles (N. by E.) from Castle-Hedingham; containing 389 inhabitants. This place derives the adjunct to its name from an ancient possessor called Otton, or Otho, who held it in the reign of Henry II., and whose descendant, Otho Fitz-William, was sheriff of Essex and Hertfordshire for several successive years. The parish, which contains some of the highest land in the county, comprises about 1600 acres, the soil of which is of a clayey quality. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the gift of the Rev. Edward Maude: the appro-priate tithes belonging to the rector of Ovington have been commuted for a rent-charge of £76. 15., and the vicarial for one of £443. 5.; and there are 31 acres of glebe, of which 30 are annexed to Ovington. The church, a small edifice, was repaired in 1800, when a handsome tower was erected on the site of part of a more ancient structure of Norman character.

BELCHAMP, ST. PAUL'S (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Clare; con-taining 731 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2557 acres, and, like the parishes of Belchamp-Otton and Belchamp-Walter, obtained its Norman appellation in consequence of its fertility and the beauty of its situa-tion; it was granted by Athelstan to the cathedral of St. Paul, London, by the Dean and Chapter of which it is still possessed. The village consists of a few houses round Cole Green, on which a fair for cattle is held on the 11th of December. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter: the great tithes have been com-muted for a rent-charge of £288. 14., and the vicarial for one of £200; and there are 79 acres of glebe. The church is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, and consists of a nave, north aisle, chancel, and square tower; in the chancel is a large window of elegant design, embellished with stained glass.

BELCHAMP-WALTER (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (W.) from Sudbury; con-taining, with North-Wood and North-End, extra-pa-rochial, 698 inhabitants. It is skirted on the south-east by a small brook, which separates it from the parish of Bulmer, and falls into the river Stour: the Hall, situated near the church, is a spacious mansion, of modern erection, and contains many stately apartments, and a splendid collection of paintings by the first masters. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Bulmer, and valued in the king's books at £6: the church is a handsome edifice, partly of stone and partly of brick, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a tower; the chancel contains a marble monument to the Raymond family, and there are also some remains of a very ancient monument to one of the earls of Essex. A national school was established in the year 1838.

BELFORD (ST. MARY), a parish, and the head of a union, partly in ISLANDSHIRE, a detached portion of the county of DURHAM, but chiefly in the N. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBRLAND; comprising the townships of Delchant, Easington, Ea-sington-Grange, Elwick, Middleton, and Ross; and containing 1789 inhabitants, of whom 1157 are in the market-town of Belford, 48 miles (N. by W.) from New-castle-upon-Tyne, and 318 (N. by W.) from London. The parish comprises about 7500 acres. The town is situated on a gentle eminence within two miles of the sea, of which, and of Holy Island, the Farne Islands, and Bambrough Castle, there is a fine view from the high ground on the north: the foundations of an ancient chapel may still be traced on Belford crag. It has a very pleasing appearance, and consists prin-cipally of two spacious streets, intersected by a few narrow lanes; the houses are irregularly built; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The neighbourhood abounds with diversified scenery and agreeable walks. Belford is mainly indebted for its rise to the spirited exertions of Mr. Dixon, a former proprietor of the manor, who built several houses on a larger and more convenient scale, cleared away unsightly objects, and established a woollen-manufactory, a tannery, &c.: his father had previously procured the privilege of holding a market and fairs. The parish abounds with coal, limestone, and freestone; and considerable quantities of cockles, called Budle cockles, are got upon the coast. The market is on Tuesday, and is noted for corn, much of which is sold for exportation; the fairs are on the Tuesday before Whitsuntide, and Aug. 23rd. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with 191 acres of land, in two distant parishes; net income, £147; patron and impropiator, Rev. J. D. Clark. The church is at the north-western extremity of the town, and has been lately rebuilt in the early English style. There are places of worship for the United Secession and Presbyterians. The poor law union of Belford comprises 34 townships, of which 33 are in the county of Northumberland, and one in the county of Durham, and contains a population of 6421. About a mile to the south-west of the town is a quadrilateral intrenchment, having an entrance on the north-east, and defended by a wide ditch and a double rampart: it is by some supposed to have been a stronghold, or place of security from the incursions of the Scots, during the border wars; by others it is thought to be of Danish origin. There are a few mineral springs.

BELGRAVE (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, partly in the hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, but chiefly in that of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Leicester; containing, with the chapelries of Birstal and North Thurmaston, 2609 inhabitants. During the civil wars, Belgrave was the scene of many skirmishes between the royalist and parliamentarian forces; and a field adjoining the village is called "Camp close," from part of the army under Prince Rupert having been there encamped, in 1645, at the siege of Leicester. The parish, which is situated on the mail-road to Manchester, and intersected by the navigable river Soar, and the Midland-Counties' railway, comprises 1396 acres of arable and pasture land; the soil is in general light, and the substrata are chiefly gravel, sand, marl, and clay. The Leicester canal intersects the lordship. The inhabitants are principally employed by the hosiers of Leicester in the manufacture of stockings and socks, particularly the latter. The parish formerly comprised the chapelries of Birstal and South Thurmaston, of which the latter was severed from it in 1798: the living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £146; patron, Bishop of Lichfield, to whom, in right of his see, belongs the rectory, worth about £1150 per annum. The glebe of the vicarage is 25 acres, with a house, erected in 1825. The church, a handsome and spacious structure, is chiefly in the decorated style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, and has a fine Norman doorway at the south entrance. There are places of worship for Baptists, Ranters, and Wesleyans; and a national school was built in 1837. On the inclosure of the parish, a common containing 47 acres was set apart for the town cottagers not having a right of common; and 23 acres, with several cottages and a house, were vested in trustees for the repair of the church. Here are traces of the Roman fosse-road leading to Newark and Lincoln.

BELLASIS, a township, in the parish of STANNINGTON, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Morpeth. The name, which has been variously written Belesise, Belessys, Belayse, &c., signifies "a handsome place," but the spot does not now, whatever its past appearance may have been, bear out the title: it is in a low situation, sheltered with rising ground to the north, and has the Blyth before it, the winding waters of which are made deep and slow by the wears of Stannington mill. It was a manor belonging to Morpeth barony, and among those who have had an interest in the soil may be named the families of Somerville, Greystock, Thornton, and Bell.

BELLASIZE, a township, in the parish of EAST-RINGTON, union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDEN-SHIRE, E. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Howden; containing, with the hamlet of Bennetland, 306 inhabitants. This place comprises by computation 1400 acres, and includes, besides Bennetland, the farm of Green Oak, one of the three Newland farms. The village is small and scattered, and situated south of the road leading from Howden to North Cave. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £82. 17. 6., and the vicarial for £4. 2. 1.

BELLCHALWELL, a parish, in the union of STURMINSTER, hundred of CRANBORNE, Sturminster division of DORSET, 8 miles (W. N. W.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 225 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united in 1776 to the rectory of Fifehead-Neville, and valued in the king's books at £7. 15. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £260, and there are 3 acres of glebe.

BELLEAU (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Alford; containing, with the chapelry of Claythorpe, 193 inhabitants. The name (Belle eau) is derived from a fine stream of water, which issues from a chalk hill with considerable force. The living is a discharged rectory, to which the vicarage of Aby was united in 1732, valued in the king's books at £13. 3. 9.; net income, £300; patron, Lord Wiltoughby de Eresby.

BELLERBY, a chapelry, in the parish of SPENNINGTHORN, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 13 miles (N. N. W.) from Bedale; containing 350 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Richmond to Leyburn, and comprises 2917*a. 2r. 28p.* The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £70; patron and impropiator, C. W. C. Chaytor, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1770. The chapel is a small edifice. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is carried on in union with the National Society.

BELLESTER, a township, in the parish and union of HALTWHISTLE, W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 16 miles (W. by S.) from Hexham; containing 116 inhabitants. The manor has, in common with other possessions in the neighbourhood, been the property of various families of consideration, and its history commences at an early period, it being conjectured that the family of Roos, of Hamlake, obtained it in marriage with Isabella, daughter of William the Lion, King of Scotland. Here are the ruins of a castle which once belonged to the Blenkinsopps, consisting of a grey pile of towers, with modern additions made in good taste by the present owner; rich, flat, alluvial ground surrounds the building on every side, and on the east and south its demesne lands are walled in with woody banks formed by the South Tyne river. The township comprises 755 acres, and contains the hamlet of Park; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BELLINGDON, a hamlet, in the parish of CHESHAM, union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 173 inhabitants.

BELLINGHAM (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, and the head of a union, in the N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; comprising the townships of Charlton East and West Quarters, Leemailing, The Nook, and Tarretburn Quarter; and containing 1730 inhabitants, of whom 672 are in the market-town of Bellingham, 30 miles (W. N. W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 298 (N. N. W.) from London. This place, from the remains of several camps apparently of Roman origin, is supposed to have been occupied by that people; but little of its early history is recorded, though the neighbourhood abounds with circular intrenchments, and vestiges of British fortifications. The Lords de Bellingham are said to have had a castle, or baronial seat, here, erected on an eminence still called Hall Field, and of which there are some slight remains. In the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. the manor and castle were in the possession of Richard de Bellingham; the estate afterwards became the property of the Earl of Derwentwater, upon whose attainder it was given to the Governors of Greenwich Hospital. The town is pleasantly situated on the northern bank of the North Tyne, between that river and a stream called Hareshaw-burn, over which, near the eastern extremity of the town, a good stone bridge was erected in 1826. The rocks on each side of the burn rise precipitously to the height of 100 feet, and the water at Hareshaw-linn has a perpendicular fall of thirty feet. The smelting of iron-ore has been recently introduced by the Hareshaw Company, who have erected furnaces for the purpose, and the works already afford employment to 250 persons: many are also employed in the iron and coal mines, which are extensively worked; and sandstone of good quality for building is also quarried. Fairs for cattle are held on the first Saturday after the 15th of September, and on the 12th of November.

This was formerly part of the extensive parish of Simonburn, which was divided into six distinct parishes by act of parliament in 1811; it comprises by measurement 20,124 acres, of which from 7000 to 8000 are moorland, abounding with grouse and other game. The LIVING is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Governors of Greenwich Hospital: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £203, and there is a rectory-house, with gardens attached. The church is of great antiquity, and the only one of the district which has survived the Reformation: it is possible that the churches of the Northumbrian border were occasionally, like those of Cumberland, used as places of retreat in cases of sudden attack from the marauding Scotch, and the thickness of the walls, the heavy stone arched roof, and narrow slits for windows, induce a belief that this edifice was constructed with this object. It consists of a chancel and nave, a chantry chapel on the south side, and a small bell-tower; the roof is finely groined, and the chancel contains many mural tablets and monuments; the churchyard, occupying an elevated situation, forms a beautiful terrace overlooking the river. There is a place of worship for Seceders from the Scottish Church, also a Roman Catholic chapel, the latter built by W. J. Charlton, Esq. and others, in conjunction with the then R. C. bishop of the district, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Briggs. A school was endowed with £200, by Mrs. Reed, of Troughend, and a legacy of £40 left by Mr. John Charlton, in 1732. The poor law union of Bellingham comprises thirty-seven parishes and places, and contains a population of 7462.

BELLSTREET, a hamlet, in the parish of AVENING, union of STROUD, hundred of LONGTREE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 262 inhabitants.

BELMESTHORPE, or BELMSTHORP, a hamlet, in the parish of RYHALL, union of STAMFORD, hundred of EAST, county of RUTLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Stamford; containing 121 inhabitants.

BELPER, a market-town and chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of DUFFIELD, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 8 miles (N.) from Derby, and 134 (N. N. W.) from London; containing 9885 inhabitants. This place, at which were formerly a park and hunting-seat belonging to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, was an inconsiderable village, inhabited principally by nailers, till the year 1777, when the cotton manufacture was introduced by Messrs. Strutt, since which time it has risen into a considerable town. It is pleasantly situated on the river Derwent, over which a handsome stone bridge of three arches has been recently erected; the former bridge, said to have been built by John of Gaunt, having been destroyed, in 1795, by a great flood. The town, consisting of several streets, is partially paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. There are five mills for the spinning of cotton, belonging to Messrs. Strutt, who make their own machinery on the spot; two of these, and also a bleaching-mill, are about a mile and a half lower down the river, over which the proprietors have built a neat stone bridge of two arches, for their own accommodation. Here is also the largest manufactory in the kingdom for silk and cotton hose, established in 1803, by Messrs. Ward, Brettle, and Ward, and now belonging to Mr. George Brettle, who employs more than 4000 persons, principally in the surrounding villages. The nails made here, especially those for the shoeing of horses, are much in demand, from the superiority of the rod-iron made at Alderwasley, four miles distant, arising from the peculiar quality of the coal in that neighbourhood. The North-Midland, or Leeds and Derby railway, passes through the town, near which it has an intermediate station. The market is on Saturday, and fairs are held on May 12th and Oct. 31st, for horned-cattle, sheep, and horses. The county magistrates hold a petty-session for the district every Saturday; courts for the manor are held twice in the year, under the steward, at one of which constables and other officers are appointed, and a court of requests for the recovery of small debts within the town was established by act of parliament in 1839.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £158; patron, Vicar of Duffield; impropriator, Lord Beauchamp. The chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was erected in 1824, at an expense of upwards of £12,000, which was partly defrayed by a parliamentary grant; it is a handsome structure, in the decorated English style, with a lofty tower. The old chapel, built by John of Gaunt, the burial-ground of which is still used, is now appropriated to the use of a Sunday school. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians; and a Lancasterian school is supported by the proprietors of the cotton-works. Henry Smith, Esq., endowed two almshouses, and bequeathed an estate producing £30 per annum, directing the rental to be divided equally between the minister and the poor of Belper; and two other almshouses were endowed by James Sims, with £12 per annum. The union of Belper comprises 35 parishes and places, and contains a population of 46,235. In a field in the neighbourhood may still be traced the massive foundations of the mansion in which John of Gaunt resided.

BELSAY, a township, in the parish of BOLAM, union of CASTLE ward, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 13 miles (N. W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 312 inhabitants. The Middletons, ancestors of Sir Charles M. L. Monck, Bart., the present owner of the township, had large possessions here, and in other parts of the county, as far back as the reign of Henry I. One of them, Richard de Middleton, was chancellor to Henry III., and died in that office; and Gilbert de Middleton, in 1317, broke into open rebellion, and being joined by many of his kindred, took all the castles in Northumberland, except Alnwick, Bambrough, and Norham, and was not overcome until he had ravaged the counties of Northumberland and Durham; for these acts of treason he eventually suffered death, and his estates, and those of his kinsman, John de Middleton, of Belsay, the head of the family, were confiscated; but after an interval of fifty years they were partially recovered to the Middleton family by marriage, and continue their inheritance to this day. The township comprises 2516 acres; the soil is of great variety, and with the exception of some fine grass land within the park, mostly arable, and of medium or inferior quality; there are considerable quarries of lime and freestone, and boulders of whinstone, and also strata of coal, but none at present worked.

Belsay Hall, a splendid edifice of Grecian character, built by Sir Charles Monck, its present possessor, stands on a dry knoll, and partly occupies the site of the late chapel of Belsay; the external architecture is of the Doric order, and forms a square of upwards of a hundred feet, and the structure is altogether beautiful and unique, and though so extremely elegant, is yet solid, and calculated for long duration. The ancient castle, supposed, from its style, to have been built in the reign of King John, stands not far from the Hall at the head of a vale, backed by a woody hill, and is reckoned one of the most perfect specimens, and certainly one of the most imposing, of Norman castellated architecture in the county. The new village exhibits, in the style of building, the owner's classic taste; the principal part consists of a range of houses called the arcade, the upper wall in front being supported upon arches, with a piazza beneath; there is a good inn, and a neat schoolroom, with a house for the master, all recently erected. The vicarial tithes of the township have been commuted for a rent-charge of £10. 12. 6. On the top of the how, or hill, west of the castle, is an old Roman camp, the fosses of which are still very perfect; and below it, along the back of the hill, the old village of Belshow, or Belsay originally stood. The hill was sacred to the British god Bell, whence its name.

BELSHFORD (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, N. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Horncastle; containing 554 inhabitants. It comprises about 2600 acres, of which the soil is various, and the surface very uneven; excellent limestone is found in the north-east portion of the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Crown, with a net income of £425: the tithes were commuted for land in 1804. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and a national school is aided by subscription.

BELSTEAD (St. MARY), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of STAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ipswich; containing 261 inhabitants. It comprises about 1000 acres of land, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil light. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £295; patron, Francis Leman, Esq., M.D.: there is a glebe of about 50 acres. The church contains a tablet to the memory of Admiral Sir Robert Harland. A school for girls is partly supported by the clergyman.

BELSTONE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Black Torrington and Shebbear, and N. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Oakhampton; containing 208 inhabitants. This place, of which the name in the Saxon language signifies the town of Belus, or the Sun, is situated on the great Falmouth road, by which it is divided from the parish of Sampford Courtney; and is bounded on the east by the river Taw, which separates it from South Tawton, and on the west by the river Oke-mont, which separates it from the parish of Oakhampton. According to computation it comprises 2000 acres, of which 800 are inclosed, and, with the exception of a small portion of woodland, are arable, and in good cultivation; copper-ore is found among the mineral strata, and was formerly wrought. The manufacture of blankets is carried on to a considerable extent, affording employment to the poor of several adjoining parishes, and granite is raised in great quantities. Dartmoor forest, which borders on the south, abounds in mineral wealth. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 0. 1.; net income, £154; patron, Rev. John Hole: the glebe comprises 76 acres, with a substantial house, erected in 1836. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style, and contains about 200 sittings. There are some remains of a Druidical circle.

BELTINGHAM, a hamlet, in the township of RIDLEY, parish and union of HALTWHISTLE, W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Haltwhistle. This place is beautifully situated upon a gentle eminence on the south side of the South Tyne, and is said to have been anciently a market-town, but now consists only of four dwellings: the Newcastle and Carlisle railway passes in the vicinity. Here is a chapel, supposed to have been formerly a domestic chapel to the castle of Williamswyke, but at present appropriated to public worship; it is an ancient and handsome edifice of the period of Henry VII., with elegant windows, so large and numerous, as to have led Mr. Hodgson, the historian of Northumberland, to call it "a cage of light." The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Haltwhistle, with a net income of £75, arising from endowments, made in 1830, of £100 from the late Bishop Van Mildert, £100 from the late vicar, Hollingsworth, similar sums from Bishop Barrington's and Lord Crewe's Funds, a rent-charge of £30 from the present vicar, on the proceeds of the vicarage, and £1000 with which those benefactions were met by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty. It is in contemplation to form an ecclesiastical district, which will comprise the townships of Ridley, Henshaw, and Thorngraston, and embrace a population of more than 1000 persons. A school was opened in Oct. 1839, under the patronage of the late John Davidson, Esq., of Ridley Hall.

BELTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of LOUGHBOROUGH, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Kegworth; containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Grace-Dieu, 718 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 1179 acres, and the liberty of Grace-Dieu 1029 acres: limestone, porphyries, and greywacke slate are found. A considerable fair for horses and cattle is held on the Monday next after Trinity week. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 18. 4.; net income, £204; patron, Marquess of Hastings: the glebe consists of 117 acres. There are places of worship for Baptists and Methodists. A convent for nuns of the order of St. Augustine was founded at Grace-Dieu, in the reign of Henry III., the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £101. 8. 2¼.: the remains are still to be seen. Sir John Beaumont, author of a poem entitled "Bosworth Field," and brother of Francis Beaumont, the celebrated dramatist, was born at Grace-Dieu in 1582.

BELTON (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union and soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Grantham; containing 176 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 3. 6½., and in the gift of Earl Browlow: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £465, and the glebe comprises about 30 acres. A school is supported by private charity; and there is an almshouse for six poor persons. Belton gives the title of Baron to Earl Brownlow.

BELTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of THORNE, W. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 1¾ mile (N.) from Epworth; containing, with the hamlets of Beltoft, Carrhouse, Mosswood, Sandtoft, Westgate, and Woodhouse, 1706 inhabitants. At the hamlet of Sandtoft, in the parish, a church was built for the Dutch and French Protestants brought over by Cornelius Vermuyden, in the reign of Charles II., to assist in draining the marshes. In opposition to this undertaking, serious riots occurred; the church was materially injured, and soon fell into decay. The females of the hamlet who intermarried with the strangers retained their maiden names after marriage, not choosing to adopt those of their foreign husbands. The living is a perpetual curacy, formerly in the patronage of the Corporation of Lincoln, who, by the Municipal Act, were directed to dispose of it. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BELTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of UPPINGHAM, soke of OAKHAM, county of RUTLAND, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Uppingham; containing, with Gunthorpe Lodge, 402 inhabitants. It is separated from Leicestershire by the small river Eye, and comprises 970a. 1r. 4p. of arable and pasture land, in nearly equal portions; the soil is chiefly clay and gravel. The living is a vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Wardley; improprators, Dr. Bishop and J. Eagleton, Esq.: an allotment of land and a money payment were assigned in lieu of tithes in 1794; the glebe comprises 66 acres, with a parsonage-house, recently rebuilt by the incumbent. The church is an ancient structure, chiefly in the Norman style, and contains 400 sittings, of which 100 are free. A school is endowed with £15. 15. per annum.

BELTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK, 4½ miles (S. W.) from Great Yarmouth; containing 465 inhabitants. This parish, which includes the hamlet of Browston, and is situated on the navigable river Waveney, comprises 2012 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 15., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Norwich: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £440, and there are 19 acres of glebe. A school on the national plan has been established.

BELVOIR, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union, and partly in the soke, of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, but chiefly in the hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Grantham; containing 109 inhabitants. Belvoir Castle, the magnificent seat of the Duke of Rutland, stands on the site of an ancient fortress built soon after the Conquest, near which a Benedictine priory was founded, in the reign of William I., the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £135.

BEMBRIDGE, a district chapelry, in the parish of BRADING, liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (S. E.) from Ryde, by the ferry across the mouth of Brading harbour. This place, which formerly consisted only of a few fishermen's huts, has within the last few years become a highly interesting watering-place; and though of small extent, is the favourite resort of persons who wish to combine with the benefit of sea-bathing the enjoyment of pleasing retirement. It is situated in a beautifully secluded spot at the eastern extremity of the island, of which it forms one of the most picturesque portions, and has a safe and commodious harbour for pilots and fishermen; the rides in the vicinity abound with good scenery, and the neighbourhood affords walks commanding fine views of the country adjacent. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Brading: the church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, a neat edifice in the later English style, containing 475 sittings, was erected in 1827. A parochial school for boys was erected at the expense of the Rev. Sir Henry Thompson, Bart., and another for girls, which is supported by a lady residing at the place, was built by subscription.

BEMERTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of WILTON, hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Salisbury; containing 109 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to that of Fugglestone. The place is remarkable for the celebrity of three of its rectors,—George Herbert, commonly called “the Divine,” who died in 1635; John Norris, a metaphysical writer, who died in 1711; and Archdeacon Coxe, the traveller and historian, who died in 1828: the first greatly repaired the church, and rebuilt the parsonage-house, at his own expense.

BEMPTON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Bridlington; containing 313 inhabitants. The parish is bounded by the North Sea, and comprises about 1600 acres, partly arable, and partly grass, the latter being some of the richest grazing and feeding pastures in the East riding; and the farmers are regarded as being among the best cultivators of the soil. The village is pleasantly situated near Flamborough Head, on the road to Scarborough. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of H. Broadley, Esq., the impropriator, and has a net income of £51: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1765. The church, rebuilt at the expense of the patron in 1829, is a small neat structure, with a tower at the west end. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Bempton was separated from the priory of Bridlington in 1474.

BENACRE (St. Michael), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. E.) from Wangford; containing 194 inhabitants. It comprises 2594a. 1r. 37p., and is situated on the sea-coast: about half a mile from the shore is a sheet of fresh water, called Benacre Broad, comprising 100 acres, and abounding with pike and other fish. Benacre Hall, a large mansion, is the seat of Sir T. S. Gooch, Bart. The living is a rectory, with that of Easton-Bavent and the vicarage of North-Ales consolidated, valued in the king's books at £18, and in the gift of Sir T. S. Gooch: the tithes were commuted for a rent-charge of £354, and there are 24 acres of glebe. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower. A school is supported by the patron and the Rev. W. Gooch. An urn, containing coins of Vespasian, Trajan, Adrian, Antoninus Pius, and Marcus Aurelius, was discovered here, more than fifty years since, in forming a road from Yarmouth to London.

BENAGER.—See BINEGAR.

BENEFIELD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of OUNDLE, hundred of POLEBROOK, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Oundle; containing 533 inhabitants. This parish, including the lordship of Liveden, comprises 4468 acres, of which above 300 are woodland, and the remainder chiefly pasture; the soil is a strong tenacious clay, with an upper surface of dark loam, and the ground is varied with gentle undulations, though generally level. There are two villages about a mile apart, distinguished as Upper and Lower Benefield, the road from Oundle to Great Weldon proceeding through both. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £35. 9. 7.; net income, £531; patron, Jesse Watts Russell, Esq., lord of the manor and proprietor of the parish: the tithes were commuted for land in 1820, and the entire glebe now consists of 470 acres. The church, which is a handsome and commodious edifice, was repaired a few years since by Mr. Russell: near it are the site and moat of an old castle. The parochial school is endowed with £10. 10. per annum. About a furlong to the west of the village are nine of those cavities in the earth commonly called “Swallows,” into which the waters of the land-floods flow and disappear.

BENENDEN (St. George), a parish, in the union of CRANBROOKE, hundred of ROLVENDEN, Lower division of the lathe of SCRAY, W. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Cranbrooke; containing 1594 inhabitants. It lies to the south of the London and Dover railway. Fairs for horses and horned-cattle are held on May 15th and Aug. 4th. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 12. 6.; patron and impropriator, T. L. Hodges, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £500, and the vicarial for one of £151. The church was built in 1672, the former edifice having been damaged by lightning. Edward Gibbon, in 1602, founded a school, which was subsequently endowed with property producing £114 per annum.

BENFIELDSIDE, a township, in the chapelry of MEDOMSLEY, parish and union of LANCHESTER, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 14 miles (N. W. by N.) from Durham; containing 1074 inhabitants. The Bishops of Durham formerly appointed foresters or keepers of their woods of Benfieldside, and elsewhere, within the parish. The township is on the river Derwent, which here separates the county from Northumberland; and is intersected by the Derwent and Shotley-Bridge, and the Newcastle and Stanhope roads. It comprises 1828a. 1r. 25p., of which 1019 acres are arable, 410 pasture, 318 wood, and 80 highways, buildings, waste, &c.; the soil is generally clay upon a substratum of freestone rock, and the surface hilly, some of the highest hills being 700 or 800 feet above the level of the sea. There are mines of coal and iron-stone, quarries of freestone, in great variety, and a fine clay; the manufacture of paper is extensively carried on, besides which there are an iron-foundry, a saw-mill, a flour-mill, &c. A branch to Medomsley of the Pontop and South Shields railway terminates about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile from Shotley-Bridge; and the Newcastle and Carlisle railway passes at a distance of seven miles. The lands are chiefly tithe-free. One of the first meeting-houses for the Society of Friends in the north of England was established in the township; there are also places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans, and at Shotley-Bridge is a school on the national plan.—See SHOTLEY-BRIDGE.

BENFLEET, NORTH (All Saints), a parish, in the union of BILLERICAY, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Wickford; containing 364 inhabitants. This district, previously to its subdivision into the north and south parishes at present recognised, was the usual landing-place of the Danish pirates during their incursions into this part of the country in the 9th century; and, towards the close of that century, Hesting, one of their chiefs, erected a strong castle here, in which was deposited the plunder he obtained from the inhabitants, and which was, in 894, demolished by Alfred the Great, who took Hesting's wife and two of her sons prisoners, with all their booty, to London. The parish of North Benfleet comprises about 2200 acres of flat land, of which about 700 form a portion of the isle of Canvey. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16; net income, £600; patron, Rev. C. R. Rowlatt. The church has a small wooden tower with two bells, and a steeple.

BENFLEET, SOUTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BILLERICAY, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Rayleigh; containing 707 inhabitants, and comprising 3056*a.* 1*r.* 32*p.* The village is pleasantly situated on the border of a creek which separates it from Canvey island, and is called Hadley Ray; and several other creeks which enter the parish from the river Thames are noted for producing good oysters. A fair is held on the 24th of August. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 5. 5.; net income, £242; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Westminster; improPRIATOR, J. Perry, Esq. The church is a handsome edifice with a tower of stone, surmounted by a lofty spire of wood. A national school is aided by subscription.

BENGEO (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of HERTFORD, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Hertford; containing 1141 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 6½., and in the gift of the Trustees of the late T. H. Byde, Esq., in whom also the impropriation is vested: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £450, and those of the incumbent for one of £170; and £28 are payable in addition to the rector of St. Alban's. A school is supported by subscription.

BENGROVE, a hamlet, in the parish of BECKFORD, union of WINCHOMB, hundred of TIBALDSTONE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 43 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1773.

BENGWORTH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and borough of EVESHAM, locally in the Lower division of the hundred of BLACKENHURST, E. division of the county of WORCESTER; containing 1082 inhabitants. It is situated on the eastern side of the navigable river Avon, and communicates with the town of Evesham by an ancient stone bridge. A portion of Gloucestershire bounds it on the south, and it is intersected by the roads from Evesham to Stow and Chipping-Campden. The manor anciently belonged to the Beauchamp family, whose baronial castle, situated near the bridge, was in the twelfth century destroyed by William d'Anville, abbot of Evesham, in retaliation for depredations committed by the owner on his monastery. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. 10.; income, about £150; patron, Rev. W. Marsden: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1795. The church, which has a substantial tower and spire, was formerly dependent on the abbey of Evesham. John Deacle, alderman of London, who was born at Bengworth, and died in 1709, left by will £2000 for the endowment of a free school here; the premises were erected in 1736, at an expense of £335, and with the residue of the legacy an estate was purchased; the income, in 1830, was £251.

BENHALL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Saxmundham; containing 749 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 1. 3.; net income, £173; patrons, Trustees of the late Edward Hollond, Esq., to whom, with others, the impropriation belongs. Sir Edward Duke, Bart., in 1731, bequeathed property producing, with other benefactions, about £36 per annum, for the endowment of a free school; and a school-house was erected in 1736.

BENHAM-VALENCE, a tything, in the parish of SPEEN, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 3 miles (W.) from Newbury; containing 316 inhabitants. Benham House was formerly the residence of the celebrated Margravine of Anspach.

BENNINGBROUGH, a township, in the parish of NEWTON-UPON-OUSE, union of YORK, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 7¾ miles (N. W.) from YORK; containing 86 inhabitants. It is situated on the north bank of the river Ouse, and comprises about 1070 acres, the property of Viscount Downe, who has a seat here.

BENNINGHOLME, with BENNINGHOLME GRANGE, a township, in the parish of SWINE, union of SKIRLAUGH, Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNES, E. riding of YORK, 9 miles (N. by E.) from Hull; containing 108 inhabitants. This place is in Domesday book called Benincol, and in the reign of John permission was given by the proprietors to the ecclesiastics to fish in and render navigable the stream of Lamwith here, upon which the place is situated. Among the chief owners of land in former times were the Constables, who had possessions here so early as the time of Henry III.: several of the farm-houses contain ancient remains. The township comprises about 1200 acres, of which 800 are arable and in cultivation, and the remainder meadow and pasture, interspersed with plantations; the surface is level, and the scenery of pleasing character. Benningholme Hall, the seat of Robert Harrison, Esq., lord of the manor, is a handsome residence.

BENNINGTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the hundred of BROADWATER, union and county of HERTFORD, 5½ miles (E. S. E.) from Stevenage; containing 605 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, is said to have been the residence of the kings of Mercia, who had a palace here, and on an intrenched eminence to the west of the church was a castle, of which little more than the site remains. The parish is intersected by the river Bene, and comprises 2900*a.* 1*r.* 6*p.*, of which the soil rests principally on chalk; the cottagers are chiefly employed in the making of straw-plat. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19, and in the gift of Leonard Proctor, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £635, and there are 90 acres of glebe. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BENNINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of BOSTON, wapentake of SKIRBECK, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Boston; containing 539 inhabitants. This place formerly belonged to the family of Bay, of whom William Bay was summoned to the grand council at Westminster in 1353, as member for Boston: the ancient family mansion, Bay Hall, is still entire. The parish, which is situated on the sea-coast, and intersected by the road from Boston to Wainfleet, comprises by measurement 2814*a. 1r. 12p.*, of which two-thirds are pasture, and the remainder arable; the soil is rich, and the substratum principally clay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 8. 11½, and in the gift of the Earl of Ripon: on the inclosure of the fens and marsh lands in 1818, land was allotted in lieu of tithes; the glebe comprises 426 acres, valued at £895 per annum. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated and later English styles, and contains a curious font; on the floor of the chancel is a marble slab, from which the brasses inlaid in it were removed during the parliamentary war, and under which are the remains of Bishop Wainfleet. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. In 1706, Richard Cowell bequeathed a house and about 5 acres of land for the maintenance of six children at school; in 1725, William Purtil left houses, and about 48 acres, for a schoolmaster and four almspeople; and in 1832, Richard Westland, Esq., of Boston, £100 for the said school, with which sum a commodious room has been erected. The income arising from the lands is £150 per annum. There was formerly a chantry here, and near the glebe-house is a piece of ground called the Chantry Pasture.

BENNINGTON, LONG (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. W.) from Grantham; containing, with Bennington Grange, extra-parochial, 1007 inhabitants. The parish, which is situated on the great north road, and bounded on the north-east by the river Witham, comprises 4000 acres of land of a clayey soil, and has some good stone-quarries. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Foston annexed, valued in the king's books at £20. 1. 10., with a net income of £463; the patronage and impropriation belong to the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes were commuted for a corn-rent and an allotment of land in 1784; the glebe consists of about 30 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school. An alien priory of Cistercian monks was founded here about 1175, the revenue of which, in the reign of Richard II., was £50 per annum. There is a mineral spring strongly impregnated with iron.

BENNIWORTH (ST. JULIAN), a parish, in the union of HORNCASTLE, E. division of the wapentake of WRAGGOF, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (E. N. E.) from Wragby; comprising by computation 2700 acres, and containing 488 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 8. 6½; net income, £506; patron, G. F. Heneage, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for an allotment of land in 1770.

BENRIDGE, with KIRKLEY and CARTER-MOOR, a township, in the parish of PONTELAND, union, and W. division, of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 168 inhabitants. This place, formerly a distinct township, is situated to the south of the river Blyth, and east of the road from Newcastle to Rothbury, being equidistant from both. Benridge House is a handsome mansion.

BENRIDGE, a township, in the parish of MITFORD, union of MORPETH, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Morpeth; containing 70 inhabitants. This place, formerly Benrigge, or the "high ridge," derives its name from its situation on the slope of the lofty ridge of land that runs through the township from east to west. Possessions have been held here by the families of Bertram, Eure (of which was Sir Ralph Eure, a man of consideration in the county), Bolbeck, Herle, Greystock, and Dacre; and the present owners of the estate are the Howards, represented by the Earl of Carlisle. The district comprises 1085 acres of open ground, and about 20 of wood, and consists of several farms, three of which form a straggling hamlet, on the south side of the highway between Stanton and Morpeth, and probably occupy the site of the ancient vill: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £84.

BENSHAM, a suburban district, in the parish and union of GATESHEAD, locally in CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 1 mile (S. W.) from the Post-office of Gateshead. It occupies a salubrious situation on an eminence, commanding fine views for many miles up the beautiful vale of the Tyne, including, on the south side of the river, Axwell Park, Blaydon, Ryton, and the various interesting objects in their environs; and on the north bank, Elswick House, Benwell, Scotswood, with its handsome suspension bridge, and the neighbouring manufactories and villas; and directly to the north is seen the whole of the town of Newcastle, with the steeples of St. Nicholas' and All Saints' churches, and other public buildings. The district, which is partly mountainous, is, in the more inviting portions, studded with mansions and villas inhabited by magistrates, opulent merchants, and other gentlemen, and of these residences may be named the seats of James Pollock and William Hymers, Esqs., Bensham House and Lodge, Cotsfield House, Claremont House, Prospect House, and Wind-Mill Hills. The only public building of importance in the locality is a lunatic asylum established, in 1744, by John Hall, M.D., and which is one of the oldest institutions of the kind in the kingdom, and is adapted to the reception of the more delicate patients from the Newcastle asylum; it was subsequently enlarged by Robert Wood, M.D., who was succeeded by the late Frederick Glenton, M.D., and afterwards by his nephews, Messrs. Frederick and Paul Glenton, by the former of whom the institution continues to be conducted. The building has a south-west prospect, and is sheltered from the north-east winds, and its situation is said by medical men to be exceedingly healthy; it is heated by water-pipes, a plan productive of many advantages, though rarely adopted, and affords every accommodation for more than 150 patients.

BENSINGTON, or BENSON (ST. HELEN), a parish, in the parliamentary borough and union of WALLINGFORD, partly in the hundred of DORCHESTER, but chiefly in that of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 1½ miles (N. N. E.) from Wallingford; containing, with the hamlets of Fifield, Preston-Crowmarsh, and Roke, 1254 inhabitants. In this parish was anciently a strong fortress of the Britons, from whom it was taken on their defeat at Bedford, in 571, or, according to some authorities, in 560, by Ceawlyn, third king of the West Saxons. It subsequently fell into the power of the Mercians, from whom it was seized by Cuthred, King of the West Saxons, who, revolting from Ethelbald, King of Mercia, defeated him at Burford in 752; but it was finally surrendered by the West Saxons to Offa, King of Mercia, who, enraged at the obstinate resistance of the garrison, dismantled the fortifications. The Roman way leading from Alchester to Wallingford crossed the Thames here; and there was anciently a royal palace in the vicinity. The parish contains 2880a. 2r. 13p., of which 2119 acres are arable, 344 meadow, 92 woodland, and 200 pasture. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £180; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1046, with a glebe of 17½ acres, and those of the incumbent for one of £157. 10., with a glebe of 3½ acres. Two schools are supported by voluntary contributions.

BENTFIELD, a hamlet, in the parish of STANSTED-MOUNTFITCHET, union of BISHOP-STORTFORD, hundred of CLAVERING, N. division of ESSEX, 1¾ mile (N. W. by N.) from Stansted-Mountfitchet; containing 496 inhabitants. It is situated near the river Stort.

BENTHAL, a township, in the parish of ABBERBURY, union of ATCHAM, hundred of FORD, S. division of SALOP.

BENTHALL (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the union of MADELEY, and within the liberties of the borough of WENLOCK, S. division of SALOP, 2½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Much Wenlock; containing 587 inhabitants, who are principally employed in potteries. The navigable river Severn flows past the place. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £93; patron, Vicar of Much Wenlock; impropiator, Thomas Harries, Esq.

BENTHAM, a hamlet, in the parish of BADGEWORTH, Upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Cheltenham; containing 236 inhabitants.

BENTHAM (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of SETTLE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK; containing 3535 inhabitants, of whom 2180 are in the township of Benthams, 10 miles (W. N. W.) from Settle. This parish, situated on the confines of the county of Lancaster, comprises 25,811a. 13p., of which 7972a. 27p. are in the township of Benthams; the soil is poor, resting on a substratum of gritstone; the surface is varied, and the lands are watered by the rivers Greta and Wenning, of which the former has its source in the higher parts of the parish, and the latter in the adjoining parish of Clapham, and both after flowing through the parish fall into the river Lune. Benthams House, the seat of Hornby Roughsedge, Esq., and Ellergill Lodge, that of Gilbert Bateson, Esq., are handsome mansions, pleasantly situated. The township contains the villages of Upper and Lower Benthams; and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the spinning of flax and the weaving of linen, for which extensive mills have been erected by Messrs. Hornby and Roughsedge; and there are some potteries for various kinds of earthenware. A market is held on Monday at Upper Benthams; and there are fairs on the 5th of February, Easter-Tuesday, the 22d of June, and the 25th of October.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £35. 7. 8½., and in the patronage of James William Farrer, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £675, and there is a good glebe-house. The church, situated at Lower Benthams, is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower; the nave was rebuilt and enlarged in 1832. An additional church, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles, has been erected at Upper Benthams, by Hornby Roughsedge, Esq., at an expense of £1800; the east window is embellished with stained glass, and contains a painting of the Last Supper; the interior is well arranged, and the church contains 500 sittings, of which 350 are free. There is a chapel of ease at Ingleton, in the parish, a very ancient edifice; and also at Ingleton Fell, called Chapel Le Dale. The free school was founded by William Collingwood, Esq., who in 1726 left property for its endowment, and also for the foundation and support of an hospital for six widowers and six widows; the income is £240, of which £42 are paid to the master, and £35 to the usher, of the school, and £12 to each of the inmates of the hospital. Thomas Baynes bequeathed land producing £12 per annum for the augmentation of the head master's salary; and Isabel Baynes left property worth £20 per annum, to be divided among poor housekeepers of the township.

BENTLEY (St. Mary), a parish and liberty, in the union of ALTON, hundred of BASINGSTOKE, ODHAM and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Farnham; containing 766 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Wey, which, flowing through the valley in a beautifully meandering course, separates this parish from that of Binsted; the surface is finely varied, and the hills on the opposite side of the river are covered with the royal forest of Alice Holt, and add greatly to the richness of the country. The parish comprises about 2280 acres of richly cultivated land, of which nearly 200 are planted with hops; the village is pleasantly situated on the north side of the road from London to Southampton. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £106; appropriator, the Archdeacon of Surrey, by whom the tithes, with the right of presentation, are leased for lives to Robert Bury, Esq. The church, an ancient structure in the Norman style, situated on an eminence behind the village, was enlarged in 1835. Mr. Andrew Windsor, about 1737, bequeathed six acres of land, producing £13 per annum, which sum, with the proceeds of a sale of timber, is distributed among poor widows or widowers. On the lands of Powderham farm are the remains of a Roman encampment, with a tessellated pavement in good preservation.

BENTLEY, a township, in the parish of WOLVERHAMPTON, union of WALSALL, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 1¼ mile (W. by N.) from Walsall; containing 428 inhabitants.

BENTLEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the incorporation, and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5¼ miles (S. W.) from Ipswich; containing 419 inhabitants, and comprising 2801a. 28p. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 11., and in the gift of the Rev. Charles Edmund Keene: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £443, and the vicarial for one of £189; and there are about 19 acres of glebe. At Dodnash, in the parish, a small priory of Black canons, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, was founded, it is said, by one Wymarus; at its suppression, in 1524, its revenue was £42. 18. 8 $\frac{1}{4}$. per annum, and it was granted to Cardinal Wolsey for the endowment of his school and college.

BENTLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of SHUSTOCK, union of ATHERSTONE, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Atherstone; containing 266 inhabitants, and comprising 1835 acres. It is intersected by the road from Birmingham to Atherstone. The chapel, which was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has long been in ruins.

BENTLEY, a village, in the parish of ROWLEY, wapentake of HARTHILL, Hunsley-Beacon division, E. riding of YORK, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Beverley; containing 62 inhabitants. This place is situated in the northern part of the parish, and on the road from Beverley to Hessele. In a hedge, east of the village, stands part of one of the ancient crosses that marked the limits of the sanctuary of Beverley minster.

BENTLEY, a township, in the parish of ARKSEY, union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N. W. by N.) from Doncaster; containing 790 inhabitants. This village is about a mile from that of Arksey, and has grown up round an ancient manor-house, now known only by its site, which is still called the Mote hill, but which was formerly the seat of some very eminent persons, and the head of one of the most considerable tenancies of the castle and honour of Tickhill. Among the families who had possessions here, occur those of Newmarch, Tibetot, Scrope, and Windham. Sir Robert de Tibetot was one of the most important persons of his age, was much employed in the reign of Edward I. in the Welsh war, and was also in the wars of France and Scotland: of the family of Windham were Sir John, beheaded for high treason, on Towerhill, in 1502, and Sir Francis, a judge of the time of Elizabeth. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment under an act passed in the 7th and 8th of George IV. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BENTLEY, FENNY (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ashbourn; containing 343 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the road from Ashbourn to Tissington, was the residence of the Beresfords, lords of the manor, of whose castellated mansion there are still some remains near the church. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 12. 10., and in the gift of the Dean of Lincoln: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £60, and the glebe comprises 31 acres. The church is a small structure, with a low tower, and contains a monument to one of the Beresford family, who distinguished himself in the wars with France.

BENTLEY, GREAT (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, 8 miles (E. S. E.) from Colchester; containing 1005 inhabitants. This parish, which on the west is bounded by a small creek flowing into the river Colne, comprises an area of about eleven miles in circumference; the surface is diversified with hills and valleys, and the general scenery is cheerful. Fairs are held on the Monday after Trinity-Monday, for cattle; the last Friday in Sept., for sheep; and the Monday after St. Swithin's-day. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London: the impropriate tithes, belonging to the landowners, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £674, and the vicarial for one of £250; and the glebe consists of 13 acres. A rent-charge of £59 is also paid to Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. The church, beautifully situated near a pleasant green, is a spacious and venerable structure, in the Norman style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with about £15 per annum.

BENTLEY, HUNGRY, a liberty, in the parish of LONGFORD, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Ashbourn; containing 83 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £67. 10. Here was formerly a chapel, long since demolished.

BENTLEY, LITTLE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, 8 miles (E.) from Colchester; containing 472 inhabitants. It comprises 2000a. 2r. 14p., of which 1660 acres are arable, 135 pasture, and 162 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of Emanuel College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £650, and there are 58 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient building, consisting of a nave, north aisle, and chancel, with a tower of stone. A chantry was founded by Sir John Le Gros. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by the rector.

BENTLEY, PAUNCEFOOT, a township, in the parish of TARDEBIGG, union of BROMSGROVE, Upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (S. E.) from Bromsgrove; containing 238 inhabitants, and comprising 1617 acres. The surface is moderately undulated, well watered, and partially wooded; and the soil is of full average fertility.

BENTON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of LONG BENTON, union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Newcastle; comprising an area of 573a. 3r. 10p. A part of the population is employed in Bigge's-main colliery. Benton Park is the seat of John Potts, Esq., commanding some fine views, which embrace Gateshead Fell church, the Newcastle and North Shields railway, &c.; the mansion is of brick, originally built a century ago, and enlarged in 1769, and came by purchase, in 1838, with 90 acres of demesne, of which 20 are old timber, into the possession of Mr. Potts, who has entirely re-beautified the interior, and enriched it with valuable paintings, among which are "Duns Scotus" copied from Spagnoletti, "Abraham" by Murillo, "Mercury and Venus" by Raphael Mengs, and a "Madonna and Child." The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £9. 7., and those of corn and hay for one of £135. 17. In the park grounds is an old font, with the date 1069.

BENTON, LONG, or MICKLE, (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 8711 inhabitants, of whom 2451 are in the township of Long Benton. This parish is bounded on the south by the river Tyne, and intersected from east to west by the North Shields and Newcastle railway, and turnpike-road; it extends eight miles and a half from north to south, and at the widest point is about three in breadth; and the whole comprises, with the townships of Weetsleet, Killingworth, Little Benton, and Walker, 8869*a. 2r. 7p.* The township of Long Benton, occupying about the middle of the parish, consists of 3301*a. 35p.*; the manor is vested in the Rev. Ralph H. Brandling, and Dixon Dixon, Esq., of Unthank Hall, Haltwhistle, jointly. On the banks of the river are various large manufactories, and staiths for shipping coal; and the district contains many extensive collieries, which are now nearly exhausted as respects coal for domestic purposes, though much remains applicable to steam furnaces: in Weetsleet and Walker townships are some freestone quarries, affording employment to a considerable number of persons. Among the gentlemen's seats in the parish, are Seaton Burn, Benton Park, and Benton Hall, the residences of their respective proprietors, the Rev. Ralph H. Brandling, Captain John Potts, and William Losh, Esq.; Long Benton House and another mansion are the property of Dixon Dixon, Esq., the former occupied by William Smith, Esq., and the latter by Mrs. R. Atkinson; Thomas Taylor, Esq. resides in a large house belonging to Robert Hedley, Esq.; and of two houses at Killingworth belonging to Mrs. Bell, (formerly Miss Reay, now the lady of the county member,) one is occupied by Nicholas Wood, Esq., well known for his work on railways, and the other, a handsome mansion of great extent, is divided into residences for Mr. Wales and other colliery agents. The village of Long Benton, consisting for the most part of one long street, is built upon a rock, in a pleasant and healthy situation.

The LIVING, a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 1. 3., is in the gift of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford, in whose favour an impropriation was made, on the grant of Sir Philip Somerville, in 1342. The corn and hay tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of about £1500, of which £687. 11. are derived from the township of Long Benton, and the vicarial tithes for £120, of which £52 are for the same township; the glebe consists of about 80 acres. The church, which stands in a spacious burial-ground, a short distance north of the village, was rebuilt, with the exception of the chancel, in 1791, and is a neat structure with a tower and spire; hitherto it has always been reputed to have been dedicated to St. Bartholomew, but in the license for erecting the chantry to the Virgin, founded by Adam de Benton, and which bears date Jan. 7th, 1311, the church is mentioned as St. Andrew's (ecclesia Sancti Andreae de Benton); this document has only recently been accessible, and is to be found in the register of Bishop Kellawe, lately restored to the registry office at Durham. The vicarage-house, the residence of the Rev. John Besly, D.C.L., stands about the centre of the village.

tached, was built a few years since, at a cost of £205, partly defrayed by subscription; and large school-rooms were built at Killingworth colliery in 1840, by Lord Ravensworth and partners, one of which is now used for divine worship, under license of the Bishop of Durham. The dissenters have several places of worship in remote parts of the parish. A close of land, called Dacres Close, in the township of Merton and parish of Tynemouth, now producing about £12 per annum, was bequeathed to the vicar and churchwardens of Benton, by Cuthbert Alder, Esq., in 1736, for distribution among the poor of Weetsleet. The Roman wall of Severus passed through the parish before its immediate termination at Wallsend: on the line of this wall was an ancient chapel, and another chapel is traditionally spoken of as having stood near Low Weetsleet; both have long since disappeared. Among the eminent persons connected with the place, may be named the celebrated Dr. Charles Hutton, and George Stephenson, the railway engineer, the former of whom, when a boy, worked in the pits at Long Benton colliery, and the latter was a brakeman at Killingworth colliery, and exhibited the first instance of his mechanical genius in the repair of the watches of his fellow-workmen.

BENTWORTH (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of ALTON, hundred of ODIHAM, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (W.) from Alton; containing 609 inhabitants. On the loss of Normandy, Peter, Archbishop of Rouen, obtained license, in the 9th of Edward III., to alienate his manor of "Binterworth," which he held in free socage, to William de Melton, Archbishop of York. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 10. 5., and in the gift of the Rev. Thomas Matthews: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £907. 10., and the glebe comprises 90 acres, with a house. A school is supported by the chief landed proprietor and the incumbent. George Withers, the poet, was born here in 1588.

BENWELL, a district chapelry, comprising the township of BENWELL, and part of that of ELSWICK, in the union of NEWCASTLE, W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 2415 inhabitants, of whom 1433 are in the township of Benwell, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Newcastle. This place, anciently Benwall, or By-the-Wall, the Roman wall having passed this way, is supposed to occupy the site of the Condercum of the Notitia. It comprises by measurement 1074 acres, chiefly elevated land, rising gradually and beautifully from the Tyne; the soil is generally good, and being well cultivated produces abundant crops of corn and grass; and the scenery embraces most extensive views, including the vales of Tyne, Derwent, and Ravensworth, with their wood and water, and numerous mansions. The district also abounds in coal and freestone. Benwell colliery, opened in 1790, belongs to Aubone Surtees, Esq., and partners, and the coal, which is of excellent quality, is known in the London market as Adair's main. In the 17th century a seam of coal in the vicinity caught fire at a candle, and continued to burn for upwards of thirty years, bursting out in various places like a volcano. Various manufactories are situated on the low grounds near the Tyne, viz., of glue, red paint, paper, fire-bricks, and ornamental vases; and Messrs. Robert Lister and Sons have a water-mill for grinding fire-clay, which is driven by two pumping engines, one of them raising 1000 gallons of water per minute. The road from Newcastle to Carlisle, and the Newcastle and Carlisle railway, pass through the township in nearly a parallel direction.

Among the many gentlemen's seats is the Old Tower, anciently the summer residence of the priors of Tyne-mouth, (who had a chapel here,) and subsequently the seat of the Shafto family; it was rebuilt in 1832, at the cost of about £14,000, by the late Thomas Crawhall, Esq., and is now the residence of Mrs. Anderson, whose son, Thomas Anderson, Esq., of Little Harle Tower, was high sheriff for the county in 1843. There are also, the Lodge, formerly an adjunct of the Tower, the property of William Ord, Esq., M. P., who is the principal landowner in the township; the Hall, with its choice terrace-walk, belonging to William Isaac Cookson, Esq.; the Grove, a convenient family mansion, with ample gardens and pleasure-grounds, the property of Charles Henry Cook, Esq.; the Villa, standing on Benwell-hill, and overlooking the whole country, the seat of Lawrence Hewison, Esq.; and the Cottage, possessed by William Hawthorn, Esq., civil engineer, who, and whose brother, are the successful builders of locomotive engines, now in extensive use, as well on the continent as in Great Britain.

The chapelry has been detached from the parish of St. John, Newcastle. The church, dedicated to St. James, stands conspicuously on an eminence near the centre of the district, and was erected in 1832, at an expense of £1665, partly defrayed by local subscription, and partly by grants from the Church Commissioners, the Incorporated Society, and the Diocesan Church Building Society; it is a neat edifice in the Norman-English style, with a square tower, and contains 632 sittings, of which 400 are free. The Incumbent of St. John's had the first presentation to the living, but the patronage will henceforth be vested in the Vicar of Newcastle; the net income is £150: the Rev. William Maughan, curate and evening lecturer of St. John's, was presented in July, 1843. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £244. 17. 5., of which £89. 8. are payable to the Bishop, a similar sum to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle, and £66. 1. 5. to the vicar of the parish, who has also a glebe of above 12 acres. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists; and a school, belonging to the Church, the master of which is allowed a house and schoolroom by Mr. Ord, and coal by the owners of the colliery. The site of the burial-ground attached to the prior's chapel is marked by a few tomb-stones; the old ruins were demolished in 1831.

BENWICK, a chapelry, in the parish of DODDINGTON, union and hundred of NORTH WITCFORD, Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from March; containing 679 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. A rent-charge of £754. 13. 10. has been awarded as a commutation in lieu of the tithes.

BEOLEY (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of KING'S-NORTON, Upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Northfield and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Bromsgrove; containing 657 inhabitants. It belonged successively to the noble families of Mortimer, Beauchamp, and Holland, of whose ancient castle there are some remains; and in the reign of Charles I. the manor was the property of Ralph Sheldon, a distinguished royalist, whose mansion was burnt, to prevent its falling into the possession of the parliamentarians. The parish is on the borders of Warwickshire, and is intersected at its eastern extremity by the road from Birmingham to Alcester; it contains 4487 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £73; patron and impropiator, W. Holmes, Esq.

BEPTON, or BETTON, a parish, in the union of MIDHURST, hundred of EASEBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Midhurst; containing 207 inhabitants. The parish comprises a portion of the South Downs, and part of it is comprehended within the electoral boundaries of the borough of Midhurst. It contains by estimation 1098 acres, of which 312 are arable, 434 meadow and pasture, 100 woodland, and 252 common and down land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of the family of Poyntz: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £140, and the glebe comprises 20 acres. The church consists of a nave and chancel, and is in the early English style.

BERDON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of BISHOP-STORTFORD, hundred of CLAVERING, N. division of ESSEX, 5 miles (S. W.) from Newport; containing 391 inhabitants. It is on the west borders of the county of Hertford, and comprises 1771*a. 3r. 37p.*; the soil, which is chiefly strong and heavy, is in some parts light, but generally fertile. An act for inclosing lands was obtained in 1838, at which time 13 acres were appropriated for the recreation of the inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Ugley: the tithes are inappropriate in the Governors of Christ's Hospital, and have been commuted for a rent-charge of £360. The church is an ancient edifice. A priory of Augustine canons was founded in the reign of Henry III., of which the revenue at the Dissolution amounted to £35. 5. 1 $\frac{1}{4}$. The Rev. Joseph Mede, a learned commentator on the Book of Revelations, was born here in 1586.

BERE-CHURCH (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union, and within the liberties of the borough, of COLCHESTER, N. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Colchester; containing 146 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron and impropiator, Sir G. H. Smyth, Bart., of Bere-Church Hall, to whose family, and to the memory of Lord Audley, there are monuments in the church.

BERGH-APTON (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of CLAVERING, E. division of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Norwich; containing 564 inhabitants. It comprises 1938*a. 3r. 21p.*, and was formerly two parishes, Bergh and Apton. The living is a rectory, to which a mediety of the rectory of Holveston is annexed, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Earl of Abergavenny: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £585, and one of £5. 5. is paid to the rector of Rockland; the glebe comprises 48 acres, with a handsome house attached. The church, situated on an eminence, is a neat cruciform structure, enlarged in 1838. A national school, with a house for a mistress, in the Tudor style, was erected in 1839. There is a town estate, consisting of 60 acres, which lets for £80, applied to general purposes; also a poor's estate, comprising 23 acres, which lets for £26 per annum. A church existed at Apton, dedicated to St. Martin, but there are no remains of it.

BERGHOLT, EAST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Manningtree; containing 1461 inhabitants. It comprises 3063*a. 2r. 34p.*, and is situated on the river Stour, which forms its southern boundary. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Brantham: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £820, and there are $20\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. The church is a large and handsome edifice, of which the steeple was never finished. There is a place of worship for Independents. Lettice Dykes, in 1589, gave property, now producing about £40 per annum, to endow a free school, which was built by subscription, on land given by Edward Lamb; and a national school has been established. The Knights Templars had a manor here.

BERGHOLT, WEST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Colchester; containing 822 inhabitants. It derives its name from the Saxon Berg, a hill, and Holt, a wood; and comprises 2274*a. 18p.*, of which 1733 acres are arable, 119 pasture, and 108 wood. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £454; patron, William Fisher, Esq. The church is an ancient edifice, consisting of a nave and south aisle, separated by massive pillars, and a chancel, with a wooden turret surmounted by a shingled spire. A chantry was founded here in 1331, by J. De Bures, for a priest to officiate at the altar of the Virgin Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A national school has been erected; and on the village green are three almshouses.

BERKELEY (ST. MARY), a market-town and parish, in the union of THORNBURY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 17 miles (S. W.) from Gloucester, 19 (N. E.) from Bristol, and 114 (W. by N.) from London; comprising the tythings of Alkington, Breadstone, Ham, Hamfallow, and Hinton, and the chapelry of Stone, and containing 4405 inhabitants. This place, according to Sir Robert Atkyns, the historian of Gloucestershire, derives its name from the Saxon Beorc, a birch-tree, and Leas, a pasture, from which it has been inferred that the parish was formerly remarkable for the growth of birch-trees. From the fertility of the soil, and its contiguity to the river Severn, it has always been a place of considerable importance, and at a very early period gave name to the great manor of Berkeley, which during the heptarchy was held of the crown, at £500. 17. 2. per annum, by Roger de Berkeley, a near relative of Edward the Confessor, and lord of Dursley, from whom the earliest authentic pedigree of the Berkeley family is deduced. Berkeley, notwithstanding the residence of the oldest branches of the family in their castle at Dursley, was a market-town, and had a nunnery endowed with the large manor of Berkeley. The time of the foundation of this establishment, and the name of the founder, are not known; but its suppression, prior to the Conquest, was effected by the perfidious avarice of Earl Godwin, who, in order to obtain its ample revenues, introduced his nephew into the convent for the purpose of seducing the sisterhood, and, on the accomplishment of the design, artfully reporting to his sovereign the state of the establishment, procured its dissolution, and was rewarded for his treachery with a grant of its lands. A few years afterwards, William the Conqueror, professing high regard for all the relatives of Edward the Confessor, granted the manor of Berkeley to Roger Berkeley, of Dursley, by whose descendants it was held till the reign of Henry II., when, refusing to pay the fee-farm rent, and also taking part with Stephen, they were dispossessed by the former monarch, who bestowed the manor upon Robert Fitz-Harding, the descendant of a younger son of the king of Denmark, and at that time mayor of Bristol, who, being a man of great wealth, materially assisted Henry in his contest with Stephen. Fitz-Harding, however, was so greatly annoyed in his new possessions by the Berkeleys of Dursley, that Henry II. interfered to make peace between them, which he ultimately effected by arranging a marriage between Maurice, son of Robert Fitz-Harding, and the daughter of Roger de Berkeley, upon which the former assumed the name of Berkeley, and from this union descended the present family of Berkeley; the male issue of the Berkeleys of Dursley became extinct in 1382. The castle, erected during this reign at the south-east end of the town, out of the ruins of the ancient nunnery, was considerably enlarged by successive proprietors in the reigns of Edward II. and III., and became one of the principal baronial seats in the kingdom: it has been connected with many transactions of intense political interest, and in the reign of John was one of the places of rendezvous for the confederate barons, who extorted from that monarch the grant of Magna Charta. Edward II. after his deposition was detained a prisoner in the castle under the alternate custody of Lords Berkeley, Montravers, and Gournay; and during the sickness of the first, by whom he had been always treated with kindness and humanity, was barbarously murdered by the two latter: the room and bed in which the murder was perpetrated are still shown to persons visiting the castle. During the reigns of Henry VI. and Edward IV. the town suffered materially from the attacks of the Earl of Warwick, who, in right of his wife, laid claim to the castle, of which he endeavoured to obtain possession by force; and in the civil war of the 17th century, being garrisoned for the king, it was besieged by the parliamentarians, to whom, after a vigorous resistance of nine days, it was compelled to surrender. The castle and estates are now the property of Earl Fitz-Harding, to whom they were devised by his father, the late Earl of Berkeley.

The TOWN is situated on a gentle eminence in the beautiful vale of Berkeley, at the distance of two miles from the river Severn, the tides of which, flowing up the Berkeley Avon, render it navigable to the town for vessels of forty or fifty tons' burthen. At present it consists only of two streets irregularly built, of which the principal is well paved, and contains a few good houses: the surrounding scenery is pleasing; and the ancient castle, which has been partly modernised as the residence of Earl Fitz-Harding, forms an interesting feature in the landscape. The trade is principally in coal, which is brought from the forest of Dean, by the rivers Severn and Avon, for the supply of the neighbourhood. The Berkeley and Gloucester ship canal joins the Severn at Sharpness Point, in the parish, at the distance of two miles from the town, where are the harbour and entrance locks, esteemed one of the finest pieces of masonry in the kingdom; the canal, for nearly a mile in length, is separated from the rapid flow of the Severn only by a high and massive wall. The parish, which is the largest in the county, being twenty-seven miles in circumference, contains some fine pasture; and there are extensive dairies, from which is produced the celebrated Berkeley cheese: an act for inclosing the waste lands was passed in 1839. The market, which is inconsiderable, is on Tuesday; and fairs are held on May 14th and Dec. 1st: a handsome market-house was erected by subscription in 1825. The corporation exists by prescription, and has scarcely any municipal functions or jurisdiction; it consists of a mayor and twelve aldermen, who appoint a serjeant-at-mace, two constables, and other officers. A court for the recovery of small debts within the hundred of Berkeley is held every third Monday; and the county magistrates hold a petty-session every alternate Tuesday.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £32. 15. 7½; patron, Earl Fitz-Harding; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £985, and the vicarial for one of £749. 10.; there are 7 acres of glebe, annexed to the vicarage, and 1 acre, belonging to the Dean and Chapter. The church is a spacious structure, partly in the later Norman and partly in the early English style, and though greatly altered, still retains some portion of its original character; the tower, which is detached, has been rebuilt within the last century. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The free school was founded in 1696, by Mr. Samuel Turner, who endowed it with land producing a rental of £38; which endowment was augmented with lands purchased with money given by Mr. John Smith and the Countess of Berkeley, in 1717, and now let for £17 per annum. John Attwood, in 1626, bequeathed to the poor, land, which, together with three acres given by Thomas Machin, in 1630, yields a rental of £40; and there are various other charitable benefactions. The ancient castle occupies a site nearly circular in form; the entrance from the outer into the inner court is through a massive arched portal, on the left of which is the keep, a fine specimen of Norman military architecture, containing the dungeon chamber, without either window or chimney, in which Edward II. was confined; in the floor is an opening to the dungeon, which is twenty-eight feet deep; the great hall was built in the reign of Edward III. Edward Jenner, M.D. and F.R.S., who introduced the practice of vaccination, was born here in 1742, and his remains were deposited in the church.

BERKESWELL (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of MERIDEN, Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 6¼ miles (W. by N.) from Coventry; containing 1504 inhabitants. This place is supposed to derive its name from a copious and powerful spring, which, at a short distance from its source, turns a mill. The parish comprises by measurement 5902 acres, of which the surface is flat, and the soil partly strong clay, and partly light earth; sandstone is found. The London and Birmingham railroad intersects the parish, and passes within half a mile, through a tunnel 300 yards long; the river Blythe partly bounds the parish on the west, and it is likewise crossed from south to north by the road between Kenilworth and Coleshill. The living is a rectory, with Barston annexed, valued in the king's books at £14. 12. 6., and in the gift of Col. Disbrowe: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £795, and the glebe comprises 63 acres. The church is an ancient structure, originally in the Norman style, of which the chancel still remains; the nave and tower are later English. There is an endowment, amounting to about £70 per annum, for the support of a school, which is now conducted on the national plan, and for other charitable purposes.

BERKHAMPSTEAD, or NORTH-CHURCH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BERKHAMPSTEAD, hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 1½ mile (N. W. by W.) from Great Berkhamstead; containing 1265 inhabitants. It comprises 3885a. 2r., of which about 1600 acres are arable, and 206 wood, and surrounds Great Berkhamstead; the village is situated in a valley. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Cornwall: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £900, and there are nearly 11 acres of glebe. A national school is partly supported by the rector; and there are several gifts to the poor. On the top of the western hill are the small but interesting ruins of Marlin chapel, which is supposed to have been demolished by Oliver Cromwell; the remaining walls are chiefly supported by ivy of strong and luxuriant growth, and in the area are some large timber trees.

BERKHAMPSTEAD, GREAT (St. PETER), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 25½ miles (W. by S.) from Hertford, and 26 (N. W. by W.) from London; containing 2979 inhabitants. The Saxon name of this place, Berg-hamstede, is derived from its situation, either on a hill or near a fortress, which latter, from the site of the present town, appears to be the more probable. It is a town of considerable antiquity, the kings of Mercia having had a castle here, to which circumstance may be attributed its early growth and subsequent importance. According to Spelman, Wightred, King of Kent, assisted at the council held here in 697. At the time of the Conquest, William, on his arrival at the place, was met by Stigand, Archbishop of Canterbury, who tendered his submission; but on leaving Berkhamstead, his march was greatly obstructed by the opposition of Frederick, abbot of St. Alban's, who caused the roads to be blocked up, by cutting down the trees, and, on his arrival at St. Alban's, exacted an oath from him that he would observe the ancient laws of the realm, particularly those of Edward the Confessor. Robert, Earl of Moreton, to whom the Conqueror gave the town, built a castle here, which was subsequently taken from his son William, who had rebelled against Henry I., and by that monarch's order razed to the ground. Henry II. held his court here for some time, and conferred many privileges on the town.

The castle was rebuilt in the reign of John, and soon after besieged by Louis, Dauphin of France, who had come over to assist the barons that were in arms against the king. In the 11th of Edward III., Berkhamstead sent two representatives to the great council at Westminster; and James I., who selected the place as a nursery for his children, granted the inhabitants a charter of incorporation; but they were so impoverished during the civil war in the reign of his son Charles I., that they were unable to maintain their privileges, and the charter became forfeited.

The TOWN is pleasantly situated in a deep valley, on the south-western bank of the river Bulbourne, and consists of two streets intersecting at right angles, the principal of which, nearly a mile in length, contains several handsome houses; the air is highly salubrious, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. Assemblies are held regularly during the season. The manufacture of wooden bowls, spoons, and other articles of a like kind, formerly prevailed, but it is on the decline; and the making of lace, which was also carried on extensively, has given place to the plating of straw, in which the female part of the population are chiefly employed. The Grand Junction canal, which passes by the town, affords an extensive line of inland navigation; and the railroad from London to Birmingham runs close to the canal, and has a station at this point of the line. The market is on Saturday; the market-house is an ancient building in the centre of the town. Fairs are held on Shrove-Tuesday and Whit-Monday, and there is also a statute fair at Michaelmas. The county magistrates hold a petty-session on the first and third Tuesdays in every month; and a court leet for the honour of Berkhamstead, which is part of the duchy of Cornwall, is held at Michaelmas. The prison is used as a house of correction, and for the temporary confinement of malefactors previously to their committal to the county gaol.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Cornwall: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £434, and there are 2 acres of glebe. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, exhibiting some fine portions in the several styles of English architecture; the tower, rising from the intersection, and highly enriched with sculpture, was built by Richard Torrington, in the reign of Henry VIII.; within the church are two chapels at the eastern end, one dedicated to St. John, the other to St. Catharine, and some interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Independents. The free grammar school was instituted in the time of Henry VIII., and endowed with lands belonging to the dissolved guild of St. John the Baptist: in the succeeding reign it was made a royal foundation; the master, usher, and chaplain, were incorporated by act of parliament; and the Warden of All Saints' College, Oxford, was appointed visitor. A charity school, called the Blue-coat school, for twenty boys and ten girls, was founded in 1727, by Mr. Thomas Bourne, who endowed it with £8000; the property now consists of £9300 in the New South Sea annuities. A Sunday school was endowed by the Rev. George Nugent, with the interest of £100, since invested in the three per cent. consols.; and a national school for girls has been lately erected and endowed by the Countess of Bridgewater. Alms-houses for six aged widows were founded in 1681, and endowed with £1000, by Mr. John Sayer; which endowment was augmented with £300 by his widow, in 1712; with £26. 5. per annum by Mrs. Martha Deere, in 1784; and with £400 by the Rev. Geo. Nugent and Mrs. Elizabeth Nugent, in 1822. King James I. gave £100, and Charles I. £200, for providing employment and fuel for the poor, and there are also several other bequests for charitable uses. The union, of which the town is the head, comprises ten parishes and places, of which seven are in the county of Hertford, and three in that of Bucks; and contains a population of 11,512. There are slight vestiges of the ancient residence of the Mercian kings, on the north side of the town; and at the north-east end of Castle-street are the remains of the castle, consisting principally of walls of an elliptical form, defended on the north-west side by a double, and on the other sides by a triple, moat; the entrance was at the south-east angle, where there are two wide piers, between which probably was the drawbridge. An hospital, dedicated to St. James, formerly existed, but there are no vestiges of it. At the end of the High-street is a spring of clear water, called St. James's Well, to which medicinal properties are attributed. The poet Cowper was born here in 1731.

BERKHAMPSTEAD, LITTLE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of HERTFORD, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Hertford; containing 555 inhabitants. The surface is hilly, and the soil consists of clay and gravel. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Marquess of Salisbury: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £250. 18. 4., and there are nearly 39 acres of glebe. At How Green is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school has been recently erected. On an elevated situation, near an old manor-house, a circular tower of brick, 100 feet in height, termed the Observatory, has been erected, which commands an extensive prospect.

BERKLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of FROME, E. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Frome, on the road from Bath to Salisbury; containing 496 inhabitants. This place appears to have formed part of the possessions of the Newborough family, who were relatives to, and came over to England with, William the Conqueror, and one of whose descendants, Thomas Newborough, was interred in the church in 1531. The parish, which comprises about 1800 acres, is richly wooded, and abounds with pleasing scenery; freestone, resembling that of Bath, but of harder quality, is extensively quarried for building, and limestone abounds. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 7., and in the gift of Sir John Mordaunt: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £354, and the glebe comprises 55 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres; a rent-charge of £9 is also payable to the rector of Beckington. The church was erected in 1751. A parochial school is supported by Sir John Mordaunt, Bart. Sir John Colborne, afterwards Lord Seaton, resided in the rectory-house for some time.

BERKSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north by Oxfordshire and the southern part of Buckinghamshire, on the east by the counties of Buckingham and Surrey, on the south by that of Southampton, on the west by that of Wilts, and at its north-western extremity, for a very short distance, by that of Gloucester. It extends from $51^{\circ} 20'$ to $51^{\circ} 48'$ (N. Lat.), and from $34^{\circ} 30'$ to $1^{\circ} 43'$ (W. Lon.); and, including the detached portions, it contains nearly 726 square miles, or about 464,500 statute acres. There are 31,653 houses inhabited, 1590 uninhabited, and 201 in the course of erection; and the population amounts to 161,147, of whom 80,231 are males, and 80,916 females. At the period of the conquest of Britain by the Romans, the south-eastern part of the county was inhabited by the Bibroci; a small portion of it, on the south side, by the Segontiaci; and the remaining more extensive tract by the Attrebatii, or Attrebates. Under the Roman dominion it was included in the great division called Britannia Prima; and in the time of the heptarchy it formed part of the powerful kingdom of the West Saxons, or Wessex. Berkshire is in the diocese of Oxford, province of Canterbury, and forms an arch-deaconry, in which are comprised the deaneries of Abingdon, Newbury, Reading, and Wallingford, containing 148 parishes. For purposes of civil government it is divided into the hundreds of Beynhurst, Bray, Charlton, Compton, Cookham, Faircross, Farringdon, Ganfield, Hormer, Kintbury-Eagle, Lambourn, Morton, Ock, Reading, Riplesmere, Shrivenham, Sunning, Theale, Wantage, and Wargrave; and it contains the borough and market-towns of Abingdon, Reading, Wallingford, and Windsor; the incorporated market-towns of Maidenhead, Newbury, and Wokingham; and the other market-towns of Farringdon, Hungerford, East Ilsley, Lambourn, and Wantage. Under the act of the 2nd of William IV. cap. 45, the county sends to parliament three knights of the shire: Reading and Windsor continue to return two representatives each; the number for Wallingford has been restricted by the statute to one; and Abingdon still sends one, as heretofore. It is included in the Oxford circuit: the Lent assizes and the Epiphany sessions are held at Reading; the Summer assizes and Midsummer sessions, at Abingdon; the Michaelmas sessions at either of these towns, at the option of the magistrates; and the Easter sessions at Newbury. The county gaol and house of correction is at Reading, and the county house of correction at Abingdon.

Berkshire comprises four grand natural divisions: the first is the great Vale of White Horse, which is bounded on the south by the White Horse hills (a continuation of the Chiltern range), on the east and north by the Thames, and on the west by Wiltshire, constituting the whole north-western part of the county. Here, along the banks of the Thames, is a fertile but narrow range of meadows, seldom exceeding half a mile in breadth, from which the land rises in most parts gradually, forming moderately elevated ridges, or distinct eminences. Between these hills and the chalk range, with a gentle inclination towards the south, lies the Vale, properly so called; remarkably productive of every kind of grain and pulse. The next grand division comprises the chalk hills, which form so prominent a feature in the western part of the county, presenting towards the Vale a steep declivity, mostly bare of wood, but clothed with a fine sward. The third great natural division consists of the Vale of the Kennet, containing a variety of richly diversified scenery. The fourth is the Forest district, which comprises the remaining eastern part of the county, being the whole of that lying eastward of the Loddon, except a detached range of chalk hills included between the Thames and an imaginary line drawn from Maidenhead to Wargrave, and which may be considered as forming a collateral part of the second division, or chalk district. The surface of the Forest district is agreeably varied, particularly in Windsor Forest, and the views from Windsor terrace are of unrivalled beauty; but it contains the greatest quantity of waste land of any in the county, the most extensive tracts of which are situated on the south side of it, and one of them, called Maidenhead Thicket, on the north.

The soils are various, but those of a chalky or gravelly nature predominate. Owing to the great extent of barren heaths in the south and east parts of the county, and of sheep-walks on the chalk hills, the quantity of land in cultivation does not exceed the general average of the kingdom. The total amount of arable land is computed at 255,000 acres; the rotations of crops are of infinite variety, but wheat and barley are the principal. The natural grass lands, bordering on the rivers, and in the dairy district occupying the western part of the Vale of White Horse, together with other dry pastures, parks, &c., but exclusively of the sheep downs of the chalk districts, are computed to comprise about 97,000 acres, of which 72,000 are included in the Vale. The dairy district includes the greater part of the hundreds of Shrivenham and Farringdon, and smaller portions of those of Ganfield and Wantage; the cheese made in it is for the most part of the kind known by the name of "Single Gloucester," and a large quantity is annually sent down the Thames to the metropolis. The native breed of hogs is the most esteemed of any in Great Britain. The woodlands occupy about 30,000 acres, much of which consists of coppices, of which those in the Vale of the Kennet supply large quantities of hoops and brooms to the London market. The best wooded tracts are in Windsor Forest, on the south side of the Kennet, and in several parishes to the north of that river; and Bagley wood, near Oxford, is one of the largest. A considerable extent of boggy land in the vicinity of Newbury is planted with alder-trees, of which the wood at eight or nine years' growth, is there made into rakes, prongs, shafts for mops and besoms, &c. Along the banks of the Thames and on its islands are numerous osier beds; and in every other suitable situation osier plantations are objects of considerable attention, more especially along the courses of the rivers Kennet and Loddon: the greater part of the produce, after being prepared for the basket-makers, is conveyed by the Thames to London. The celebrated Royal forest of Windsor was formerly of much greater extent than it is at present, having comprised large portions of the counties of Surrey and Bucks, and the whole south-eastern part of Berkshire, as far as Hungerford, on the border of Wiltshire: the Vale of the Kennet was disafforested by charter in 1226, and the circuit of the forest is now reduced to about 56 miles. The greater part is under tillage; and Windsor Great Park was reduced by George III. from 3800 to 1800 acres, 2000 acres having been brought into cultivation. The forest is computed to comprehend 59,600 acres, of which about 5500 are inclosed lands belonging to the crown; 29,000, other private property; 600, encroachments upon the wastes; and the remaining 24,500 acres, open forest land, including heaths and water.

Berkshire was formerly one of the principal seats of the clothing trade, which, about the middle of the 17th century, was carried on to a very considerable extent, particularly at Abingdon, Reading, and Newbury, and in their vicinities. Sacking and sail-cloth were also made at Abingdon and Wantage; and silk is yet manufactured on a small scale at Wokingham. There are several large breweries, especially at Windsor, which is celebrated for its ale, several paper-mills on the banks of the Kennet, and numerous corn-mills. The principal rivers are the Thames, the Kennet, the Loddon, the Ock, and the Lambourn. The Thames forms the entire northern boundary of Berkshire, in a circuitous course of nearly 105 miles, in the whole of which it is navigable, and is augmented by the influx of all the others before it quits the county. The Kennet is navigable, partly by means of artificial collateral cuts, to its junction with the Thames a little below Reading. The Kennet and Avon canal, constructed under an act obtained in 1794, connects the navigable channel of the former river at Newbury with that of the latter at Bath; and at Simington, in the county of Wilts, the Wiltshire and Berkshire canal, formed under an act obtained in 1795, branches from it, and, entering this county at Hackson bridge, near Shrivenham, traverses the Vale of White Horse, to the Thames at Abingdon. The north-western part of the shire also derives some advantage from the Oxford and the Thames and Severn canals; and the south-eastern, from the Basingstoke canal. The Great Western railway enters the county a little to the east of Maidenhead, and passes on the south side of that town, to Reading, after which it skirts the border of the county as far as to the north of Basildon Park, where it crosses the Thames into Oxfordshire, and runs for a short distance along the boundary of that county, re-crossing the Thames a little above South Stoke, and again entering Berkshire, whence it proceeds to Wilts.

THE REMAINS OF ANTIQUITY are various and interesting. The Roman stations were, Spina, at the present village of Speen; that called Bibracte, the exact site of which is yet undecided; and an important station, the name of which has not been transmitted to modern times, at Wallingford. Several Roman roads crossed the county; but it is difficult to reconcile their courses to any general theory, or to fix with precision the exact places to which they tended. The principal were, one from Glevum, now Gloucester, to London; and the Ikeneld-street, which enters from Oxfordshire at Stratley, where it divides into two branches, one of which, under the name of the Ridgway, runs along the entire northern verge of the chalk hills, and may be regarded as the main line, and the other, under the name of the Westridge, passes by Hampstead Hermitage, the Long Lane, and the vicinity of Newbury, to Old Sarum in Wilts. Another very ancient, and perhaps a Roman, road enters from Wiltshire, on the north-western confines of the county, under the name of the Port-way, and appears to have taken a direction towards some spot south of Wallingford. There are also numerous remains of camps, of which it is thought that Letcombe Castle and Uffington Castle, both occupying commanding situations on the downs, were constructed by the Britons and subsequently used by the Romans. In a field about half a mile from Little Coxwell is a space of fourteen acres, styled Cole's Pits, in which are 273 pits, for the most part circular, and excavated in the sand to the depth of from seven to twenty-two feet: they are supposed to mark the sites of ancient British habitations. Near Uffington Castle is the rude figure of a horse, giving name to the hills and vale of White Horse, and which is formed by cutting away the turf on the steep brow of the chalk hill above Uffington, and occupies about an acre of ground. At a little distance from this is a mount called Dragon hill, supposed to mark the place of interment of some British chieftain; and many tumuli are dispersed over the downs, especially in the way from Uffington to Lambourn, where a group of them has acquired the name of the "Seven Barrows." Within the limits of the county were anciently twelve religious houses, including an alien priory, and two commanderies of the Knight Hospitallers; also three colleges, of which that of the royal chapel of St. George, at Windsor, still remains; and ten hospitals, five of which yet exist, namely, two at Abingdon, and one each at Donnington, Lambourn, and Newbury. Of the magnificent abbey built by Henry I. at Reading, little more than rude heaps of stones can now be seen; but there are considerable remains of the church of the Grey Friars there, converted into a bridewell. There are likewise some vestiges of the monasteries of Abingdon, Hurley, and Bisham, and of the collegiate church of Wallingford. The fragment of a wall, and extensive ditches and earthworks, indicate the site of the important castle of Wallingford; and there yet exist ruins of the gateway of that of Donnington. The most remarkable mansion, in point of antiquity, is the manor-house at Appleton, which appears to be of as remote a date as the reign of Henry II. Berkshire has for a series of centuries derived some degree of celebrity from containing, at its easternmost extremity, one of the chief residences of the kings of England,—the vast and magnificent pile of Windsor Castle; and there are also many seats of the nobility and gentry, distinguished for their architectural beauties. The mineral waters are unimportant, the following only possessing any note, viz., a mild cathartic at Cumner; a weak chalybeate at Sunninghill; a strong chalybeate in the parish of Wokingham, called Gorrick Well; and some springs near Windsor, of the quality of the Epsom waters. The county gives the title of Earl to the family of Howard, Earls of Suffolk and Berkshire.

BERMERSLEY, a township, in the parish of NORTON-ON-THE-MOORS, union of LEEK, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, and of the county of STAFFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Newcastle-under-Line; containing 211 inhabitants.

BERMONDSEY (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish and union, in the borough of SOUTHWARK, E. division of the hundred of BRIXTON and of SURREY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. S. E.) from London; containing 34,947 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book, is described as a royal demesne, and, in other ancient records, as having been occasionally the residence of William the Conqueror, and his successor, William Rufus, who had a palace here. In 1089, a priory for Cluniac monks was founded by Aldwin Child, a citizen of London, as a cell to the abbey of La Charité in France, from which establishment brethren of that order are said to have been sent hither through the influence of Lanfranc, Archbishop of Canterbury. To this monastery William Rufus and some of his successors were great benefactors. Henry I. gave the palace to the monks, for the enlargement of their cloister, reserving part of it as a residence for himself, in which King John having subsequently resided, it obtained the appellation of King John's Palace, and has been by some antiquaries considered rather the original site than, as it was in reality, only an appendage to the monastery. This establishment increased so much in wealth and importance that it was found necessary to enlarge the buildings; and an hospital was erected adjoining it in 1213, for the reception of their converts and the education of children of indigent parents, which was dedicated to St. Thomas the Martyr. In the 45th of Edward III. it was sequestrated, with other alien priories, to the use of the crown, but was re-established. Richard II. elevated it into an abbey, and it retained its grandeur and importance till the Dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £548. 2. 5 $\frac{3}{4}$. The site appears to have been very extensive, comprising the present churchyard, and an adjoining area, still called King John's Court; and vestiges of the palace and conventual buildings may be traced in the gardens of the houses which have been erected on the site: a gateway, which was standing in 1807, has been taken down, in order to form Abbey-street. Bermondsey owes its origin to the monastery, in the vicinity of which a gradual accumulation of buildings had formed a village in the reign of Edward III., when a church was founded by the prior, for the use of the inhabitants. In this religious house Catharine of France, widow of Henry V., lived in retirement, and died in 1436; and here also, in 1486, Elizabeth, queen of Edward IV., who was sentenced by the council to forfeiture of lands, ended her life in confinement, and was interred at Windsor.

Bermondsey is situated on the southern bank of the river Thames: the houses are in general ancient and irregularly built, but there are several modern and handsome structures; the streets are paved, and well lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from the South London and the Southwark water-works. A great alteration has lately taken place by the formation of the London and Greenwich railway, which commences near the foot of London bridge, and crosses the parish by means of a magnificent viaduct of lofty arches, for the construction of which numbers of houses were purchased by the directors and pulled down along the line, which also serves for the London and Croydon railway-trains. The tanning of leather is carried on to a very great extent; there are numerous woolstaplers, fellmongers, carriers, and manufacturers of vellum and parchment, besides an extensive hat-factory, vinegar-works, distillery, and brewery. The situation is also favourable to other trades; there are a small dock and several yards for boat-builders, and there are likewise rope-makers, anchor-smiths, and stove-merchants, and an establishment for the printing and dyeing of calico. About 200 acres in the parish are cultivated for the production of vegetables.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 8. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of Mrs. Knapp;

net income, £514. The parish church, of which the west front and tower were repaired and embellished in 1830, is in the later English style. A district church, dedicated to St. James, was completed in 1828, partly by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, at an expense of £21,412. 19.; it is a handsome edifice, in the Grecian style, with a tower and a portico of four pillars of the Ionic order. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £300; patron, Rector of Bermondsey. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and a handsome and spacious Roman Catholic chapel was erected in 1834, at a cost of about £6000. Close to it is a convent of the Sisters of Mercy, erected in 1839, for about forty inmates, with a private chapel and a schoolroom for 300 female children; it cost about £4000. "The Bermondsey Free School," for sixty boys, who are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, was founded in 1709, by Mr. Josiah Bacon, who left £700 for building the premises, and £150 per annum for its endowment; the schoolroom, which was erected in 1718, in the Grange road, is a neat brick building, having a bust of the founder in a niche over the entrance. The united "Charity Schools," established in 1712, are supported partly by subscription, and partly by an endowment of £109. 16. 4. per annum, arising from several donations: the whole income is about £550, for which 224 boys and 150 girls are instructed, of whom 60 boys and 40 girls are also clothed. There are other schools supported by subscription, one of which has a small endowment; one in Great George-street, in which are 300 boys, is on the British system; two for Roman Catholics contain 200 boys and 200 girls; and in another, connected with the Independents, are 20 boys and 32 girls. In 1770, a chalybeate spring was discovered, and a spa established, which, for many years, was a celebrated place of entertainment. Israel Mauduit, an ingenious writer on politics and commerce, was born here in 1708.

BERNERS-ROOTHING.—See ROOTHING, BERNERS.

BERRICK-PRIOR, a liberty, in the parish of NEWINGTON, union of WALLINGFORD, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Wallingford; containing 181 inhabitants.

BERRICK-SALOME, a chapelry, in the parish of CHALGROVE, union of WALLINGFORD, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Bensington; containing 164 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Helen. Here is a school with a small endowment.

BERRIER, a township, in the parish of GREYSTOCK, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 8 miles (W. by S.) from Penrith; containing, with the township of Murrah, 127 inhabitants, of whom 65 are in Berrier. Mary Jackson, in 1799, left £230 in reversion, to found and endow a school for girls, which was built by subscription in 1828.

BERRINGTON, a township, in the parish of KYLOE, union of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, in ISLANDSHIRE, county of DURHAM, though locally northward, and for parliamentary purposes connected with the N. division, of NORTHUMBERLAND; adjoining Berwick, and containing 316 inhabitants.

BERRINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of CHIPPING-CAMPDEN, union of SHIPSTON-ON-STOUR, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTS GATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 158 inhabitants.

BERRINGTON, a township, in the parish of EYE, union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Leominster.

BERRINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, hundred of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Shrewsbury; containing 651 inhabitants. The navigable river Severn passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 12. 1.; net income, £393; patron, Lord Berwick.

BERRINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish and union of TENBURY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Tenbury; containing 207 inhabitants. The hamlet comprises 1261 acres, and forms the most eastern district of the county, being bounded on the north by the river Teme, and surrounded on the west and south by a portion of the county of Hereford.

BERROW (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, E. division of SOMERSET, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Axbridge; containing 578 inhabitants. The parish is situated on a small inlet from the Bristol Channel, to which it gives the name of Berrow bay, and by which it is bounded on the west. It comprises 1650 acres of land, of which the soil is various; the range of sand-hills that bound the coast contain many botanical and entomological rarities. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 11. $10\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and appropriator, Archdeacon of Wells, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £102, and who has 18 acres of glebe: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £218. 13., and there is an acre of glebe. The church is a neat edifice, but is likely to be buried in the sands, which have accumulated to such an extent, that the wall of the churchyard is twenty feet below the surface of the ground. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by subscription.

BERROW (ST. FRITH), a parish, in the union of UPTON-UPON-SEVERN, and in a detached part of the Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, locally in the Lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Upton and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 7 miles (W.) from Tewkesbury; containing 480 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by portions of the counties of Hereford and Gloucester, the three counties uniting at its western extremity; and it comprises 2023a. 2r. 35p., of which about two-fifths are arable, two-fifths pasture, and one-fifth woodland. The road between Tewkesbury and Ledbury passes near its northern border. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 4.; net income, £84; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Worcester.

BERRY-POMEROY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of TOTNES, hundred of HAYTOR, Paignton and S. divisions of DEVON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Totnes; containing, with the township of Bridgetown, 1149 inhabitants. This place derives its distinguishing appellation from a family of that name, one of whom, Ralph de Pomeroy, soon after the Conquest, founded a castle here, of which there are still some remains. The parish comprises by measurement 4335 acres, of which 2629 are arable, 1204 pasture, 237 woodland, and 167 orchard, and is intersected by the navigable river Dart; the low lands are rich and fertile, abounding in irrigated meadows and fruitful orchards, and on the high grounds are produced excellent crops of corn. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 19. 7.; patron and impropiator, Duke of Somerset: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, and the vicarial for one of £420, with a glebe of 3 acres. The church contains a finely-carved screen and rood-loft. A chapel in the pointed style was erected at Bridgetown, at the expense of the patron, in 1832.

BERRY-N-ARBOR (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of BRAUNTON, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Ilfracombe; containing 899 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 5000 acres of fertile land; limestone of fine quality is quarried to a considerable extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £34. 15. 10.; patrons, in turn, Bishop of Exeter, the Fursdon family, Rev. E. W. Richards, and J. D. Basset, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £545, and the glebe comprises 130 acres, with a house. The church is a neat edifice, with a handsome tower. There is a place of worship for Independents; and schools are supported by subscription. Bishop Jewell, celebrated for his controversy in support of the Protestant faith, was born here in 1522.

BERSTED, SOUTH (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the hundred of ALDWICK, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 6 miles (S. E.) from Chichester; containing, with the town of Bognor, and the tythings of North and South Bersted, and Shripney, 2490 inhabitants, of whom 194 are in North Bersted. It comprises 2455 acres, of which about 1575 acres are arable, 774 pasture, and 6 woodland; the surface is pleasingly varied, and the soil is in general a rich loam resting upon a reddish clay or brick earth, and in some parts sand and gravel. The village, which formerly consisted only of a few fishermen's cottages, has been greatly improved within the last few years. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 9.; patron, the Archbishop of Canterbury; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £810, and those of the vicar for £400. The church, erected in 1400, is a plain edifice, with a tower surmounted by a low spire of shingles; in the churchyard is the tomb of Sir Richard Hotham, Knt., founder of the town of Bognor. A chapel of ease, dedicated to St. John, was erected at Bognor, and consecrated in 1822. Stephen de "Berghestede," who was elevated to the see of Chichester in 1262, was a native of the place; and Dr. Lloyd, Bishop of Oxford, was vicar of the parish.

BERWICK, a parish, in the union of WEST FIRLE, hundred of LONGBRIDGE, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Lewes; containing 199 inhabitants. It comprises about 1000 acres, of which the soil is chiefly chalk, clay, and rich loam; and is bounded on the east by the Cuckmere river, and intersected by the road from Lewes to Eastbourne. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the gift of John Ellman, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £387. 10., and the glebe consists of 21 acres. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a tower formerly surmounted by a spire, which was destroyed by lightning in 1774. A parochial school is supported by subscription. Wood fossils are found in a sand-pit.

BERWICK (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of WILTON, hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 8 miles (N. W.) from Salisbury; containing 247 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the road from Salisbury to Devizes, comprises by computation 2300 acres of arable and pasture land, of which the soil is fertile, and the substratum chiefly chalk; many sheep are fed on the Downs. A fair is held on the 4th of October. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 10.; net income, £54; patron and impropiator, Lord Ashburton. The church is a very substantial building, having in the north transept a curious stone pulpit, which has been much noticed by antiquaries, and until within these few years was used by the officiating minister. A school is supported by subscription.

BERWICK (St. JOHN), a parish, in the union of TISBURY, hundred of CHALK, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Shaftesbury; containing 419 inhabitants. It comprises about 1700 acres, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil consists of all the varieties of clay, chalk, and sand. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 13. 4., and in the gift of New College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £500, and there are 53½ acres of glebe. The church is a handsome edifice in the later English style. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a school-house was built by the rector in 1835. About a mile southward from the village is an intrenchment, called Winkelbury Camp, supposed to have been constructed by the Romans.

BERWICK (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of TISBURY, hundred of DUNWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, 1 mile (E.) from Hindon; containing 41 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the road from London to Exeter, comprises by measurement 1200 acres of fertile land. A fair for sheep is held on St. Leonard's-day, the 6th of November, and is numerously attended. The ancient manor-house, now in ruins, was for many years the residence of the Howe family, of whom Sir George Howe had the honour to entertain the Prince of Orange in 1688; he also represented the borough of Hindon in parliament in 1660. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Sedghill annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 6. 8.; net income, £374; patron, J. Bennet, Esq.

BERWICK-BASSETT (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of MARLBOROUGH, hundred of CALNE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and N. divisions of WILTS, 8 miles (N. W. by W.) from Marlborough; containing 175 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1388 acres of fertile land, of which about one-third is pasture; there are about 8 acres of wood. The ancient manor-house, many ages since the residence of the Goddard family, is still remaining. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Calne, and annexed to the treasurership in the Cathedral of Salisbury. The church is a neat plain edifice, and contains a carved screen and font. Henry Webb, in 1775, endowed a school with £14 per annum.

BERWICK-HILL, a township, in the parish of PONTELAND, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9¼ miles (N. N. W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 112 inhabitants. The township comprises 1594a. 27p., of which two-thirds are arable, and the remainder grass land and waste; the soil is of a strong quality, producing good crops, particularly of grain, and the surface is elevated, and commands fine and extensive views; on the south is Prestwick Carr; and the river Pont flows on the west and north. The whole is the property of Thomas Stapleton, Esq., brother of Lord Beaumont, of Carlton Hall, Yorkshire. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £267. 5. 6., of which £244. 11. 4. are payable to Ralph Carr, Esq., of Dunston Hill, and £22. 14. 2. to the vicar of Ponteland.

BERWICK-IN-ELMETT. — See BARWICK-IN-ELMETT.

BERWICK, LITTLE, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. MARY, in SHREWSBURY, N. division of SALOP; containing 271 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £54; patrons, alternately, Hon. H. W. Powys and others. Near the chapel is an almshouse consisting of sixteen tenements, erected under the will of Sir Samuel Jones, dated in 1672, and endowed by him with £80 per annum; he also bequeathed £40 per annum as a stipend for the minister, and £20 per annum towards repairing the chapel and almshouses, all charged on the Berwick estate. The property of the charity, with funds derived from other sources, yields an income of £183.

BERWICK - UPON - TWEED (HOLY TRINITY), a port, borough, market-town, parish, and county of itself, and the head of a union, 64 miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 334 (N. by W.) from London; containing 8484 inhabitants. The name of this town, which Leland supposes to have been originally Aberwick, from the British terms, Aber, the mouth of a river, and Wic, a town, is by Camden and other antiquaries considered as expressive merely of a hamlet, or granary annexed to a place of greater importance, such appendages being usually in ancient records styled berewics, in which sense of the term Berwick is thought to have obtained its name from having been the grange of the priory of Coldingham, ten miles distant. The earliest authentic notice of Berwick occurs in the reign of Alexander I. of Scotland, and in that of Henry II. of England, to the latter of which monarchs it was given up, with four other towns, by William the Lion in 1176, as a pledge for the performance of the treaty of Falaise, by which, in order to obtain his release from captivity after the battle of Alnwick, in 1174, he had engaged to do homage to the English monarch as lord paramount for all his Scottish dominions. Richard I., to obtain a supply of money for his expedition to the Holy Land, sold the vassalage of Scotland for 10,000 marks, and restored this and the other towns to William, content with receiving homage for the territories only which that prince held in England. King John, upon retiring from an unsuccessful invasion of Scotland, burnt the town, upon which the Scots almost immediately rebuilt it. In 1291, the Commissioners appointed to examine and report on the validity of the title of the respective claimants to the crown of Scotland, met at Berwick, and pursued there the investigation which led to the decision in favour of John Balliol. Edward I. having compelled Balliol to resign his crown, took the town by storm in 1296, upon which a dreadful carnage ensued; and here he received the homage of the Scottish nobility in the presence of a council of the whole nation, and established a court of exchequer for the receipt of the revenue of the kingdom of Scotland. Wallace, in the following year, having laid siege to the town, took, and for a short time retained possession of it, but was unsuccessful in his attempt upon the castle, which was relieved by the arrival of a numerous army. Edward II., in prosecuting the war against Scotland, assembled his army here repeatedly, and made several inroads into the enemy's territory. Robert Bruce obtained it in 1318, and having razed the walls, and strengthened them with towers, kept it, notwithstanding several attacks from Edward II. and Edward III., until it surrendered to the latter after the celebrated battle of Hallidown Hill, within the borough, which took place on the 19th of July, 1333. As a frontier town it was always the first object of attack on the renewal of hostilities between the two kingdoms, and, after repeated surrenders and sieges, it was ceded to Edward IV., from whom and his successors as well as from preceding kings of Scotland, including Bruce, it received several charters and privileges in confirmation and enlargement of that granted by Edward I., in which Edward had confirmed to it the enjoyment of the Scottish laws as they existed in the time of Alexander III. After having been exposed during the subsequent reigns to the continued aggressions of the Scots and the English, Elizabeth repaired and strengthened the fortifications, and new walled part of the town: the garrison which had for some time been placed in it, was continued till the accession of James to the English throne, when its importance as a frontier town ceased: during the civil war in the reign of Charles I., it was garrisoned by the parliament.

The town is pleasantly situated on the northern bank, and near the mouth of the river Tweed, the approach to which from the English side is over a handsome stone bridge of fifteen arches, built in the reigns of James I. and Charles I. and connecting it with Tweedmouth on the south. The streets, with the exception of St. Mary-gate, usually called the High-street, Castlegate, Ravensdowne, the Parade, and Hide-hill, are narrow, but neatly paved, and the houses are in general well built: the town is lighted with gas, and an abundant supply of water is obtained by pipes laid down to the houses from the public reservoirs, which are the property of the corporation. Fuel is also plentiful, there being several collieries on the south, and one on the north, side of the river, within from two to four miles of the town. A public library was established in 1812, and a reading-room in 1842; the theatre, a small neat building, is opened at intervals, and there are assembly-rooms which are used on public occasions. The new fortifications, which are exceedingly strong, have displaced those of more ancient date, of which only a few ruins now remain; the ramparts afford an agreeable promenade, much frequented by the inhabitants. The present works consist of a rampart of earth, faced with stone: there are no outworks, with the exception of the old castle, which overlooks the Tweed, and is now completely in ruins, and an earthen battery at the landing place below the Magdalen fields: the line of works towards the river is almost straight, but to the north and east are five bastions, to two of which there are powder magazines: the harbour is defended by a four and a six-gun battery near the governor's house, and a saluting battery, of twenty-two guns, commands the English side of the Tweed. There are five gates belonging to the circumvallation, by which entrance is obtained. The barracks, which were built in 1719, form a small quadrangle, neatly built of stone, and afford good accommodation for 600 or 700 infantry. To these was recently attached the governor's house for officers' barracks; but that building and the ground adjoining, formerly the site of the palace of the kings of Scotland, were lately sold by the crown to a timber-merchant, and are now occupied for the purposes of his trade.

The PORT was celebrated in the time of Alexander the Third, for the extent of its traffic in wool, hides, salmon, &c., which was carried on both by native merchants, and by a company of Flemings who had settled here; the latter of whom perished in the conflagration of their principal establishment, called the Red Hall, which was set on fire at the capture of the town and castle by Edward the First. The port has, at present, a considerable coasting trade, though it has somewhat declined since the termination of the continental war: the exports are corn, wool, salmon, cod, haddock, herrings, and coal; and the imports, timber-deals, staves, iron, hemp, tallow, and bones for manure. About 800 men are employed in the fishery: the salmon and trout, of which large quantities are caught, are packed in boxes with ice, and sent chiefly to the London market; great quantities of lobsters, crabs, cod, haddock, and herrings are also taken, and a large portion forwarded, similarly packed, to the metropolis. The principal articles of manufacture, exclusively of such as are connected with the shipping, are damask, diaper, sacking, cotton hosiery, carpets, hats, boots, and shoes; and about 200 hands are employed in three iron-foundries, all established within the present century. Steam-engines, and almost every other article are made, and the gas-light apparatus for Berwick, Perth, and several other places, were manufactured here, and iron-works have lately been erected at Galashiels, and at Jedburgh by the same proprietors. The HARBOUR is naturally inconvenient, the greater part of it being left dry at ebb-tide; it has, however, been recently deepened by several feet, and vessels of large tonnage come to the quay. The river is navigable only to the bridge, though the tide flows for seven miles beyond it: on account of the entrance being narrowed by sand-banks, great impediments were occasioned to the navigation till the erection in 1808 of a stone pier on the projecting rocks at the north entrance of the Tweed; it is about half a mile in length, and has a light-house at the extremity. This, together with the clearing and deepening of the harbour, has materially improved the facilities of navigation, and been of great importance to the shipping interest of the place. On the Tweedmouth shore, for a short space, near the Carr Rock, ships of 400 or 500 tons' burthen may ride in safety. The smacks and small brigs, formerly carrying on the whole traffic of the place, are now superseded by large and well-fitted steam-vessels, schooners, and clipper-ships. There are numerous and extensive quays and warehouses, and a patent slip for the repair of vessels. It is proposed to form a railway between Edinburgh and this place, in continuation of the projected railway along the east coast hence to Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The market, which is well supplied with grain, is on Saturday, and there is an annual fair on the last Friday in May, for black cattle and horses; statute fairs are also held on the first Saturday in March, May, August, and November.

By charter of INCORPORATION granted in the second year of James the First, the government was vested in a mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, and there were besides an alderman for the year, a recorder, town-clerk, town-treasurer, four sergeants-at-mace, and other officers; but the controul now resides in a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, together composing the council, by whom a sheriff and other officers are appointed. The borough is distributed into three wards, and its municipal and parliamentary boundaries are the same. The mayor and the late mayor are, pro tempore, justices of the peace, and eight other gentlemen have been appointed to act as such under a separate commission. Berwick was one of the royal burghs, which, in ancient times, sent representatives to the court of the four royal burghs in Scotland, and on being annexed to the kingdom of England, its prescriptive usages were confirmed by royal charter. It sent representatives to parliament in the reign of Henry VIII.; since which time it has continued to return two members. The right of election was formerly vested in the freemen at large, in number about 1140; the number is now between 800 and 900; the resident freemen and certain householders are the electors, and the sheriff is returning officer. The limits of the borough include the townships of Tweedmouth and Spittal, lying on the south side of the river. The corporation hold courts of quarter-session for the borough, and a court of pleas every alternate Tuesday, for the recovery of debts to any amount; and a court leet is held under the charter, at which the high constable and six petty constables are appointed. The town-hall is a spacious and handsome building, with a portico of four massive circular columns of the Tuscan order, a portion of the lower part of which, called the Exchange, is appropriated to the use of the poultry and butter market; the first story contains two spacious halls and other apartments, in which the courts are held, and the public business of the corporation transacted, and the upper part is used as a gaol; the whole forms a stately pile of fine hewn stone, and is surmounted with a lofty spire, containing a peal of eight bells, which on the sabbath day summon the inhabitants to the parish church.

The LIVING is a vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the consistorial court of Durham, valued in the king's books at £20; net income, £289; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church is a handsome structure in the decorated English style, built during the usurpation of Cromwell, and is without a steeple. One of the Fishbourn lectureships is established here, the service being performed in the church. There are places of worship for members of the Scottish Kirk, the Associate Synod, the Scottish Relief, Particular Baptists, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. A school for the instruction of the sons of burgesses in English and the mathematics was founded and endowed by the corporation in 1798; to each department there is a separate master, paid by the corporation, and the average number of pupils is about 300. The burgesses have also the patronage of a free grammar school, endowed in the middle of the seventeenth century by Sir William Selby, of the Moat, and other charitable persons. The Blue-coat charity-school was founded in 1758 by Captain Bolton, and endowed with £800, since augmented with several benefactions, especially with one of £1000 by Richard Cowle, who died at Dantzic in 1819; the whole income is £155, which is applied to educating about 150 boys, of whom 40 are also clothed. The school of industry for girls, established in 1819, affords instruction to 106 girls; and there are also several infant, Sunday, and other schools. A pauper lunatic asylum was erected in 1813, and a dispensary was established in 1814. A considerable part of the corporation land is allotted into "meadows" and "stints," and given rent-free to the resident freemen and freemen's widows, according to seniority, for their respective lives. Among the most important bequests for the benefit of the poor, are £1000 by Richard Cowle, £1000 by John Browne in 1758, and £28 per annum by Sarah Foreman in 1803. The poor law union, of which the town is the head, comprises seventeen parishes and places, of which sixteen are in the county of Durham, and contains a population of 20,938.

Some remains of the ancient castle of Berwick are still visible, and of a pentagonal tower near it; also of a square fort in Magdalen fields, and some entrenchments on Hallidown Hill. All vestiges of the ancient churches and chapels of the town, the Benedictine nunnery, said to have been founded by David, King of Scotland, and of the monasteries of Black, Grey, White, and Trinitarian friars, and of three or four hospitals, have entirely disappeared. The Magdalen fields, already mentioned, belonged to the Hospital of St. Mary Magdalen. During the reigns of William the Lion, and of Edward I., II., and III., and other Scottish and English monarchs, Berwick was a place of mintage, and several of its coins are still preserved. There is a mineral spring close to the town, which is occasionally resorted to by invalids.

BESFORD, a township, in the parish of SHAWBURY, union of WEM, hundred of PIMHILL, N. division of SALOP, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Wem; containing 167 inhabitants.

BESFORD (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and Upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Pershore; containing 179 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1360 acres of arable and pasture land, in nearly equal portions; and is intersected by the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. The living is annexed to the vicarage of St. Andrew's, Pershore, and valued in the king's books at £3: the church is an ancient structure of unknown date.

BESKABY, an extra-parochial place, connected with the parish of CROXTON-KEYRIAL, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (N. E.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 7 inhabitants. The chapel is in ruins.

BESSELSLEIGH (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 4 miles (N. W.) from Abingdon; containing 106 inhabitants. It takes its name from the ancient family of Bessels, an heiress of which conveyed the estate by marriage to the Fettyplaces, and Sir Edmund Fettyplace sold it, about 1620, to Wm. Lenthall, master of the rolls, and speaker of the house of commons in the long parliament, from whom it has descended to Kyffin J. W. Lenthall, Esq. The old manor-house was pulled down about forty-five years since: Cromwell, who was frequent visiter, usually concealed himself in a room to which the only access was by a chair let down and drawn up with pulleys. The parish comprises 872*a.* 1*r.* 21*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 17. 3½, and in the gift of Mr. Lenthall: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £230, and the glebe consists of 26 acres. Sir John Lenthall, son and heir of the speaker, and governor of Windsor Castle, was buried in the chancel of the church in 1681.

BESSINGBY (St. MAGNUS), a parish, in the union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, 1½ mile (S. W.) from Bridlington; containing 66 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Bridlington to Great Driffield, and a short distance from Bridlington bay, which stretches on the east; it comprises about 1230 acres of land, the property of Harrington Hudson, Esq., who is lord of the manor, and resides at Bessingby Hall, a handsome mansion, pleasantly situated, and to which are attached some fine grounds. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Mr. Hudson, with a net income of £59: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1766. The church, rebuilt in 1766, contains in the chancel several handsome monuments to the Hudson family, one of them a fine basso-relievo of a female expiring in the arms of her attendants.

BESSINGHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 8 miles (N.) from Aylsham; containing 139 inhabitants. It comprises about 510 acres, of which 307 are arable, and 197 pasture; the soil is various, but chiefly strong, with brick earth, and the surface generally undulated, but in some parts flat. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 6. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. C. Arden, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £125, and who has 25 acres of glebe. The church is chiefly in the perpendicular style, with a circular tower. A national school is supported.

BESTHORPE (All SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WAYLAND, hundred of SHROPHAM, W. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (E. by S.) from Attleburgh; containing 536 inhabitants. It comprises 2132*a.* 1*r.* 21*p.*, of which 1471 acres are arable, and 610 meadow and pasture; the soil in general is wet and heavy. The road from London to Norwich, by way of Thetford, passes through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 10½; net income, £250; patron and impropiator, Earl of Winterton, lord of the manor: the glebe comprises 35 acres. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, in the early and decorated English styles, with a square embattled tower at the west end; and was thoroughly repaired in 1840.

BESTHORPE, a chapelry, in the parish of SOUTH SCARLE, union, and N. division of the wapentake, of NEWARK, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 8 miles (N. N. E.) from Newark; containing 327 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges, amounting to £269. 5. 8., of which £225. 5. 8. are payable to the prebendary, and £44. to the vicar, of South Scarle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £8. 12. per annum. There are some remains of an ancient mansion, in the style of the period of James I., with a tower and pointed gable roof.

BESWICK, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 1½ mile (E.) from Manchester; containing 345 inhabitants. This place, which at the beginning of the present century had only one solitary house, is indebted for its present extent and increase in population, to its contiguity to the town of Manchester, in the manufactures of which its inhabitants are employed.

BESWICK, a chapelry, in the parish of KILNWICK, union of BEVERLEY, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 6½ miles (N. by W.) from Beverley; containing 211 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Driffield to Beverley, and comprises upwards of 2000 acres, chiefly arable, and very flat, having been once a marsh. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £65, and of which the patronage is in dispute: the chapel is a very plain thatched building, with a wooden steeple. A Sunday school is supported by subscription.

BETCHCOTT, a township, in the parish of SMETHCOTT, union of CHURCH-STRETTON, hundred of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP; containing 32 inhabitants.

BETCHWORTH (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union, and First division of the hundred, of REIGATE, E. division of SURREY, 3¼ miles (W. by S.) from Reigate; containing 1140 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 11½; patrons, Dean and Canons of Windsor; impropiators, Rt. Hon. Henry Goulburn and Sir Benjamin Brodie, Bart.: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £295. 15. 4., and the vicarial for one of £200. The church was renovated in 1838. A school is endowed with £20 per annum, and there are several charities for the benefit of the poor.

BETHERSDEN (St. BEATRICE), a parish, in the union of WEST ASHFORD, hundred of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Ashford; containing 1011 inhabitants. A considerable quantity of a species of grey marble, used for columns and the internal ornaments of various neighbouring churches is obtained from quarries in the northern part of the parish. A fair is held on the 1st of July. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £165; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury; impropiator, Earl Cornwallis: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £481, and there are 78 acres of glebe. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a national school was erected in 1836.

BETHNAL-GREEN (St. MATTHEW), a parish, and a union of itself, in the borough of the TOWER HAMLETS, Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from St. Paul's; containing 74,088 inhabitants. This very extensive parish was separated by act of parliament, in 1743, from the parish of Stepney, to which it was formerly a hamlet; and is divided into four districts called Church, Green, Hackney-road, and Town divisions. It is supposed to have derived its name from Bathon Hall, the residence of a family of that name, who had considerable possessions here in the reign of Edward I., and from a spacious green, to the east of which is the site of an episcopal palace, called Bishop's Hall, said to have been the residence of Bonner, Bishop of London. The popular legendary ballad of the Blind Beggar of Bethnal-Green, the hero of which is said to have been Henry de Montfort, son of the Earl of Leicester, has reference to an ancient castellated mansion, built in the reign of Elizabeth, by John Kirby, a citizen of London, and now converted into a private lunatic asylum. The houses in general are meanly built of brick, and consist of large ranges of dwellings, inhabited chiefly by journeymen silk-weavers, who work at home for the master-weavers in Spitalfields; but considerable improvements have been made, and some handsome ranges have been erected on the line of the Hackney-road, in the district of St. John's, and at Cambridge-heath, and more recently in that part of the parish once called Bonner's Fields, but now Victoria Park. The parish is lighted with gas; the streets are partially paved, and the inhabitants are supplied with water by the East London Company's works. There are a very extensive cotton-factory, a large manufactory for water-proof hose, made of flax, without seam, and of any length and diameter, chiefly for the use of brewers and for firemen; a mill for the manufacture of all kinds of printing-paper; white-lead and colour-works; two extensive establishments for the manufacture of worsted lace and gimp, and a public brewery. A great quantity of land is in the occupation of market-gardeners. The Regent's canal passes through the parish, which is also crossed by the Eastern-Counties' railway. The district is within the limits of the new Police act, and under the jurisdiction of a court of requests for the Tower Hamlets, for the recovery of debts under £5.

The LIVING is a rectory not in charge; net income, £614; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The parochial church, erected in 1746, is a neat brick building, ornamented with stone. St. John's district church was built in 1828, by grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, at an expense of £17,638. 18., and is a handsome edifice of brick, faced with stone in the Grecian style, with a tower surmounted by a cupola: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the College, with a net income of £198. Ten additional districts have been formed in the parish; and the expense of erecting a church in each of them has been estimated at more than £75,000, raised by subscription, aided by a grant of £10,000 from the Metropolitan Society, and of £5000 from Her Majesty's Commissioners. The church of St. Peter, in the Hackney-road, consecrated in July, 1841, is a spacious structure of brick, intermixed with flints, and ornamented by facings of stone in the early Norman style, with a tower surmounted by a low spire, and a deeply recessed arch at the western entrance: net income, £150. The church of St. Andrew in South Conduit-street, consecrated in December, 1841, is a neat structure of brown brick having stone dressings in the Norman style, with a tower at the end of the north aisle surmounted by a campanile turret of stone, with a low pyramidal roof: net income, £150. The church of St. Philip, in Friar's Mount, is a neat building of light brick, with red mouldings and dressings of stone in the Norman style, and two square towers at the west end, surmounted by low octagonal spires: net income, £150. The church of St. James the Less, in Victoria Park, of which the first stone was laid in January, 1841, is a spacious edifice of brick, with stone facings in the Norman style, with a tower at the end of the south aisle, and a circular window in the western gable. The church of St. James the Great, in the Bethnal-Green road, is a handsome structure of red brick with dressings of stone in the early English style, and a campanile turret richly canopied and terminating in a crocketed finial; adjoining it is a handsome residence for the incumbent, of corresponding architecture. The church of St. Bartholomew, in Cambridge-road, of which the first stone was laid 27th Jan. 1842, is of brown brick, with facings of stone, also in the early English style, with a tower surmounted by a well-proportioned spire of stone. The livings are perpetual curacies, and with the exception of St. John's and St. James the Great, of which the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College are patrons, are all in the gift of the Bishop of London. Attached to all the churches are appropriate residences for the incumbents, and in the several schools connected with them more than 800 children receive instruction. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Methodists.

An episcopal chapel was erected in 1814, by the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, attached to which are two schools, wherein 50 boys and nearly 60 girls are maintained, clothed, and instructed; the schools are separate, and are supported by voluntary contributions. St. Matthew's school, founded in 1771, by the inhabitants, for clothing and instructing 50 boys and 50 girls, is supported by the interest of funded property and voluntary contributions. There are also national and Lancasterian schools, and a British school. In 1792, Mr. Thomas Parmiter left an estate in Suffolk, now producing £25 per annum, for the erection and endowment of a free school and almshouse in the parish, for the promotion of which purpose, other gifts have been made; the schoolroom has been taken down for the line of the Eastern-Counties' railway, and rebuilt on a new site. Another, called "Friar's Mount school," contains seventy boys, and is partly supported by subscription. The almshouses founded by Captain Fisher, in 1711, and those belonging to the companies of Drapers and Dyers, are situated in the parish. Trinity Hospital, at Mile-End, was erected in 1695, on land given by Captain Henry Mudd, an elder brother of the Trinity House, and endowed, in 1701, by Captain Robert Sandes, for twenty-eight masters of ships, or their widows. The union workhouse, recently erected, is near Victoria Park. The Roman road, from the western counties of England to the ferry over the river Lea, at Old Ford, passes through the northern part of the parish. Sir Richard Gresham, father of Sir Thomas Gresham, who built the Royal Exchange; Sir Thomas Grey, Knt.; and Sir Balthazar Gerbier, a celebrated painter and architect, who designed the triumphal arch for the entrance of Charles II. into London, on his restoration; were residents at the place. Ainsworth, the compiler of the Latin Dictionary, kept an academy here for some years; and Caslon, who established the celebrated type-foundry in Chiswell-street, lived here in retirement till his decease in 1766.

BETLEY (St. MARGARET), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LINE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Newcastle; containing 884 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Newcastle to Nantwich, and comprises by measurement 1381 acres of fertile land; red sandstone of fine quality for building is quarried, and facility for the conveyance of produce is afforded by the Grand Junction railway, which passes near the village. A fair for cattle takes place on the 31st of July. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150; patron and impropiator, G. Tollet, Esq.: the glebe comprises 60 acres. The church has lately been rebuilt, and was consecrated on the 28th of June, 1834. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school, with a small endowment of £5. 10. per annum, is conducted on the national plan.

BETSOME, a hamlet, in the parish of SOUTHFLEET, union of DARTFORD, hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT; containing 188 inhabitants.

BETTERTON, a tything, in the parish of LOCKINGE, hundred of WANTAGE, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Wantage; containing 17 inhabitants.

BETTESHANGER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of EASTRY, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Sandwich; containing 18 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 4. 4.; net income, £166; patron, F. E. Morrice, Esq. The church was repewed in 1835; the north and south entrances are under Norman arches, ornamented with zigzag mouldings, and beneath the arch over the latter is a figure of Christ; there are several monuments, one of which, to the memory of Vice-Admiral Morrice, is very handsome.

BETTISCOMBE, a parish, in the union of BEAMINSTER, liberty of FRAMPTON, Bridport division of DORSET, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Beaminster; containing 53 inhabitants, and comprising 667*a*. 2*r*. 16*p*. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 2. 3½.; patron, R. B. Sheridan, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1401, and the glebe consists of $54\frac{1}{2}$ acres.

BETTON, a township, in the parish and union of DRAYTON-IN-HALES, Drayton division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 254 inhabitants.

BETTUS (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of KNIGHTON, hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 6 miles (N. W.) from Knighton; containing, with the townships of Rugantine and Trebodier, and part of Kevenalonog, 452 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £57; patron and impropiator, Earl of Powis.

BETTWS (St. DAVID), a parish, in the union and division of NEWPORT, hundred of WENTLLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Newport; containing 90 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1132 acres. The living is annexed to the vicarage of St. Woollos: the incumbent's tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £42, and the great tithes, belonging to the Bishop of Gloucester, for one of £82. 10.

BETTWS-NEWYDD, a parish, in the union of ABERGAVENNY, division and hundred of RAGLAN, county of MONMOUTH, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Usk; containing 106 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1200 acres, of which three-sixths are arable, two-sixths pasture, and one-sixth woodland. It is situated nearly in the centre of the county, bounded on the west by the river Usk, and intersected by the road from Usk to Abergavenny; the surface is undulated, and from the elevated grounds some good views are obtained. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Llanarth: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £51. 6., and there is a glebe of about 3 acres. The church is an ancient structure, remarkable for a very curiously carved rood-loft; and in the church-yard are some fine yew-trees.

BEVERCOATES (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, South-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Tuxford; containing 44 inhabitants, and comprising 800 acres. The living is a vicarage, united to that of West Markham: the church is in ruins.

BEVERIDGE.—See BOVERIDGE.

BEVERLEY, a borough, market-town, and the head of a union and of a liberty, having a separate jurisdiction, in the E. riding of York, 9 miles (N. W.) from Hull, 29 (E. S. E.) from York, and 183 (N.) from London; comprising the parishes of St. John, St. Martin, St. Mary, and St. Nicholas, the first of which includes the townships of

Seal and Arms.

Aike, Eske, Molescroft, Storkhill with Sandholme, Thearne, Tickton with Hull-Bridge, Weel, and Woodmansey with Beverley Park; and containing 8759 inhabitants. This place, from the woods with which it was formerly covered, was called Deirwalde, implying the forest of the Deiri, the ancient inhabitants of this part of the country. By the Saxons, probably from the number of beavers with which the river Hull in this part abounded, it was called Beverlega, and subsequently Beverloc, from which its present name is deduced. About the year 700, John, the fifth archbishop of York, rebuilt the church, and founded in the choir a monastery of Black monks, dedicated to St. John the Baptist; in the nave a college of seven presbyters or secular canons, with seven clerks, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist; and in the chapel of St. Martin, adjoining the church, a society of nuns. This collegiate and monastic establishment was richly endowed by the founder and successive benefactors, and became the retreat of the archbishop, who, after having filled the see of York for 33 years, with a reputation for extreme sanctity, spent the remainder of his life in retirement and devotion; and dying in 721, was canonized by the title of St. John of Beverley. The foundation of the monastery naturally led to the erection of buildings in the immediate neighbourhood, and appears to have been the origin of the town which gradually grew up around it. In the year 867, it was nearly destroyed by the Danes, in one of their incursions under Inguar and Ubba, who murdered many of the monks, canons, and nuns; but after remaining for three years in a state of desolation, it was partly restored by the monks, who again established themselves at the place. In the early part of the tenth century, Athelstan, marching against the confederated Britons, Scots, and Danes, caused the standard of St. John of Beverley to be carried before his army, and having returned victorious, bestowed many privileges upon the town and monastery. He founded a college for secular canons, which, at the Dissolution, had an establishment consisting of a provost, eight prebendaries, a chancellor, precentor, seven rectors, and nine vicars choral, and a revenue of £597. 19. 6.; and he conferred on the church the privilege of sanctuary, the limits of which, extending for a mile around the town, were marked out by four crosses (the remains of three of which are still standing), erected at the four principal entrances: an account of the culprits who took refuge within its walls during the 15th and 16th centuries has been lately published by the Surtees Society. From this time the town began to increase rapidly in population and importance. About the year 1060, Kinsius, the 23rd archbishop of York, built a hall, nearly rebuilt the church, to which he added a tower, and contributed greatly to its internal decoration. The memory of St. John of Beverley was held in such veneration, that William the Conqueror, having advanced within seven miles of the town, gave strict orders to his army that they should not damage the church; the day of his death was appointed to be kept holy, and the festival of his translation, Oct. 25th, was, in 1416, ordered to be annually celebrated, in commemoration of the battle of Agincourt, which was superstitiously thought to have been gained through his intercession. At the commencement of the civil war in the reign of Charles I., that monarch fixed his head-quarters at Beverley, and attempted to gain possession of Kingston-upon-Hull, which was then defended for the parliament by Sir John Hotham, who, having subsequently made overtures for a reconciliation with the king, and entered into a negotiation for surrendering the town, fled from Hull, upon the discovery of his intention, and was made prisoner on the day following at Beverley, which had fallen into the hands of the parliamentarians.

The town, which is the capital of the East riding of Yorkshire, is pleasantly situated at the foot of the Wolds, about a mile from the river Hull, in the heart of an extensive sporting district; the approach from the Driffeld road is remarkably fine, having, particularly on the north-east side, many elegant buildings, and terminating in an ancient gateway which leads into the town. The common pastures of Westwood are a favourite promenade, on one of which, named the "Hurn," about half a mile from the town, races take place annually, about the beginning of April, and a commodious stand has been erected for the accommodation of spectators. The air is free and salubrious, and the numerous conveniences and attractions in this neat, clean, and well-built borough, have long made it the favourite resort and residence of many highly respectable families. The town is about a mile in length, and consists of several well-built streets, and some handsome and commodious public buildings; it is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water. Here are several tanneries, breweries, and large malt-kilns, eight corn-mills, a foundry, and two large establishments for the manufacture of paint, colour, cement, and Paris white, the last of which is made from excellent chalk rock, obtained about a mile south of the town. There are also manufactures of coarse linen and sacking; and numerous poor persons are employed in the market gardens and nurseries in the vicinity of the town. Great facilities are afforded for the transmission of produce by means of a canal called Beverley Beck, supposed to have been constructed by William Wickwane, archbishop of York, and which was improved under two acts of parliament, passed in 1727 and 1744; it connects the town with the river Hull and the port of Kingston-upon-Hull. The market is on Saturday: the market-place occupies an area of four acres, in the centre of which is a stately cross supported on eight pillars, each of one entire stone. There was formerly a market on Wednesdays, the market-place for which has a neat cross, but is of smaller area than the former: there is also a market-place for the sale of fish, which is built in an octagonal form. Fairs are held on the Thursday before Old Valentine's-day, Holy-Thursday, July 5th, the Wednesday before Sept. 25th, and Nov. 6th, chiefly for horses, horned-cattle, and sheep; and on every alternate Wednesday there is a great market for sheep and horned-cattle. The fairs and cattle-markets are held at Norwood, where is a spacious opening suitable for the purpose.

The prescriptive privileges of the borough have been confirmed and extended by several charters, especially in 1572 by Queen Elizabeth, who also in 1579 assigned certain chantry lands and tenements for the repairing of the minster; and four years afterwards gave other lands for the support of the minster and St. Mary's church. By the dissolution of the monastic institutions, the town suffered so much, that a few years afterwards it was unable to pay its portion of taxes (£321) due to the crown, and in consequence of a petition to the queen, she remitted them during royal pleasure. The corporation consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors. The borough is divided into two wards, and, as now constituted, comprises only the parishes of St. Martin, St. Mary, and St. Nicholas: the liberties, comprehending certain townships in the parish of St. John, (which also extends into the northern division of the wapentake of Holderness,) were severed from it by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., c. 76, except as regards the election of members to serve in parliament, and united to the East riding. The mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace, and there are three other justices appointed under a commission from the crown. A court of record is held, which takes cognizance of all pleas, except those respecting titles to landed property. Petty-sessions are held weekly; and a court of requests for the town and liberties is holden under an act passed in the 21st of George III., the powers of which were extended by a subsequent act, in the 46th of the same reign, for the recovery of debts under £5. Among the privileges which the freedom of the borough confers is the right of depasturing cattle, under certain restrictions, on four fine large pastures, containing about 1200 acres, and now managed under an act obtained in 1836. The elective franchise was conferred in the reign of Edward I., but was not exercised from the end of that reign till the 5th of Elizabeth, since which time the borough has continued to return two members to parliament. The right of election was formerly vested in the freemen generally, whether resident or not; but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the non-resident electors, except within seven miles of the borough, have been disfranchised, and the privilege has been extended to the £10 householders of the borough and liberty, over which latter the limits of the borough have been extended, for elective purposes. The mayor is returning officer. The general quarter-sessions for the East riding are held here; and for that division also Beverley is a polling-place for the election of parliamentary representatives. The guildhall has been lately repaired and beautified, and is a neat building, containing, in addition to the apartments in which the public business of the corporation is transacted, a court-room in which the general quarter-sessions for the borough and liberty were held. Adjoining the guildhall stands the gaol, lately erected, but now used only for debtors, and for securing prisoners previously to examination. The house of correction for the East riding is a spacious building, erected at an expense of £16,000, at the extremity of the town, on the road to Driffield and Scarborough, and comprises fourteen wards, fourteen day-rooms, and fourteen airing-yards, with a treadmill and eight work-rooms, for the classification and employment of prisoners. In Register-square is the register office for the reception of deeds, &c., for the whole of the riding; and adjoining it is a handsome residence for the registrar.

Beverley was once the head of a peculiar and exempt jurisdiction, under the provost of the collegiate church, which expired at the dissolution of monasteries. The MINSTER, formerly the church belonging to the monastery of St. John, is now the parochial church of the united parishes of St. John and St. Martin: the living is a perpetual curacy, of which the net income (with the parsonage-house) is about £195; patrons, Trustees of the late Rev. Charles Simeon, of Cambridge, by purchase from the corporation, under the Municipal Act; impropiators of St. John's, Representatives of the late Sir M. Warton; the impropriation of St. Martin's belongs to the Crown. Two assistant curates are appointed, who perform divine service in the minster twice every day; each has a stipend of about £132, paid out of the Minster Estates and Funds, appropriated by act of parliament to that purpose. The minster was almost entirely rebuilt in 1060, by Kinsius, Archbishop of York. In 1664, some workmen, whilst opening a grave in the chancel, discovered a sheet of lead, enveloping some relics, with an inscription in Latin, purporting that the ancient church having been destroyed by fire, in 1188, search was made for the relics of St. John of Beverley, which, having been found, were again deposited near the altar. It is not known at what precise period the present church was built, though probably in the early part of the reign of Henry III.: it is a venerable and spacious cruciform structure, in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, with two lofty towers at the west end; and though combining these several styles, it exhibits in each of them such purity of composition and correctness of detail, as to raise it to an architectural equality with the finest of the cathedral churches, to which it is inferior only in magnitude. The west front is the most beautiful and perfect specimen we have of the later English style; the whole front is pannelled, and the buttresses, which have a very bold projection, are ornamented with various tiers of niche-work, of excellent composition, and most delicate execution: the nave and transepts are of the early English, of which the fronts of the north and south transepts are pure specimens. The choir is partly in the decorated style, with an exquisitely beautiful altar-screen and rood-loft, which, though unequalled in elegance of design and richness of detail, were long concealed by a screen of inferior composition, put up within the last century: the east window is embellished with stained glass, which has been collected from the other windows, and skilfully arranged: near the altar is the Frydd-stool, formed of one entire stone, with a Latin inscription, offering an asylum to all criminals who should flee to this sanctuary; and on an ancient tablet are the portraits of St. John of Beverley and King Athelstan, with a legend recording the monarch's grant of freedom to the town. In the choir is a superb and finely-executed monument, the celebrated Percy shrine, erected, in the reign of Edward III., to the memory of one of the Percy family; and in the north transept is a fine altar-tomb, both in the decorated style. Behind the minster is the ancient manor-house belonging to Beverley Park.

The living of St. Mary's is a vicarage, with the rectory of St. Nicholas united, valued in the king's books at £14. 2. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £289. St. Mary's, now the parochial church for the united parishes, is a highly interesting structure, and contains fine portions in the various styles, from the Norman to the later English; the towers at the western end are finely pierced, and the octagonal turrets flanking the nave are strikingly elegant: the roof of the chancel, which is in the decorated style, is richly groined, and the piers and arches are well proportioned; there are some interesting monuments, and a fine font in the later style. The churches of St. Martin and St. Nicholas have long since gone to decay. The minster chapel of ease was originally built in the parish of St. Mary by subscription, under the auspices of Anthony Atkinson, Esq., mayor of Beverley, assisted by the late Mr. Mark Robinson, in the hope of effecting a union of the Wesleyans with the Established Church; but from some misunderstanding between the founder and the vicar of that parish, it was taken down, and rebuilt in the parish of St. John at an expense of £3250, and attached as a chapel of ease to the minster. The first stone of the building was laid by Mr. Atkinson on the 20th May, 1839, and the chapel, which is on a site given by Mrs. Walker, who also presented the communion plate, was consecrated on the 8th of October, 1841; it is a handsome structure, containing 900 sittings, of which 300 are free; and the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Incumbent of the minster. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.

The Grammar school is of uncertain origin, though it appears to have existed at a remote period: the fixed endowment is £10 per annum, which was bequeathed in 1652, by Dr. Metcalf, and is augmented with a donation of £90 per annum by the corporation, who have the appointment of the master, who is allowed to take boarders; this grant, however, will be discontinued on the next avoidance. There are several yearly exhibitions at Cambridge University for natives of Beverley educated at the school, viz.: three scholarships of £6. 13. 4. per annum each, founded by Dr. Metcalf; one of £6 per annum by William Coates, Esq., in 1681; two of £8 at St. John's College, Cambridge, founded by Dr. William Lacey, in 1670; one of £10 at Corpus Christi or St. John's College, Cambridge, founded by Dr. Green, Bishop of Lincoln, in 1778, who bequeathed £1000 for that purpose and to the charity school; and one by Mrs. Farrer, who left £150 to be laid out in land, of the rental of which, £1 was to be given for a sermon, £3 to poor widows, and £2 to a scholar at the grammar school; the residue to be allowed to accumulate till such scholar goes to the university, and to continue to him for seven years, if he so long remain there: the present net rental is about £44, and the sum applicable to the scholarship will, therefore, be about £40 per annum. The Bluecoat charity school was established by subscription in 1709, for the maintenance, clothing, and education of poor children; the annual income, arising from subsequent benefactions, is at present about £126. There is also an endowed school for 80 girls. A spinning-school is maintained by subscription; a school, in which are about 70 boys and 85 girls, is supported by the interest of £2000 stock, bequeathed in 1804, by the Rev. James Graves, curate of Beverley; and a national central school, in which are 240 boys, is aided by subscription. There are seven sets of hospitals, almshouses, or charities, in which more than 90 poor people are gratuitously lodged, pensioned, and clothed, viz.: Fox's hospital, Routh's hospital, the Corporation almshouses, Warton's hospital and charities, Sir Michael Warton's hospital, Tymperon's almshouse; and several hundreds of pounds are produced from a large number of miscellaneous benefactions. Sir Michael Warton, Knt., in 1724, bequeathed £4000, as a perpetual fund for keeping the minster in repair; and Mr. Robert Stephenson, in 1711, left an estate, now producing from £70 to £100 per annum, for the maintenance of "Nonconformist preaching ministers." The poor law union of Beverley comprises 36 parishes and places, and contains a population of 18,957. Alfred of Beverley, a monkish historian of the twelfth century, is supposed to have been born here; and Dr. John Alcock, Bishop of Ely, and founder of Jesus' College, Cambridge; Dr. Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, a martyr to his religious tenets in the reign of Henry VIII.; and Dr. Green, Bishop of Lincoln, an elegant scholar, and one of the writers of the Athenian Letters, published by Lord Hardwicke; were also natives of the town. Beverley gives the title of Earl to the family of Percy.

BEVERSTONE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TETBURY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (N. W.) from Tetbury; containing 178 inhabitants.

This place is of very remote antiquity, and there are still some remains of an ancient castle, in which a meeting was held, in 1048, by Earl Godwin and his son, for the alleged purpose of aiding Edward the Confessor to repress the incursions of the Welsh. The castle in the reign of Edward III. was enlarged and repaired by Thomas, Lord Berkeley, and in the civil war was garrisoned for the king, but was besieged and taken by the parliamentarians, and subsequently destroyed by fire. The parish is situated on the road from Dursley to Tetbury and Cirencester, and intersected by a branch of the Lower Frome, which has its source within its limits. The living is a rectory, with Kingscote annexed, valued in the king's books at £30, and in the gift of the Crown, with a net income of £590: the tithes were commuted for corn-rents in 1803. The church is chiefly in the early, and partly in the later, English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles; it consists of a nave and one narrow aisle, with a small chapel belonging to the lord of the manor; the pulpit is of stone, and the walls of the church were formerly covered with paintings, nearly all of which are obliterated.

BEWALDETH, with SNITTLEGARTH, a township, in the parish of TORPENHOW, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Cockermouth; containing 73 inhabitants.

BEWCASTLE (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of LONGTOWN, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 10 miles (N. N. E.) from Brampton; comprising the townships of Bailie, Bellbank, Bewcastle, and Nixons; and containing 1274 inhabitants, of whom 181 are in the township of Bewcastle. This place, which was anciently a Roman station on the Maiden-way, derived its name from a fortress erected here soon after the Conquest by Bueth, Lord of Gilsland, and in which, in the reign of Elizabeth, and also in 1639, a border garrison was placed; the castle during the civil war was demolished by the parliamentarians, and only some slight vestiges of it now remain. The parish comprises about 41,221 acres, of which 21,221 are rateable, and about 20,000 are undivided common; it abounds with richly varied and picturesque scenery, and within its limits the Leven or Linc, and the Irthing have their sources. The substrata are limestone and coal, and lead-ore is found in abundance. In the 7th of Edward I., license was granted to John Swinburn, to hold a weekly market and an annual fair. The living is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £2, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle, with a net income of £120. In the churchyard is a curious antique cross, composed of a single stone, bearing Runic inscriptions which have been variously interpreted, and some curious devices, supposed to be emblematical of the conversion of the Danes to Christianity, and commemorative of the death and interment of one of their kings. There is a place of worship for Presbyterians. Many coins, inscribed stones, and other relics of Roman occupation have been found, and there are various relics of antiquity in the vicinity. There are two mineral springs, one sulphureous, the other chalybeate; and at Low Grange, a quarter of a mile to the east of the church, is a petrifying spring.

Seal and Arms.

BEWDLEY, a borough, market-town, and chapelry (having separate jurisdiction), in the parish of RIBBESFORD and union of KIDDERMINSTER, locally in the Lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, and in the Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 14 miles (N. W.) from Worcester, and 126 (N. W.) from London; containing 3400 inhabitants. This place, in Camden's Britannia called Bellus Locus, from the pleasantness of its situation, and the beauty of the surrounding scenery, anciently obtained also the appellation of Beaulieu, of which its present name is a corruption. In the 13th of Henry IV., a petition was presented to parliament from the "men of Bristowe" and Gloucester, praying that they might navigate the river Severn without being subject to new taxes levied by the men of Beaudley. At this time Bewdley appears to have enjoyed many privileges, among which was that of sanctuary for persons who had shed blood: it was formerly extra-parochial, but, by letters-patent granted by Henry VI., was annexed to the parish of Ribbesford. Edward IV. gave the inhabitants a charter of incorporation in the twelfth year of his reign; and Henry VII. erected a palace here for his son Arthur, in which that prince was married by proxy to Catharine of Arragon, and dying soon after at Ludlow, his corpse was removed to this town, where it lay in state previously to interment in the cathedral of Worcester. Bewdley, formerly included in the marches of Wales, was, by an act of parliament, passed in the reign of Henry VIII., added to the county of Worcester. During the civil war in the time of Charles I., that monarch, who had been driven from Oxford by the parliamentary forces, retired with the remnant of his army to this town, where he encamped, in order to keep the river Severn between himself and the enemy. Whilst staying here, he was attacked by a party of Scottish cavalry, when several of his officers, and seventy men, were made prisoners; and in these attacks the palace was greatly damaged, and was subsequently taken down: the site is now occupied by a modern dwelling-house, and not a single vestige of the original edifice can, with certainty, be traced. The more ancient part of the town was built at a greater distance from the river, and the street called Load-street is supposed to have been the place where the inhabitants loaded their boats: there were formerly four gates, two of which were standing in 1811, but they have since been entirely demolished.

The town is beautifully situated on the western bank of the river Severn, over which a light and elegant stone bridge was erected in 1797; the street leading from the bridge diverges right and left, but extends farther in the latter direction; it is well paved, and lighted with gas. The houses in the principal street are in general well built, and of respectable appearance, and there are some handsome residences in the vicinity, among the most distinguished of which are Winterdyne, Ticknell, Spring Grove, and Ribbesford House; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water, the air is salubrious, and the surrounding scenery richly and pleasingly diversified. Some years since, Bewdley was a place of considerable trade, having two markets and four fairs, and for a long period was the mart from which the neighbouring towns were supplied with grocery and other articles of consumption; but in consequence of the recent construction of canals, that portion of its trade has been diverted to other towns. The manufacture of woollen caps, known by the name of Dutch caps, was introduced here in consequence of the plague prevailing at Monmouth, where it had previously been carried on, and, being encouraged by legislative enactments in the reign of Elizabeth, it continued for some time to flourish, but has now declined, and the trade is principally in malt, the tanning of leather, and the making of combs. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on April 23rd, July 26th, and December 10th and 11th. The inhabitants were first incorporated in the 12th of Edward IV., and received additional privileges from Henry VII., which were confirmed by Henry VIII.; and James I. granted a new charter: the corporation now consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors; the mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace, and two permanent magistrates have also been appointed. Bewdley sent members to parliament so early as the reign of Edward I., after which there was a long intermission. The elective franchise was again conferred by James I., since which time it has returned one member to parliament; the borough embraces the town of Stourport, three miles distant, also the Forest of Wire; the mayor is the returning officer. The town-hall is a neat building of stone, erected in 1808, with a front decorated with six square pilasters supporting a pediment, in which are the arms of the family of Lyttelton; under the hall is the entrance into the market-place, which has an arcade on each side for stalls, and an open area in the centre; at the extremity are two small prisons, one for malefactors, the other for debtors.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £8 per annum, paid out of the exchequer, the revenue of a dissolved chantry which formerly existed here; net income, £220; patron and appropriator, Rector of Ribbesford. The chapel, a neat stone edifice, at the upper end of the street leading from the bridge, was erected, in 1748, by the old corporation, aided by a subscription among the inhabitants and a brief, and has recently undergone considerable alteration by the expenditure of more than £800, contributed by the corporation and the inhabitants, in affording increased accommodation. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. The free grammar school, founded and endowed in 1591, by William Monnox, or Monnoye, and further endowed, in 1599, by Humphrey Hill, was made a royal foundation by charter of James I.; the endowment, augmented by subsequent benefactions, produces an income of £46. The Blue-coat school, for thirty boys and thirty girls, has been enlarged, and united to the National School Society, two good rooms having been built for 160 children. Almshouses for six aged men, founded by Mr. Sayer, of Nettlestead, in the county of Suffolk, and endowed with £30 per annum, were rebuilt in 1763, by Sir Edward Winnington, Bart., member for the borough. Burlington's almshouses, for fourteen aged women, were founded and endowed in 1645; and eight other houses were erected and endowed with £6 per annum, in 1693, by Mr. Thomas Cook. John Tombes, a celebrated biblical critic of the seventeenth century; and Richard Willis, Bishop of Winchester, and principal founder of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, were natives of the town.

BEWERLEY, a township, in the chapelry and union of PATELEY-BRIDGE, parish of RIPON, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 11¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Ripon; containing 1329 inhabitants. This extensive moorland township includes the village of Greenhow-Hill, and comprises by computation 5200 acres: the vicinity formerly abounded with valuable lead-mines, which were worked to a considerable extent. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £52, payable to the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. A school is supported by subscription, to which John Yorke, Esq., largely contributes. At Greenhow are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and a school endowed with a house and land, producing about £20 per annum. There are remains of an ancient chapel.

BEWHOLME, a township, in the parish of NUNKEELING, union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Hornsea; containing 199 inhabitants. Of this place, which is situated in the eastern part of the parish, the principal landowners have been the families of Fauconberg, St. Quintin, and De la Pole; and the monastery of Swine also held possessions here, which were afterwards, in the reign of Mary, granted, under the designation of "the Grange of Bewhall," to John Constable, to be held in capite by military service. The village, which is pleasant and well built, and on a commanding eminence, extends over a considerable space.

BEWICK, NEW, a township, in the parish of EGLINGHAM, union of GLENDALE, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Alnwick; containing 121 inhabitants. It comprises about 1200 acres of arable land, the property of A. J. B. Cresswell, Esq., M. P., of Cresswell: the river Breamish and the great north road to Edinburgh form portions of the boundary line. The improper tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £140. 14., and the vicarial for £57. 15.

BEWICK, OLD, a township, in the parish of EGLINGHAM, union of GLENDALE, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 10 miles (N. W. by W.) from Alnwick, on the road to Wooler; containing 176 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Breamish, and comprises about 5000 acres, of which 1000 are arable, 50 woodland, and the remainder pasture and moorland, the property of A. J. B. Cresswell, Esq. The village, which is well built, commands an extensive and delightful prospect. The improper tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £176. 2. 6., and the vicarial for £110. 5. There is a school, supported by Mr. Cresswell and the vicar. Here was anciently a chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, the ruins of which are situated a little to the north-west of the village; it was destroyed by the Puritans, was restored in 1695, and fell into decay, but is expected to be soon again restored. On Bewick Hill is a British encampment of a semicircular form, with a double rampart; and at Harehope burn, half a mile eastward, is another, supposed to have been an outwork.

BEXHILL (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BATTLE, hundred of BEXHILL, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, 8 miles (S.) from Battle; containing 1916 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the English Channel, and comprises 6000 acres by computation; the surface is pleasingly varied, and in the northern parts richly embellished with wood; about 70 acres are planted with hops. The village, which is situated on an eminence, commands extensive prospects; and the coast road from Dover, by way of Hastings and St. Leonard's, to Brighton, passes through it. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £24. 10. 2½.; net income, £977: patron, the Bishop of Chichester. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, partly in the early and partly in the later English style, with a low embattled tower. A chapel of ease has been erected on Little Common. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school for children of both sexes is supported by subscription. Sir Richard de la Wych, 13th bishop of Chichester, died here, and was buried in the cathedral church. There are several chalybeate springs.

BEXINGTON, a hamlet (formerly a parish), in the liberty of BINDON, though locally in the parish of ABBOTSBURY, hundred of UGGSCOMBE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 1 mile (N. W.) from Abbotsbury. The living, which was a rectory, was, in 1451, consolidated with that of Puncknowle; and the church, which was dedicated to St. Giles, and stood on the sea-shore, not far from the ruins of Abbotsbury Castle, has long been in ruins.

BEXLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DARTFORD, partly in the hundred of LESSNESS, but chiefly in the hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 3 miles (W.) from Dartford; containing, with the hamlets of Blendon, Bridgend, and Upton, 3955 inhabitants, and comprising 5265 acres by computation. The manor was purchased from the crown in the reign of James I., by the celebrated antiquary William Camden, who conveyed it to the University of Oxford, in trust, to found a Professorship of Ancient History. The living is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £13. 4. 7.; patron, Viscount Sidney; impropiators, Coheiresses of Thomas Latham, Esq.: the rectorial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1046, and the vicarial for one of £700. 10. 4. A chapel of ease was erected on Bexley Heath in 1836 by subscription, aided by a grant from the Church Building Society; and a district chapel was built in 1840 at Halfway-street, at the expense of John Malcolm, Esq., in whom the patronage is vested. There are a national school for girls in the village, erected in 1835; another on Bexley Heath for boys, rebuilt in 1837; and one for boys and girls at Halfway-street. Almshouses were founded and endowed by Mr. John Styleman. The Right Hon. Nicholas Vansittart, on retiring from the chancellorship of the exchequer, was created Baron Bexley, March 1st, 1823.

BEXTON, a township, in the parish of KNUTSFORD, union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Nether Knutsford; containing 77 inhabitants.

BEXWELL (St. MARY), a parish in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (E.) from Downham-Market; containing 70 inhabitants, and comprising 1177*a. 3r. 17p.* The manor anciently belonged to William de Bexwell, to whom Henry III. granted permission to hold a market on Thursday, and a fair on Whit-Monday. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £330, and the glebe consists of 41 acres. The church is built of rag-stone obtained in the vicinity.

BEYTON, or BEIGHTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STOW, hundred of THEDWASTRY, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 384 inhabitants, and consisting by measurement of 1625 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 3. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £210, and the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church has a round tower, with buttresses.

BIBURY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, partly in the hundred of BRADLEY, and partly in that of BRIGHTWELL'S-BARROW, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (N. W.) from Fairford; comprising the chapelry of Winson, and the tythings of Ablington and Arlington, and containing 1077 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement upwards of 4000 acres, chiefly arable land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 1. 5½.; net income, £1023; patron, Lord Sherborne; improprators, Lord Sherborne and Sir J. Musgrave, Bart. There is a chapel of ease at Winson, two miles distant from the parochial church. A Lancasterian school is supported by subscription. Thomas Tryon, author of a curious work, entitled "the Way to Health, Long Life, and Happiness," published in 1691, was a native of the place.

BICESTER (St. EADBURG), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 12½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Oxford, and 55 (N. W. by W.) from London; comprising the townships of Market-End and King's-End, and containing 3022 inhabitants. This place, by the Saxons called Burenceaster and Bernacester, both implying a fortified place, is supposed to derive its name either from its founder, Birinus, a canonized Saxon prelate, or from Bernwood, a forest in Buckinghamshire, not far from which it is situated; or from the small stream of the Bure, on which it stands. A priory for a prior and eleven canons of the Augustine order was founded in 1182, and dedicated to St. Eadburg, by Gilbert Basset, Baron of Haddington, and his wife, Egiline de Courteney, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £167. 2. 10. In 1355, a royal license was granted to Nicholas Jurdan, warden of the chapel of St. John the Baptist, for the establishment of an hospital for poor and infirm people, but the design does not appear to have been carried into execution. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the inhabitants suffered by repeated exactions levied on them by both parties; and, in 1643, a skirmish took place, in which the royalists were defeated and driven through the town.

Bicester is situated in a valley, on the banks of a stream which falls into the river Ray, which joins the Cherwell, near Islip; it is neatly built, and amply supplied with water. The female inhabitants are employed in making pillow-lace; and the town is noted for excellent malt liquor. The market is on Friday; and fairs are held on the Friday in Easter-week, the first Friday in June, August 5th, and the third Friday in December; there are also statute fairs on the first three Fridays after Michaelmas. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions for the district every Friday. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16; net income, £210; patron and improprator, Sir G. O. P. Turner, Bart.: the tithes for King's-End were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1793. The church, which is supposed to have been rebuilt about the year 1400, on the site of the former edifice, is a spacious and handsome structure, with a lofty square tower, and contains many interesting monuments and some antique sculptures. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A school is supported partly by endowment; and lands producing about £200 per annum, and a few minor charitable bequests, are appropriated to the relief of the poor. The union of Bicester comprises 38 parishes and places, of which 36 are in the county of Oxford, and two in that of Bucks, and contains a population of 15,201; the union house is situated near the town. In the vicinity, on the London-road, is Graven-hill Wood, on the north side of which ran the Akeman-street; and not far from the town, on the west side, is St. Eadburg's well, famous before the Reformation for miraculous cures, and which proved very useful in supplying water to the town during the dry summer of 1666. In making some excavations, in 1819, the foundations of the conventual buildings belonging to the priory, a vast mass of sculptured fragments, pieces of painted glass, and other relics, were discovered.

BICKENHALL, a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 5½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Taunton; containing 264 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Staple-Fitzpaine: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £200, and there are about 8½ acres of glebe.

BICKENHILL, CHURCH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of MERIDEN, Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 7 miles (E. by S.) from Birmingham; containing, with Church, Middle, Lyndon, and Marston, Quarters, 774 inhabitants. This place is of considerable antiquity, and included Kington, or Kingsford, now partly in this parish, and partly in that of Solihull, of which the church was given to the nuns of Mergate, now Market-street, in the 5th of Henry III. by Henry le Notte, owner of the Marston-Hall estate. The parish, which comprises 377*1a. 3r. 17p.*, is situated near the London and Birmingham, and the Stratford and Warwick canals, and is intersected by the London and Holyhead road, and the London and Birmingham, and the Derby railways, the rateable annual value of the railway property in the parish being £2652. Many improvements have lately taken place. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 3.; patron and impropriator, the Earl of Aylesford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £325, and the glebe consists of 19 acres, with a vicarage-house. The church, on the site of which, according to Dugdale, a beacon existed in former times, is an ancient structure, chiefly in the Norman style, with a tower, but it has received some subsequent additions of inferior character. A national school is supported by subscription.

BICKER (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of BOSTON, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by N.) from Donnington; containing, with the extra-parochial liberties of Copping-Sike and Ferry-Corner, 925 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Donnington to Boston, and bounded on the west by the navigable river Forty-Foot, which falls into the Witham at Boston. It comprises by measurement 3579 acres, of which one-half is arable, and the other half pasture and meadow; the soil is chiefly sand and clay; the surface is flat, and the land, subject in part to inundation, has been much improved by draining. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15; net income, £560, arising from 270 acres of land given in lieu of tithes on the inclosure; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church is an ancient structure, with a central tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school has a small endowment.

BICKERING, a hamlet, in the parish of HOLTON, union of LINCOLN, W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Wragby.

BICKERSTAFFE, a township, in the parish and union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Ormskirk; containing 1579 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £750. Coal is obtained.

BICKERSTON.—See BIXTON.

BICKERTON, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of NANTWICH, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Malpas; containing 401 inhabitants. A church has been lately built, in aid of which the Incorporated Society contributed £120; 222 of the sittings are free. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £110. A school is supported by subscription. On the summit of a hill is an intrenchment called Maiden Castle.

BICKERTON, a township, in the parish and union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Rothbury; containing 18 inhabitants. It stands upon a pleasant level, the moorlands forming a semi-circle on the south and west, and Coquet-haughs, with other rich pastures, are on the north and east. The village was formerly the property of four persons named Snowdon, who owned it jointly; but none of the family have any interest in the place at present. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £44. 12. 6.

BICKERTON, a township, in the parish of BILTON, W. division of AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Wetherby; containing 110 inhabitants. The place once belonged to Bryan Ro- cliffe, a baron of the exchequer. It is situated on the road from Wetherby to York, and comprises about 1080 acres. The river Nidd winds its very devious course at a short distance north of the village. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BICKINGTON, a parish, in the union of NEWTON ABBOT, hundred of TEIGNBRIDGE, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (N. E.) from Ashburton; containing 374 inhabitants. A fair for cattle is held on May 14th. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Ashburton: the appropriate tithes, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of St. Peter's, Exeter, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £115, and the vicarial for one of £110. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BICKINGTON, ABBOT'S (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of HOLSWORTHY, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Holsworthy and N. divisions of DEVON, 9 miles (S. W. by W.) from Great Torrington; containing 75 inhabitants. The neighbourhood abounds with limestone, and with compact stone of a blue colour, which is quarried for building and other purposes; and marble of good quality is also obtained. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with a portion of the great tithes, and in the gift of Lord Rolle, to whom the remainder of the tithes belongs: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £25, and those of the incumbent for one of £45. The church has some remains of ancient stained glass.

BICKINGTON, HIGH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TORRINGTON, hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Great Torrington; containing 895 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £29. 7. 6., and in the patronage of W. M. Stowell, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £430, and there are 150 acres of glebe. An endowment of £10 per annum by Gertrude Pyncombe, in 1740, is apportioned between two schools.

BICKLEIGH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (S. by W.) from Tiverton; containing 362 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2469 acres, and is situated on the road from Exeter to Bristol and Bath, and on the river Exe, near its confluence with the Dart, over the former of which is a good bridge near the point of junction: stone is quarried for building and road-making. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 4. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £420; patron, Sir W. P. Carew, Bart.: there are a glebe of 50 acres, and a house in good repair. The church contains some handsome monuments of the Carew family, who resided at Bickleigh Court, an ancient mansion, now destroyed. A school is partly supported by the rector. Bampfylde Moore Carew, king of the beggars, was born in the parsonage-house, his father being the rector, and was buried here.

BICKLEIGH, a parish, in the union of PLYMPTON-ST. MARY, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Midland-Roborough and S. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Plymouth; containing 469 inhabitants. The Plymouth railway passes along the parish. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the great tithes, with Sheepstor annexed, valued in the king's books at £11. 4. 7., and in the gift of Sir Ralph Lopes, Bart. : the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £172. 10., and there are 33 acres of glebe. The patron has lately rebuilt the church, which was consecrated in August 1839. Here is a school for 100 children, principally supported by subscription; also an almshouse for six widows.

BICKLEY, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of NANTWICH, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Malpas; containing 489 inhabitants. On the 18th of July, 1657, about a quarter of an acre of elevated ground, covered with full-grown trees, sank suddenly, with a noise resembling thunder, to such a depth below the surface of the surrounding ground, that even the summits of the trees were not visible, from their total immersion in water; the water has long been dried up, and the chasm, called the Barrell-Fall, from being situated on the Barrell Farm, is now quite dry. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and three schools are supported by the Marquess of Cholmondeley.

BICKMERSH, a hamlet, in the parish of WELFORD, union of STRATFORD-ON-AVON, Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Alcester; containing, with Little Dorsington, 130 inhabitants. It is situated on the borders of Gloucester and Worcester, being surrounded, except on the north, by those counties; it comprises 1240 acres. A chapel was founded in the reign of Henry II. by William Foliot, then lord of the manor.

BICKNACRE, a hamlet, partly in the parish of DANBURY, and partly in that of WOODHAM FERRIS, union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX; containing 304 inhabitants.

BICKNELL.—See BICKENHALL.

BICKNOLLER, a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 13 miles (N. W.) from Taunton; containing 345 inhabitants. It comprises 1320 acres, of which 560 are arable, 250 meadow and pasture, 81 plantation, wood, and orchard, and 340 common. The living is a vicarage not in charge; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Wells: the rectorial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £139, and the vicarial for one of £77. 10.; and there are $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. Two fortifications, named Trendle Castle and Turk's Castle, together with the ruins of a beacon, occupy the summit of an eminence near the village; and a variety of Roman coins has been found in the vicinity.

BICKNOR, or CHURCH-BICKNOR (St. James), a parish, in the union of HOLLINGBOURNE, hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Sittingbourne; containing 46 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 700 acres, of which about 400 are arable and pasture, principally the former, and the remainder is wood; the surface slopes to the north-east, and the soil is clay mixed with flint. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 10.; net income, £115; patron, the Lord Chancellor: there are about 20 acres of glebe. Here are the remains of a Danish intrenchment, and vestiges of an old British town burnt by the Danes, when ravaging this part of the country.

BICKNOR, ENGLISH (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of MONMOUTH, hundred of ST. BRIAVELLS, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N.) from Coleford; containing 576 inhabitants. It comprises 2411a. 1r. 4p., and lies within the Forest of Dean, on the eastern bank of the Wye, opposite to Welsh-Bicknor. The manor exceeds the parish in extent by 728 acres, besides which, $14\frac{1}{2}$ acres of Dean Forest are within its boundary. There are mines of coal and iron, the former of which are worked; and stone is quarried for building and road-making. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the gift of Queen's College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £390, and the glebe comprises 9 acres, with a house. The church is an ancient edifice, having some portions in the Norman style, and stands within the area of an ancient fortification, the fosse belonging to which may still be traced.

BICKNOR, WELSH (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union and division of MONMOUTH, hundred of SKENFRETH, county of MONMOUTH, 7 miles (S. by W.) from Ross; containing 74 inhabitants. This parish, which is separated from the rest of Monmouthshire, the nearest part of that county being three miles distant, comprises 850a. 23p., of which 348 acres are arable, 226 meadow and pasture, 149 wood, and 54 common and roads. It is almost surrounded by the river Wye, the banks of which are rich in highly picturesque scenery; the soil is various, partaking of sand and gravel, generally light, a rich mould in some parts, and in others clay; the surface is hilly, and in a few places consists of rock. At Courtfield, a private mansion, about half a mile off, is a Roman Catholic chapel; and tradition relates that Henry V. was nursed there, under the care of the Countess of Salisbury, who, according to the same authority, is represented by a recumbent stone figure in the church. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £152. 10., and there are about 18 acres of glebe. The church, which is in the early English style, contains an antique chalice, said to have been brought into Europe with the Saracens; the lid is of beaten silver, and it bears other evidences of high antiquity.

BICKTON, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. CHAD, within the liberty of the borough of SHREWSBURY, N. division of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Shrewsbury; containing, with the hamlet of Calcott, 560 inhabitants. The navigable river Severn runs through the chapelry, which is also intersected by the Roman Watling-street. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron, Vicar of St. Chad's.

BICKTON, a tything, in the parish and union of FORDINGBRIDGE, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 273 inhabitants.

BICTON (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Sidmouth; containing, with the hamlet of Yettington, 198 inhabitants. It comprises about 600 acres of inclosed land, and there are supposed to be 500 acres of common; the soil is in general sandy, and the surface hilly; the river Otter borders the parish. The possessor of the manor was formerly obliged to "find a county gaol," but was discharged from that obligation by an act of parliament, within the last fifty years. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., and in the gift of Lord Rolle: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £160. 17., and there are 50 acres of glebe. A school is supported by ladies.

BIDBOROUGH (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of TONBRIDGE, hundred of WASHLINGSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 3 miles (S. W.) from Tonbridge; containing 260 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1300 acres, of which about 360 are arable, 390 pasture and meadow, 43 hops, and 507 common. The soil is a mixture of iron-sand, sandstone, and clay, and is not very productive; the surface of the land is hilly and irregular. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 4. 4½., and in the patronage of the Trustees of W. Gay, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £179. 4., and there are 79 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure, with a Norman doorway in the earliest period of that style. There are some chalybeate springs.

BIDDENDEN (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of TENTERDEN, hundred of BARCLAY, Lower division of the lathe of SCRAY, W. division of KENT, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Cranbrook; containing 1486 inhabitants. It comprises 7207*a. 2r. 20p.*, and is situated on the Maidstone and Tenterden road, and near the South-Eastern railway; the soil is clayey, and the surface in some parts rather hilly. The place was once famous for its clothing trade, which is now entirely decayed. Fairs, chiefly for horses and Welsh cattle, are held on Old Lady-day and November 8th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £35, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £687, and the glebe consists of about 18 acres of land of good quality, with a commodious residence. The church is a fine structure, in the later English style, with an embattled tower and turret, and is capable of accommodating 1000 persons. There is a meeting-house for Dissenters. John Mayne, in 1566, bequeathed a sum for the erection of a school-house, and endowed it with a rent-charge of £20. 3. 4. A distribution of bread and cheese to the poor takes place on Easter-Sunday, the expense of which is defrayed from the rental of about 20 acres of land, the reputed bequests of the Biddenden Maids, two sisters of the name of Chulkhurst, who, according to tradition, were born joined together by the hips and shoulders, in the year 1100, and having lived in that state to the age of thirty-four, died within six hours of each other.

BIDDENHAM (St. JAMES), a parish, in the hundred of WILLEY, union and county of BEDFORD, 2¾ miles (W. by N.) from Bedford; containing 345 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south, west, and north, by the river Ouse, and on the east by the borough of Bedford, and is intersected by the road from that town to Newport-Pagnell, a little to the south of which thoroughfare the village is situated. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £100; patron and impropiator, Hon. G. R. Trevor. The church contains several memorials to the family of the Botelers, who were settled here for ten generations, and of whom Sir William Boteler was mayor of London in 1515.

BIDDESCOTE, a township, in the parish and union of TAMWORTH, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 1 mile (S. S. W.) from Tamworth; containing 44 inhabitants.

BIDDESHAM, a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BEMPSTONE, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Axbridge; containing 145 inhabitants. It is recorded that the Danes were defeated here by the Saxons in the reign of Alfred. The parish is bounded by the river Axe on the north, and the road from Bridgwater to Cross on the south; and comprises by measurement 574 acres. The living is a peculiar, in the patronage of the Dean of Wells: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £137, and the glebe consists of 14 acres, with a house. The church contains a singing-gallery, lately erected at the expense of the incumbent and parishioners.

BIDDESTONE (St. NICHOLAS AND St. PETER), in the union and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 4¼ miles (W.) from Chippenham; containing 452 inhabitants, of whom 428 are in the parish of St. Nicholas, and 24 in that of St. Peter. The living is a discharged rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Slaughterford annexed, valued in the king's books at £2. 18. 4.; patrons and impropiators, Warden and Fellows of Winchester College: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £33. 10., and the glebe consists of 6 acres. The church contains a monument to the memory of Edmund Smith, A.M. a poet of some repute, who died in the neighbourhood, in 1709.

BIDDLESDON (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of BRACKLEY, hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Brackley; containing 169 inhabitants. An abbey of Cistercian monks was founded here in 1147, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £142. 1. 3. In 1315, Edward II. granted to the convent a market on Monday, and a fair on St. Margaret's-day. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £69; patron, G. Morgan, Esq.

BIDDLESTON, a township, in the parish of ALLEN-TON, union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7¾ miles (N. W. by W.) from Rothbury; containing 140 inhabitants. The manor was granted, in 1272, to Sir Walter Selby, Knt., and has ever since continued in the possession of his descendants. The township is on the road from Clennel to Netherton, and south of the Netherton burn, which flows at a short distance from the village. The manor-house, a commodious stone building of modern erection, occupies the summit of a gentle declivity, commanding, on the south, a fine prospect of the vale of Coquet. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics.

BIDDULPH (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of CONGLETON, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 3¼ miles (S. E. by S.) from Congleton; containing 2314 inhabitants. This parish contains collieries, manufactories for cotton and earthenware, and iron-works. In 1837 an act was obtained for making a new road hence to Congleton. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 9. 8.; patron and impropiator, J. Bateman, Esq., of Knypersley Hall, which was anciently the seat of a family of that name, and afterwards of the Gresleys.

The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £180. 8., and the vicarial for one of £90; the glebe consists of 34 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans on Biddulph Moor; and a school is endowed with about £14 per annum.

Corporation Seal.

BIDEFORD (St. Mary), a sea-port, incorporated market-town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of SHEBBEAR, Great Torrington and N. divisions of DEVON, 39 miles (N. W. by W.) from Exeter, and 201 (W. by S.) from London; containing 5211 inhabitants, of whom 4830 are in the town. This place, called also Bytheford, of which its modern appellation is a variation, derives its name from being situated near an ancient ford on the river Torridge. It was a town of some importance in the time of the Saxons: in early records it is styled a borough, and in the reigns of Edward I. and II. returned members to parliament; but the burgesses having pleaded inability to supply the usual pecuniary allowance to their representatives, this distinction was withdrawn. In 1271. Richard de Grenville, to whose ancestor Bideford had been granted in the reign of William Rufus, obtained for it a market and a fair; and, in 1573, Queen Elizabeth incorporated the inhabitants, and made the town a free borough. From that time it rapidly increased as a place of trade, and the expeditions of Sir Walter Raleigh to Virginia, and of Sir Richard Grenville to Carolina, established the basis of its foreign commerce. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., two small forts were erected on the banks of the river, and a third at Appledore, which was garrisoned for the parliament; they were taken for the king by Col. Digby, after the battle of Torrington, Sept. 2nd, 1643, who soon after entered this town, which had been evacuated by the parliamentary troops. From this period till the beginning of the eighteenth century, Bideford was in its highest prosperity. The weaving of silk was introduced in 1650, and, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, in 1685, many French Protestants settled in the town, and established the manufacture of silk and cotton; a great quantity of wool was imported from Spain, and, in 1699, its trade with Newfoundland was inferior only to that of London and Exeter: from 1700 to 1755, the imports of tobacco exceeded those of every port except London.

The TOWN is situated on the river Torridge, which in spring tides rises to the height of twenty-two feet above the level of low-water mark: the greater part is built on the acclivity of its western bank, and is connected with that on the eastern side by a noble stone bridge of twenty-four arches, of which some are of sufficient span to allow free passage for vessels of sixty tons' burthen. The bridge was erected in the early part of the fourteenth century, by a subscription raised in the counties of Devon and Cornwall, under the auspices of Grandison, Bishop of Exeter, who, being influenced by a dream of Gornard, the parish priest, granted indulgences to all who should contribute to the work: a considerable estate in houses and lands, for keeping it in repair, is vested in trustees. The town consists of several streets, of which some are well paved and lighted; the houses are in general of respectable appearance, and the town is amply supplied with water. There are assembly and reading-rooms on the quay; and from the salubrity of the air, the picturesque beauties of the surrounding scenery, and the improved facility of communication with Barnstaple and Great Torrington, owing to the new roads that have been made, Bideford has become a place of considerable resort. The PORT, including within its jurisdiction Appledore and the harbours of Clovelly and Hartland, also a convenient station for wind-bound vessels, carries on a considerable colonial and coasting trade; the principal exports are sails, cordage, British manufactured goods, and articles of general supply to the fisheries of Newfoundland and the British colonies in North America, oak-bark to Ireland, apples to Scotland, earthenware to Wales, and corn and flour to Bristol; the imports are timber from America and the Baltic, and limestone, coal, and culm from Bristol and Wales. The river, in spring tides, is navigable for vessels of 300 tons' burthen, as far as the bridge, two miles and a half above which it is connected, by means of a sea-lock, with the Torrington canal. The quay, 1200 feet in length, and of proportionate breadth, has been greatly improved. Ship-building is extensively carried on: during the late war, several frigates were launched at this port, and there are eight or ten dockyards, in which smaller vessels are built. The principal articles of manufacture are cordage, sails, and common earthenware; there are also several tan-yards, and a small lace-manufactory. Mines of culm and black mineral paint are found in the vicinity, and on the rectorial glebe; and the old culm-mines have been lately re-opened, with every prospect of advantage. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday, and fairs are held on Feb. 14th, July 18th, and Nov. 13th. The inhabitants were originally incorporated by charter of the 16th of Elizabeth, confirmed and extended by another granted by James I.; the government is vested in a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, of whom the mayor and late mayor are justices, and there are four other permanent magistrates appointed by the crown: the borough and parish are co-extensive. The recorder holds a court of quarter-sessions; petty-sessions are held monthly; and there is a court of record, for the recovery of debts to any amount. The town-hall, erected in 1698, is a neat and commodious building, having two prisons underneath, one for malefactors, and the other for debtors; and a gaol and bridewell have been lately built on the eastern side of the river. A handsome hall, called the Bridge Hall, was erected in 1758, by the trustees of the Bridge Estate, with a schoolroom adjoining.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27. 7. 6., and in the patronage of Lewis William Buck, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £590, and the glebe consists of 48 acres. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, in the early English style, containing a handsome stone screen, and some interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school, of remote foundation, was rebuilt in 1657, and, in 1689, was endowed by Mrs. Susannah Stucley, with an estate of £200 value; a good house was purchased for the master with money arising from the sale of timber on the estate, which now lets for £56 per annum. A charity school is supported by the trustees of the Bridge Estate, and by subscription; a building has likewise been erected for a national school. Almshouses in Maiden-street, for seven families, were erected in 1646, by Mr. John Strange, alderman of Bideford; and an hospital in the Old Town, for twelve families, was built pursuant to the will of Mr. Henry Amory, who died in 1663. The poor law union of Bideford comprises 18 parishes and places, and contains a population of 19,568. Sir Richard Grenville, who distinguished himself in 1591, in an action fought near the island of Flores, with a Spanish fleet; Thomas Stucley, an eccentric character, the supposed original of Sterne's Captain Shandy; Dr. John Shebbeare, a noted political writer, born in 1709; and the Rev. Zachary Mudge, a learned divine, and master of the grammar school, were natives; and the Rev. James Hervey, author of the "Meditations," and other popular works, was curate of the place from 1738 till 1742.

BIDFORD (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of ALCESTER, Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Alcester; containing, with the hamlets of Barton, Broom, and Marcliff, 1567 inhabitants. This place is situated on the northern bank of the navigable river Avon, and the river Arrow skirts the parish on the west. It was an ancient demesne of the crown, having been in the possession of Edward the Confessor, and was principally held by the English monarchs of the Norman line till the reign of John, who, towards the latter part of his reign, gave it in dowry to Llewelyn, Prince of North Wales, who had espoused his daughter Joan, and who, in the 4th of Henry III., obtained the grant of a market. The parish comprises 3312 acres, of which the soil is various, but the greater part barley and turnip land: there are some stone-quarries. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. 7½; net income, £213; patron and impropiator, Sir Grey Skipwith, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for land under an inclosure act; the glebe consists of 34 acres. A national school has been established by the vicar, aided by Lady Skipwith and the parishioners.

BIDICK, NORTH, a hamlet, partly in the parish of WASHINGTON, and partly in that of WHITBURN, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Chester-le-Street; containing 371 inhabitants, of whom 344 are in Washington parish. It is situated to the west of the river Wear, by which it is separated from Offerton, Painshaw, and South Bidick. On the bank of the river is Worm hill, so called from the fabulous worm-dragon said to have infested the Lambton estate, and which a hero of that family, cased in armour set with razors, is described as having engaged and killed.

BIDICK, SOUTH, a township, in the parish of HOUGHTON-LE-SPRING, union of CHESTER-LE-STREET, N. division of EASINGTON ward and of the county of DURHAM, 6¾ miles (S. W. by W.) from Sunderland; containing 74 inhabitants. The manor belonged to the see of Durham, and was held under it by several families, and subsequently passed to the Lamptons, or Lambtons, of Hardwick, who are now extinct, and of whom the last, Miss M. Lambton, bequeathed the estate to John Dawson, who assumed the name of Lambton: in 1823 the old hall, and some of the lands, were purchased by the Earl of Durham, and now form part of the Lambton estate. The township comprises by measurement 343 acres, of which 225 are arable, 73 grass land, 25 wood, and 20 waste. The river Wear winds its very devious course on the west; and the Durham Junction railway passes a little to the north-east, and takes a curve to Elba, and will form a part of the great line of railway from London to Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

BIDSTONE, a parish, in the union, and Lower division of the hundred, of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER; comprising the townships of Bidstone with Ford, Claughton with Grange, Moreton with Lingham, and Saughall Massey; and containing 1013 inhabitants, of whom 291 are in the township of Bidstone with Ford, 9½ miles (N.) from Great Neston, on the coast of the Irish Sea. On an elevated site, in the township of Bidstone, is a lighthouse, which was purchased by the corporation of Liverpool, under an act obtained in 1762, and is supported by a duty levied on all vessels sailing to and from that port. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £98; patron, Rev. Charles Edmund Keene; appropriator, Bishop of Chester. A school is endowed with £15 per annum, and a house and garden for the master.

BIELBY, a chapelry, in the parish of HAYTON, union of POCKLINGTON, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (S. by W.) from Pocklington; containing 273 inhabitants. It comprises about 1220 acres of land, of which a great part, together with the manor, belongs to Merton College, Oxford: the village, which is of neat appearance, is in the vicinity of the Pocklington canal. The tithes were commuted in 1814 for an allotment of land: the chapel of ease is an ancient building, dedicated to St. Giles, and is served by the vicar. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BIERLEY, EAST, a hamlet, in the township of HUNSWORTH, parish of BIRSTAL, union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, ½ a mile (N.) from Birkenshaw. It is situated to the west of the road from Birkenshaw to Bradford.

BIERLEY, NORTH, a township, in the parish and union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (S.) from Bradford; containing 9512 inhabitants. This township comprises by computation 3264 acres, of which 2250 are pasture, 276 arable, 238 woodland, and about 500 waste. The manor of Royds Hall is the property of the Low Moor Company, and that of Oakenshaw, of Miss Currer, great grand-daughter and heiress of the learned Dr. Richardson, whose ancestors for many generations resided at Bierley Hall, originally an ancient structure in the early English style of domestic architecture. The old Hall has been rebuilt in a handsome modern style, and is a spacious mansion, now in the occupation of T. G. Clayton, Esq.; it is beautifully situated in grounds tastefully embellished, and in front of the house is a noble cedar of Lebanon, presented when a seedling to Dr. Richardson by Sir Hans Sloane, more than a century since, and which has attained a stately and majestic growth. A hothouse, the second constructed in England, was built here as soon as the workmen had finished that at Orford, near Liverpool. Royds Hall, which has been for many years the residence of the Dawson family, was originally built by the Rookes, who held the manor from the time of Henry VIII., till the close of the last century; it is a handsome mansion, in the ancient English style, situated on an eminence commanding an extensive and finely varied prospect, and is now the seat of Christopher Dawson, Esq., one of the proprietors of the Low Moor iron-works. Low Moor House, the seat of Henry Wickham Wickham, Esq., and Odsal, the residence of Charles Hardy, Esq., are both handsome modern mansions.

The manor of Royds Hall, together with the minerals underneath the estate, was purchased from the last proprietor in 1788, by the ancestors of Messrs. Hird, Dawson, and Hardy, who originally established the celebrated Low Moor iron and coal-works, now the most important in the north of England, both for extent, and for the superior quality of their produce. The works comprise furnaces, forges, tilts, and mills, on a very extensive scale, both for the manufacture of pig and bar iron, and for rolling and slitting it into sheets, bars, and rods, with foundries for the casting of cannon and ordnance of all kinds, in which several steam-engines of great power are also employed; boilers for steam-engines, sugar-pans for the East and West Indies, water-pipes of large calibre, and a great variety of articles, are manufactured here, with castings of every kind, in which more than 2000 persons are employed both by day and night. The Bierley iron-works were commenced in 1810 by Henry Leah and James Marshall, Esqrs., and their partners, who hold on lease from Miss Currer all the minerals under the east end of Bierley, together with those under her estates, in the townships of Bowling and Okenshaw. These works are confined solely to the manufacture of pig-iron, which, being the produce of ore from the same mine, is equal in quality with that of the Low Moor and Bowling iron-works; they are conducted on an extensive scale, and with great ability and success. A worsted-mill has been recently built near the Low Moor. Bierley chapel was erected in 1766, in the township of Bowling, though immediately bordering on the north-east of North Bierley, by Richard Richardson, Esq., son of Dr. Richardson, but was not consecrated till 1824; it was enlarged by Miss Currer in 1828, and 1831, principally for the accommodation of the poor, and is a beautiful structure in the Grecian style, from a design of the late Sir John Carr, of York, and contains 900 sittings. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a good glebe-house, and is in the patronage of Miss Currer, whose liberal addition of £40 per annum augments the income to £200. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and among other schools is one connected with, and supported by, the Low Moor Company.—See WIBSEY.

BIERTON (St. James), a parish, in the union and hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (N. E. by E.) from Aylesbury; containing, with the hamlet of Broughton, 605 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with Buckland, Quarrendon, and Stoke-Mandeville annexed, valued in the king's books at £20. 10.; net income, £272; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. A Sunday school on the national plan is endowed with £10 per annum; and Mr. Hill, in 1723, gave property, directing part of the proceeds to be applied in clothing poor men, and in educating and apprenticing children.

BIGBURY (St. Lawrence), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of ERMINGTON, Ermington and Plympton, and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (S.) from Modbury; containing 652 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 2500 acres, of which 2100 acres are arable, 150 meadow, 200 woods and brake, and 50 gardens and orchards; it is bounded on the east by the river Avon, which falls into Bigbury bay, an inlet of the English Channel, the navigation of which is somewhat dangerous. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £28. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Livingston family; net income, £658.

BIGBY (All Saints), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, S. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (E.) from Glandford-brigg; containing, with the hamlets of Kettleby and Kettleby-Thorp, 245 inhabitants. It comprises 2784 acres, of which 1484 are meadow and pasture, and 1300 arable land. The village was formerly of considerable celebrity, from containing Kettleby Hall, the residence of the Roman Catholic family of Tyrwhitt, from whom the De Ros family claim their title; but of this once splendid mansion there are now no remains. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £31. 10. 10., and in the gift of Robert C. Elwes, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £726, and there are 28 acres of glebe. The church contains monuments of great beauty and considerable antiquity.

BIGGE'S QUARTER, a township, in the parish of LONG HORSLEY, union of MORPETH, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (N. N. W.) from Morpeth; containing 252 inhabitants. The lands of this place, which was once called Linden Quarter, and Carlisle's Quarter, continued in fee in the family of Merlay and their descendants, from the time of Henry I. till the last century, when the Earl of Carlisle sold them to the families of Bigge and Carr, the former of whom are now sole owners, C. W. Bigge, Esq., having subsequently purchased the share of the Carrs. The township is situated on the river Coquet, and on the road to Edinburgh through Wooler, and comprises 2666 acres of pasture and meadow, and 193 of wood; the soil is for the most part clay, and much of the land lying on each side of the road between the village of Long Horsley and Liuden, is of excellent quality, and the whole is more or less fertile: many improvements have been made during the present century by draining, building, and planting. Quarries of coarse freestone are worked for building purposes. A new mansion-house of elegant appearance and spacious dimensions was completed in 1814, and is now the residence of Mr. Bigge. A school has an endowment of £3. 14. 6. per annum, which arises from £100 in the 3½ per cents., lately recovered.

BIGGIN, a township, in the parish of WIRKSWORTH, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 5½ miles (E. by N.) from Ashbourn; containing 149 inhabitants. Here was formerly a church or chapel, but not even the site of it is now known.

BIGGIN, with NEWTON, a hamlet, in the parish of CLIFTON-UPON-DUNSMOOR, union of RUGBY, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3¼ miles (N. E.) from Rugby; containing 245 inhabitants.

BIGGIN, a township, in the parish of KIRK-FENTON, Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Selby; containing 126 inhabitants. It comprises by computation, including the area of Little Fenton, 2250 acres: the village, which is small, is situated north of the road from Sherburn to Cawood. Allotments of land and money payments were assigned to the lord of the manor, the prebendary of St. Peter, York, and the vicar of Kirk-Fenton, as a commutation in lieu of all tithes and moduses for the township, under an inclosure act, in 1770. The plant teasel (Dipsacus Fullonum), used in dressing woollen-cloth, is said to have been first cultivated here on its introduction into England.

BIGGLESWADE (St. ANDREW), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Bedford, and 45 (N. N. W.) from London, on the road to York; containing, with the hamlets of Holme and Stratton, 3807 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 4310 acres. The town is pleasantly situated on the river Ivel, which is crossed by two stone bridges, and which, by act of parliament, has been made navigable to its junction with the Ouse, whereby the neighbourhood is supplied with coal, timber, and various articles of merchandise. A large part of the town was destroyed by fire in 1785, to which circumstance its handsome appearance may be attributed. It is lighted with gas, and has been lately much improved by the erection of new buildings; the houses are uniformly built of brick, the air is pure and salubrious, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with excellent water from numerous springs. The environs, abounding with elegant villas and picturesque scenery, present a pleasing appearance. The making of white thread-lace and edging, and straw-plat affords employment to a considerable part of the female population; much of the traffic of the town arises from its situation on the great north road. The market, which is on Wednesday, is much resorted to for grain, and fairs are held on Feb. 13th, the Saturday in Easter-week, Whit-Monday, and Nov. 8th, for horses and live stock of every kind; a fair on August 2nd has been discontinued. The county magistrates hold a petty-session for the hundreds of Biggleswade, Clifton, and Wixamtree.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Biggleswade: the rectorial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £937. 10., and the vicarial for one of £312. 10.; the glebe consists of a small piece of land. The church, formerly collegiate, is a venerable structure, in the early style of English architecture: the chancel was rebuilt in 1467, by John Reeding, Archdeacon of Bedford, whose arms are carved on some wooden stalls in the north aisle; and the entire building has recently undergone considerable repair. A chantry belonging to the guild of the Holy Trinity was anciently founded in the church, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £7. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. Sir John Cotton, in 1726, bequeathed £1800 for charitable uses, directing them to be laid out in the purchase of land, two-ninths of the rental to be given as a salary to a schoolmaster, and one-ninth to the vicar: the proceeds are about £36 per annum. There is also an endowment of £13 a year, from lands at Holme, given by Edward Peake, in 1755, for the instruction of more children; and in schools conducted on the national plan 130 boys and 146 girls are taught. The poor law union of Biggleswade comprises 26 parishes and places, and contains a population of 20,694. In 1770 a yellow earthen pot, containing 300 gold coins of the reign of Henry VI., was discovered by a ploughman, in a field near the manor-house.

BIGHTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ALRESFORD, hundred of BISHOP'S-SUTTON, Alton and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from New Alresford; containing 284 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2040 acres, and is pleasantly situated; numerous springs afford an abundant supply of pure water, and one of the tributaries of the river Itchen has its source in the parish. The soil is a light loam, resting on chalk, in which flints are imbedded, and of which great quantities are collected and sent to New Alresford and other places in the neighbourhood for repairing the roads. The woods, of which there are about 350 acres, contain some fine specimens of beech, oak, and other timber. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of J. T. Maine, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, and the glebe comprises 25 acres, with a residence. The church, a venerable and handsome structure in the early English style, having become greatly dilapidated, has been lately restored and repewed, at an expense of £500. A national school is supported principally by the Duke of Buckingham.

BIGLANDS, with GAMBLESBY, a township, in the parish of AIKTON, union of WIGTON, CUMBERLAND ward, and E. division of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (N.) from Wigton; containing 187 inhabitants. A sulphureous spring was discovered about 1775, the water of which is much used for cutaneous complaints.

BIGNALL-END, a township, in the parish of AUDLEY, union of NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYNE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 432 inhabitants.

BIGNOR (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of SUTTON (under Gilbert's act), hundred of BURY, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Petworth; containing 210 inhabitants. Bignor Park is a spacious and handsome mansion, erected in 1826, on the site of an ancient edifice built in 1632; it occupies an eminence commanding richly diversified views of the surrounding country. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 3. $6\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £143; patron, Col. Wyndham. The church is a handsome structure, chiefly in the early English style. Between the years 1811 and 1817, the site of a magnificent Roman villa, consisting of numerous apartments, was discovered in a field called the Berry, about a quarter of a mile from the village, and explored under the superintendence of Samuel Lysons, Esq., the antiquary and topographer; near it a Roman road was very distinctly marked, leading from Chichester, by Pulborough, to Dorking, and thence to London. Charlotte Smith, the novelist, wrote many of her works at this place, where her father, N. Turner, Esq., was resident.

BILBOROUGH (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Nottingham; containing 267 inhabitants. The hamlet of Broxtow in the parish, was once a place of considerable importance, having given name to the wapentake. There are some coal-works. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 12. 6.; net income, £273; patron, T. Webb Edge, Esq.: as a commutation in lieu of tithes, land was assigned to the rector in 1808. There are some interesting remains of an ancient manor-house.

BILBROUGH, a parish, in the AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Tadcaster; containing 216 inhabitants. It is situated on the road between Tadcaster and York, and comprises by computation 1410 acres of generally fertile land: the village, which is small but pleasant, is seated on an eminence at a short distance from the road. A chantry was founded here by John Norton, lord of the place, in 1492, who ordained that £4. 6. 8., in land and inclosure, should be paid to Sir William Dryver, priest, and his successors, to pray for the souls of the founder, his wife, and children. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of T. L. Fairfax, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £270. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a free school is endowed with £19 per annum, of which £10 are paid by the lord of the manor, £5 by the incumbent, and £4 by Lady Hewley's trustees. Thomas, Lord Fairfax, the celebrated parliamentary general, who died in 1671, was interred in the church.

BILBY, with BARNBY-MOOR, a township, in the parish of BLYTH, union of EAST RETFORD, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from East Retford; containing 221 inhabitants, of whom 43 are in Bilby. The hamlet comprises about 700 acres, chiefly arable; the scenery is pleasingly diversified, and the soil favourable, producing good wheat and barley. The ancient Hall is in the Elizabethan style.

BILDESTON, or BILSON (St. Mary), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union and hundred of COSFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Hadleigh, $14\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Ipswich, and 66 (N. E. by N.) from London; containing 857 inhabitants. It comprises 1289a. 2r. 28p. of land, of which the soil is a strong productive clay. The manufacture of blankets and woollen-cloth was formerly carried on, and subsequently the chief employment of the inhabitants consisted in spinning yarn; but this also has much declined. The market, now disused, was held on Wednesday; there are fairs on Ash-Wednesday and Holy-Thursday. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 10½.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Charles Johnson: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £412. 4. 6., and there are 50 acres of glebe. The church is a handsome spacious structure. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a national and a Lancasterian school are supported by voluntary contributions. A chapel existed here, dedicated to St. Leonard, in which divine service was performed long after the Reformation.

BILHAM, a township, in the parish of HOOTON-PAGNELL, union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Doncaster; containing 75 inhabitants. It comprises about 600 acres, and contains strata of coal and limestone; and excellent sandstone, used in the foundries at Rotherham and Sheffield, is procured. Bilham House, belonging to the Thelluson trustees, and the present residence of the Rev. Godfrey Wright, is a handsome mansion, built, or at least greatly improved, in the last century by Thomas Selwood, Esq., who made it his principal seat. Subsequently a beautiful prospect-house was erected on the highest adjacent ground, by the late Mr. Hewet, at a cost of £1500; it consists of three stories, and from the summit may be seen in clear weather the cathedrals of York, Lincoln, and Southwell, together with a hundred churches.

BILLERICAY, a market-town and chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of GREAT BURSTEAD, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Chelmsford, and 24 (E. N. E.) from London; containing 1284 inhabitants. The name, anciently written Beleuca, is of uncertain derivation, and of the history of the town few particulars of importance are recorded: by some it has been called Villa Erica, the "Village of Heath." From the discovery of Roman urns containing bones, glass vessels, and other relics, and from the traces of a Roman vallum and ditch formerly visible at Blunt's Walls, nearly a mile distant, the place appears to have been known to the Romans, who probably had a station here, though the exact site has not been ascertained. The town is pleasantly situated on the road from London to Southend, on an eminence overlooking an extensive and richly cultivated vale, and commanding a fine prospect of the surrounding country, which abounds with beautiful scenery, and a distant view of the shipping on the Thames: it has of late been much improved by the erection of several large and well-built houses. The only branches of manufacture are those of silk braid, laces, and wire ribbon, which are at present declining. Here were barracks, which have been converted into the workhouse for the union, which comprises 26 parishes and places, and contains a population of 14,934. The market is on Tuesday, and fairs, granted in 1476, by Edward IV., are held on Aug. 2nd and Oct. 7th; the former chiefly a pleasure, and the latter a cattle fair. Courts leet and baron are held on the Thursday in Whitsun-week, at which constables and other officers for the internal regulation of the town are appointed. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of certain Trustees; net income, £90. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, is an ancient brick building in the centre of the town, erected probably in the 14th century. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Independents. The Rev. Mr. Bayley, rector of Benfleet, in 1654, bequeathed an estate at Laindon, producing £45 per annum, for the education of 15 children; and 5 more are taught in one school, and 10 in another, from the interest of an endowment of £500 consols.

BILLESDON (St. John the Baptist), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 9 miles (E. by S.) from Leicester, on the road to Uppingham; containing, with the chapelries of Goadby and Rolleston, 878 inhabitants. A fair, chiefly for pleasure, is held in April, but is not much attended; and there are a few stocking-frames employed. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 10.; net income, £279, arising from 156 acres of glebe; patron, H. Greene, Esq.; improPRIATORS, R. Linney, Esq., and others. The church has been lately repewed. There are chapels of ease at Goadby and Rolleston; and a place of worship for Baptists. A school-house was built in 1650, by William Sharp, which has since been endowed with property producing about £23 per annum. The poor law union of Billesdon comprises 36 parishes and places, and contains a population of 6810. Here are some traces of a Roman camp, fortified with a deep ditch and a high rampart.

BILLESLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Stratford; containing 31 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 793 acres, of which 579 are arable, 201 meadow and pasture, and 13 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 4. 7.; net income, £100; patrons, M. Miles, Esq., and the Rev. T. Higgins.

BILLING, GREAT (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of NORTHAMPTON, hundred of SPELHOE, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON; 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Northampton; containing 401 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 1334 acres, is bordered on the south by the river Nene, and intersected by the road from Northampton to Wellingborough: the manufacture of shoes by men, and of lace by women, is carried on; and stone is quarried for the repair of roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of Brasenose College, Oxford. In 1778, 291 acres of land, valued at £436 per annum, and a money payment, were assigned in lieu of tithes, and there is a good glebe-house. The church contains a north chancel, built by the Thomonds, who resided in the parish for several years, and beneath it is a sepulchre in which many members of that family are interred. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Sir Isaac Wake, a distinguished scholar and diplomatist, was born here in 1575.

BILLING, LITTLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NORTHAMPTON, hundred of SPELHOE, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Northampton; containing 101 inhabitants. The parish comprises 856*a.* 3*r.* 4*p.*, and is intersected by the river Nene; its soil is of a highly rich and productive quality, and the surface moderately undulated. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 2. 11., and in the patronage of Earl Brownlow: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £349, and there are 8 acres of glebe.

BILLINGBOROUGH (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (E.) from Folkingham; containing 999 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the borders of the Fens, comprises 2239*a.* 6*p.*, in nearly equal portions of arable and pasture; stone of inferior quality is quarried for repairing the roads. A fair, chiefly for wooden-ware, is held on the 2nd and 3rd of July at Stow Green, about a mile and a half distant, and also a horse fair. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 1. 8.; net income, £237, arising from 137*a.* 3*r.* of glebe; patron and impropiator, Earl Fortescue. The church has a fine tower and spire, and displays chiefly the decorated style of English architecture. There are places of worship for Calvinists and Wesleyans. Mary Toller, in 1671, gave land producing about £34 per annum, for the endowment of a free school, which is conducted on the national plan. The Roman Cor Dyke passes within a mile to the east of the village; there are some chalybeate springs.

BILLINGE, CHAPEL-END, a chapelry, in the parish and union of WIGAN, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Wigan; containing 1550 inhabitants. It comprises 1044 acres, of which 830 are arable, 174 pasture, 27 wood, and 13 common. The manufacture of cotton and nails is carried on to a considerable extent; several coal-mines are in work, and there are quarries of stone. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £234; patron, Rector of Wigan: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £189. 7. 6. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Birchley. A school is endowed with £40 per annum.

BILLINGE, HIGHER-END, a township, in the parish and union of WIGAN, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Wigan; containing 712 inhabitants. It comprises 1302 acres, of which 492 are arable, 682 pasture, 40 wood, and 88 common. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £216. 13. A school is endowed with £20 per annum.

BILLINGFORD (ST. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of DEPWADE, hundred of EARSHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Scole; containing 219 inhabitants. This parish, anciently called Pryleston, is intersected by the road from Bury to Yarmouth, and bounded on the south by the river Waveney, which separates it from Suffolk. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Little Thorpe annexed, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £264; patron, G. St. Vincent Wilson, Esq.: there are about 20 acres of glebe. The church consists of a nave and chancel, separated by the remains of a carved screen, and has a low square tower.

BILLINGFORD, a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of EYNSFORD, E. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from East Dereham; containing 353 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the south and west by the river Wensum, comprises by computation 1800 acres, of which 1470 are arable, 320 pasture, and 10 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Leicester, who is lord of the manor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £360, and there are 27 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, with an octangular tower; the font is of Norman character, and on the south side of the chancel is a piscina. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. A small school is supported partly by subscription; and at the inclosure, many years since, 50 acres of land were allotted to the poor for fuel. At Beck Hall, in the parish, the birthplace of Chancellor Bacon, and the ancient seat of the Coke family, an hospital, with a chapel dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, was founded in the beginning of the reign of Henry III.

BILLINGHAM (ST. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of STOCKTON-UPON-TRES, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM; comprising the townships of Billingham, Cowpen-Bewley, and Newton-Bewley, and the chapelry of Wolviston; and containing 1653 inhabitants, of whom 782 are in the township of Billingham, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Stockton. This place is of considerable antiquity, and was distinguished as the scene of a battle fought in the time of Eardulph, King of Northumberland. It was given to the convent of Durham by William the Conqueror, upon a scrap of parchment which is preserved among the muniments there, and is not so large as the space occupied by this notice. The parish comprises 5409*a. 2r. 25p.*, and is bounded on the south and east by the river Tees; and the road leading from Stockton to Sunderland passes through the village. The Clarence railway commences at Port Clarence, about three miles distant eastward, near Haverton Hill, north of the river Tees, in the parish, where shipping staiths have been erected; and pursues a course nearly east and west for 14 miles, till it joins the Stockton and Darlington railway at Sim Pasture, in the parish of Heighington: with the Durham, Byers-Green, and Stockton branches, the whole length is about $32\frac{1}{2}$ miles. The Stockton and Hartlepool railway quits the Clarence railway here by a gentle curve, and proceeds in a north-eastern direction. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Durham; appropriators, Bishops of St. Asaph and St. David's, and Dean of Durham. The great tithes have been commuted for rent-charges, amounting altogether to £810. 18., and the vicarial tithes for £132. 11. per annum; there are also about 110 acres of glebe, appurtenant to the vicarage. The original church, of which little remains, is supposed to have been built by Egbrid, Bishop of Lindisfarn, about the year 830, and to have been given by him to the church of St. Cuthbert; the present edifice is very ancient, with pointed arches, and a lofty Norman tower. The chapel of Wolviston is within the parish. There is a place of worship for Methodists; and a school is conducted, in connexion with the Church.

BILLINGHAY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, First division of the wapentake of LANGOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Sleaford; containing, with the townships of Dogdyke and Walcott, 2095 inhabitants. The parish comprises 7827*a. 2r. 22p.*, and is situated on the road from Sleaford to Horncastle: a small stream, called Billingham Skirth, is navigable for small coal vessels, and runs into the river Witham, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the village. An act was passed in 1840 for the more effectual drainage of land. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 4.; net income, £280; patron, Earl Fitzwilliam. The glebe consists of about 230 acres, valued at £410 per annum, with a glebe-house. There are places of worship for dissenters; and a parochial school for boys is supported by subscription.

BILLINGLEY, a township, in the parish of DARFIELD, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Barnsley; containing 220 inhabitants. This place, which is the property of Earl Fitzwilliam, is in the heart of a rich agricultural district: a coal-pit was opened some years since, but it has been lately abandoned. The village is pleasantly situated on the declivity of an eminence; and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in husbandry. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £190, equally divided between the rector of the parish, and Trinity College, Cambridge. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a Church Sunday school.

BILLINGSHURST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of PETWORTH, hundred of WEST EASWRITH, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Horsham; containing in East and West Billingshurst 1439 inhabitants. The soil is generally clay upon a substratum of sandstone, or beds of Sussex marble. The river Arun, and the Arun and Wey Junction canal, pass through the parish; and the village is situated on the road from London to Arundel and Bognor. It is a post-town, and has a corn market on alternate Tuesdays; and at the hamlet of Adversam fairs are held for horses, cattle, and pigs. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 6. $0\frac{1}{2}$.: the incumbent's tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £200, with a glebe of 12 acres, and the impropriate tithes, belonging to Sir C. F. Goring, Bart., the patron, for one of £916, with a glebe of 3 acres. The church consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a tower surmounted by a lofty shingled spire. There are places of worship for Independents and Unitarians.

BILLINGSIDE, a township, in the parish and union of LANCHESTER, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 13 miles (N. W.) from Durham; containing 13 inhabitants. It comprises about 340 acres, and is situated north of the road between Shotley-Bridge and Lanchester: the river Derwent passes about three miles distant on the west.

BILLINGSLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Bridgenorth; comprising about 1300 acres, and containing 149 inhabitants. Under the name Billigesleage, historians mention this place as the scene of a congress, held between King Harold and Griffin, Prince of Wales, at which they engaged to observe mutual peace and amity. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Duke of Cleveland: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £186, and there are twelve acres of glebe. Dr. Thomas Hyde, professor of Oriental Literature at Oxford, was born here in 1636.

BILLINGTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, 2 miles (S. E.) from Leighton-Buzzard; containing 323 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Leighton to London through Hemel-Hempstead, and comprises by computation 1050 acres: the Grand Junction canal, and London and Birmingham railway, pass within two miles of the church. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Inhabitants; net income, £45. The church is supposed to have been erected about 300 years ago.

BILLINGTON, a township, in the parish, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Blackburn; containing, with the chapelry of Lango, 988 inhabitants. An asylum for insane patients was for some time conducted by the late Mr. Chew, and is continued by his successor Dr. Kershaw, with every attention to the comfort and benefit of the patients. Here is a free school, with an endowment of about £14 per annum, arising from lands and funded property.—See LANGO.

BILLISBORROW, a township, in the parish and union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Garstang; containing 157 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £104. 3. 6. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. John Cross, in 1718, bequeathed property producing about £46 per annum, for the endowment of a free school for the townships of Billisborrow and Myerscough.

BILLOCKBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the East and West FLEGG incorporation, hundred of WEST FLEGG, E. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Acle; containing 71 inhabitants. The road from Norwich to Yarmouth intersects the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 8. 9.; patron and incumbent, Rev. William Lucas: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £147, and the glebe comprises about 2 acres. The church forms a picturesque ruin, the chancel only being fitted up for divine worship.

BILL-QUAY, a village, in the chapelry of NETHER HEWORTH, parish of JARROW, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 3 miles (E.) from Gateshead. This place, which has its name from being situated opposite to Bill-Point, is a manufacturing district, running along the south margin of the river Tyne. The Arkendale and Derwent Mining Company have lead-works here, where lead-ore is occasionally smelted, and where is a large mill for rolling sheet-lead, and making the various oxides of that metal, called "litharge" and "red lead:" the extraction of silver is performed by the patent process of separation invented by Hugh Lee Pattinson, Esq., of Gateshead. Messrs. John Cookson and Coulthard have extensive green-glass bottle works, which have been established for nearly a century and a half. There are thirteen cinder ovens in operation, belonging to Mr. Oswald Dodd Hedley; Messrs. Richard Hoyle, Robson, and Co., have a tar, naptha, and turpentine distillery; and there is also an establishment for distilling oil from bones, the calx of which, after having been reduced to ashes, is used in making ivory-black, &c. Among other manufactories is one for preparing colours, and making mustard; and Mr. William Boutland has a large ship-building yard and floating-dock, and a slip-way employing between sixty and eighty hands. In a deep dene, called Catdene, now overgrown with forest-trees and thorns, are extensive quarries, from which it is said the stone was obtained for building the walls of Newcastle.

BILLY-ROW, with CROOK, a township, in the parish of BRANCEPETH, union of AUCLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 538 inhabitants. An eminence here, called Billy hill, is seen by mariners in very clear weather, though so distant from the sea.

BILNEY, EAST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of LAUNDITCH, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from East Dereham; containing 218 inhabitants. The parish comprises 541*a.* 28*p.*, of which 338 acres are arable, 140 meadow and pasture, and 46 woodland and plantations. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to Beetley, and valued in the king's books at £5. 14. 2.; patron, John Collison, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £112, and there are 26 acres of glebe, with a handsome parsonage in the Elizabethan style. The church is an ancient structure, with a low tower. Here is a small school, in which ten children are taught gratuitously; and at the inclosure in 1814, twelve acres of land were allotted to the poor for fuel. William Pearse, Esq., in 1840 built almshouses for 3 aged couples, and endowed them with land producing £63 per annum. Thomas Bilney, a learned divine, who was burnt at Norwich, in the year 1531, for preaching against popery, is said to have been born here.

BILNEY, WEST (St. CECILIA), a parish, in the union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Lynn; containing 298 inhabitants. The parish, which is intersected by the road from Lynn to Norwich, comprises by measurement 2414 acres, of which about 1500 are arable, 770 meadow, pasture, and heath, and 130 woodland. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron and impropiator, John Dalton, Esq. The church is chiefly in the early English style. A national school was erected in 1835.

BILSBY (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (E. by N.) from Alford; containing, with the hamlets of Asserby and Thurlby, 584 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 2800 acres, of which about 1000 are arable, and 1800 pasture and meadow. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 3. 4.; patron, James Mason, Esq.; impropiators, the Trustees of Caistor grammar school: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £150, and the glebe consists of 15 acres. The church, a very ancient edifice, has recently undergone great alterations and repairs, having been previously in a very dilapidated state. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school has a small endowment of £5 per annum.

BILSDALE, WEST SIDE, a township, in the parish of HAWNBY, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 8 miles (N. W. by N.) from Helmsley; containing 168 inhabitants. This is a moorland township, extending in length between seven and twelve miles, and rising in lofty fells at Ryedale head; it comprises by computation 6090 acres. The river Seth flows on the east in a direction nearly from north to south. In 1757, John Smales and Gregory Elsley bequeathed £120. 5., directing the proceeds to be applied to teaching six poor boys.

BILSDALE-MIDCABLE, a chapelry, in the parish and union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Helmsley; containing, with Bilsdale-Kirkham, 738 inhabitants. This place is on the east side of Ryedale, and includes the hamlets of Crosett and Chapel-Yate; it comprises by computation 8380 acres, of which a large portion is high moorland, and the whole the property of Lord Feversham. The chapel, built about 20 years since, and dedicated to St. Hilda, stands on an eminence at the head of the deep romantic dale, and is a neat structure, with a square tower: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Helmsley, the appropriator, and has a net income of £91. There is a place of worship for the Society of Friends. Upon Studfast hill, in this district, the site of a Druids' temple was discovered in 1824.

BILSINGTON (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, partly in the liberty of ROMNEY MARSH, but chiefly in the hundred of NEWCHURCH, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 8 miles (S. S. E.) from Ashford; containing 385 inhabitants. The parish comprises the manors of Bilsington Superior, or the Priory, and Bilsington Inferior, or the Moat; and the proprietor for the time being is cup-bearer to the king at his coronation, on which occasion he presents three maple cups to his majesty, and, on performing that office in person, receives the honour of knighthood. The upper part is thickly wooded, and in that portion lying in Romney Marsh are some luxuriant pastures; the soil is clay, alternated with sand; the chief crops are wheat, oats, beans, peas, and hops. Over the Royal Military canal, which passes through the parish, is a neat bridge, and adjoining it a coal and timber wharf. A fair for toys is held on the 5th of July. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £49; patrons and impropiators, Representatives of the late Sir W. R. Cosway, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £615. A school is conducted on the national plan. A priory for Black canons was founded here, before the year 1253, by John Mansell, provost of Beverley, who dedicated it to the Blessed Virgin; its revenue was valued at the Dissolution at £81. 1. 6., and was granted in exchange for other lands to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

BILSON, county of SUFFOLK.—See BILDESTON.

BILSTHORPE (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of SOUTHWELL, South-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (S.) from Ollerton; containing 244 inhabitants, and comprising 1420 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 1. 8.; patron, Earl of Scarborough; impropiator, H. Gordon, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £372, and there are 75 acres of glebe. The church stands on an eminence above the village; the tower, which has two bells, appears to have been built in 1663.

BILSTON, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish, borough, and union of WOLVERHAMPTON, N. division of the hundred of SEISDON, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. E.) from Wolverhampton, 19 (S. by E.) from Stafford, and 120 (N. W.) from London; containing 20,181 inhabitants. This place, which formerly belonged to the portionists or prebendaries of Wolverhampton, and in their charter is called "Bilsreton," was a royal demesne at the time of the Conquest, and in the reign of Edward III. was, under the appellation of "Billestone," certified to be exempt from toll. It comprises part of the manner of Stowheath, and the whole of the manor of Bradley, separated from each other by a brook which, rising at Sedgley, about two miles distant, forms one of the sources of the river Tame, and flows through the township. Previously to the introduction of the iron-works, Bilston merely contained a few private houses; and its population in 1695, according to the census then taken, was only 1004; but from the abundance and rich quality of its mines of coal and iron-stone, and the consequent establishment of the iron trade, it rapidly increased in extent and population, and has become one of the largest manufacturing places in the county. The town is situated on rising ground in the centre of a district abounding with numerous foundries, forges, furnaces, steam-engines, and other works necessary for the various processes of the iron manufacture, of which the smoke by day and the fires by night present a scene singularly impressive. It extends for nearly two miles in length, is irregularly built, and is lighted with gas brought from the works at West Bromwich, four miles distant; the principal streets contain several substantial and handsome houses, and throughout the neighbourhood are scattered, in every direction, the numerous habitations of persons employed in the different works. The manufacture of tin, japanned and enamelled wares of every kind, iron-wire, nails, screws, iron-gates and palisades, machinery, steam-engines, and all the heavier articles in the iron trade, is carried on to a very considerable extent; and there are also some mills for forming pig-iron into bars, and many iron and brass foundries. Clay, of which the coarser kind of pottery ware is made, and a particularly fine sand for casting, are found in great abundance; and there are quarries of a very hard stone, much valued for grindstones and troughs, and for building, lying in horizontal strata of twelve layers, gradually increasing in thickness from the surface. The Birmingham and Staffordshire canal, which passes near the town, and several branch canals in the vicinity, together with the Grand Junction railway, afford the means of conveying the produce of the mines, the massive productions of the foundries, and the various manufactures of the town and neighbourhood, to different parts of the kingdom. The market days, established by act of parliament in 1825, are Monday and Saturday; and the fairs, which are toll-free, are on Whit-Monday and the Monday preceding the Michaelmas fair at Birmingham. A court of requests for debts not exceeding £5 is held under an act of the 48th of George III.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the resident Householders; net income, £635. The curacy was originally founded about 1458, by the householders, at that time about fifteen in number, who endowed it with considerable portions of land, which were sequestered in the reign of Edward VI. The chapel, dedicated to St. Leonard, was built in the reign of Richard II., and rebuilt in 1826, by the united exertions of the Rev. William Leigh, the then incumbent, and the parishioners. In 1829, a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Mary, was erected at an expense of £7223. 6. 1., which was defrayed by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners; it is an elegant structure, in the later English style, with a handsome square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles. The minister is appointed by the incumbent of St. Leonard's, and derives his income solely from the rents of the pews, amounting to about £83 per annum. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. A Blue-coat school, called the Town school, was founded in 1699, by Humphrey Perry, Esq. During the prevalence of the Asiatic cholera, in the autumn of 1832, this place suffered severely from its destructive ravages; in the months of August and September, 3568 of the inhabitants were attacked, and 742 died in less than seven weeks. To mitigate the aggravated sufferings of the poor, a subscription, amounting to £8536. 8. 7.; was raised in various parts of the kingdom; and for the gratuitous education of the children under 12 years of age, in number 450, bereaved of their parents by the visitation, two excellent school-rooms were erected from the surplus fund, and opened with much solemnity.

BILSTONE, a chapelry, in the parish of NORTON-JUXTA-TWYXCROSS, union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Market-Bosworth; containing 126 inhabitants.

BILTON, a township, in the parish of LESBURY, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 121 inhabitants.

BILTON (St. MARK), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Rugby; containing 623 inhabitants. It comprises about 2200 acres, of which the soil is clay, loam, and gravel, and the surface gently undulated. Bilton Hall, with the estate belonging to it, was purchased in the early part of the last century by Addison, the poet and moralist, who spent a considerable portion of the latter part of his life here, where he wrote his "Evidences of the Christian Religion;" and Miss Addison, his only child, retired hither towards the close of her life, where she died in 1797. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 10. 7½.; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. T. Parker: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £517, and the glebe consists of 105 acres. The church is principally Norman, of which style it exhibits some good specimens; the tower and spire are of later date. A school, now conducted on the national plan, was endowed with £20 per annum, the bequest of Langton Freeman, Esq., in 1783.

BILTON, a chapelry, in the parish of SWINE, union of SKIRLAUGH, Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, E. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Hull; containing 84 inhabitants. This place, called in Domesday book, Biletone, at an early period gave name to a family resident here; and among subsequent owners of land occur the families of Knowles and Stanhope; the present chief proprietor is Viscount Downe. The township comprises 1180*a.* 29*p.*, tithe-free: the village, which is neat, is on the old turnpike-road, equidistant from Hull and Hedon. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Viscount Downe, the impropiator, and has a net income of £45; there is a glebe of $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, is a small building of early English character, with a bell-turret; the interior is neat and appropriate, and contains a very old circular font.

BILTON (St. HELEN), a parish, in the AINSTRY wapentake, W. riding of YORK; containing 881 inhabitants, of whom 214 are in the township of Bilton, 9 miles (W. by S.) from York. The parish includes the townships of Bilton, Bickerton, and Tockwith, and comprises by computation 4939 acres, of which 2167*a.*

1*r.* 38*p.* are in the first-named township; the soil is fertile, and the lands are well cultivated. The road from York to Wetherby runs through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Bilton in the Cathedral of York, valued in the king's books at £3. 16. 0½., and with a net income of £131: allotments of land were assigned in lieu of tithes for the township of Bilton in 1776. Bilton school, built by Hall Plumer, Esq., in 1805, is endowed with £5 per annum from Lady Hewley's charity, for which 10 children are taught. At Synningthwaite, in the parish, Bertram Haget, in 1160, founded a Cistercian nunnery for a prioress and twelve nuns, in honour of the Blessed Virgin. At the Dissolution it had a revenue of £62. 6., and was granted to Sir Thomas Tempest; the estate is at present the property of the trustees of Lord Wharton's Bible charity, and the remains of the nunnery, now a farm-house, are surrounded by a moat inclosing 8 acres.

BILTON, with HARROGATE, a township, in the parish of KNARESBOROUGH, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Knareborough; containing, with Harrogate, 3372 inhabitants. Bilton is a small, well-built village. A free school is endowed with about £30 per annum, for the instruction of 20 children, given by Richard Taylor, in 1785. In the neighbourhood are several petrifying springs, and one of a sulphureous nature.—See HARROGATE.

BINACRE, county of SUFFOLK.—See BENACRE.

BINBROOKE, a district (formerly a market-town), comprising the parishes of St. Gabriel and St. Mary, in the union of LOUTH, S. division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Market-Rasen. There are extensive rabbit-warrens in the neighbourhood, and considerable business is done in the dressing of skins for furriers. A fair is held on Easter-Tuesday, on which day there are also horse-races. St. Gabriel's, containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Orforth, 708 inhabitants, is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; present income, £75; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Milton in the Cathedral of Lincoln: the church is in ruins. St. Mary's, containing 501 inhabitants, is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £291. The Wesleyans have a place of worship here.

BINCHESTER, a township, in the parish of St. ANDREW-AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 43 inhabitants. Bincchester appears to have been a Roman station, called Vinovia by Antoninus, and Binovium by Ptolemy, situated on the Fosse-way. Mr. Cade considers it to have been sacred to Bacchus, and to have derived its name, Vinovium, from the festivals held there in honour of that deity. The fortress occupied an elevated site rising from the bank of the river Wear, and the station comprised about twenty-nine acres of ground, within which, and in its vicinity, the remains of a hypocaust, altars, urns, and other relics, were found at different times, and were preserved in the court-yard of the mansion-house till the year 1828, when they were destroyed by the late owner of the estate, to assist in forming the walls of a coal-pit : one altar only was saved, which has been deposited in the library of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The estate of Binchester was purchased, a few years since, by the late bishop of Durham, Dr. Van-Mildert, and annexed to the see, by virtue of an act of parliament which enabled him to alienate certain distant manors, and vest the proceeds in estates nearer the seat of his diocese.

BINCOMBE (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of WEYMOUTH, liberty of FRAMPTON, Dorchester division of DORSET, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Dorchester; containing 170 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1000 acres, of which the soil is strong, the surface hilly, and the pasture land in general excellent. There are some quarries of a very fine durable stone, easily worked, a great quantity of which has been used in the public buildings at Dorchester. The living is a rectory, with that of Broadway annexed, valued in the king's books at £9. 1. 5½; patrons, Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The tithes of Bincombe have been commuted for a rent-charge of £180, and those of Broadway for one of £290. 10. 6.; the glebe, in Bincombe, comprises about 30 acres, and in Broadway, 20. The church is a small structure, with a square tower. Numerous barrows are visible on the neighbouring downs.

BINDERTON, a parish, in the union of WEST-HAMPNETT, hundred of WESTBOURN and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (N.) from Chichester; containing 75 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1345 acres of land, of which the soil is chalky, and the surface hilly. The living is endowed with a portion of the tithes, and is annexed to West Dean and Singleton: the old church was taken down, and the present one erected a short distance from it about the year 1680, by Thomas Smyth, Esq.; it has not been consecrated, and is private property.

BINEGAR (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WELLS-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N.) from Shepton-Mallet; containing 338 inhabitants. It comprises 1100 acres, and lies on the great road from Bristol to Exeter, through Shepton-Mallet. A large fair, noted for the sale of horses, formerly held at Wells, was removed hither in the seventeenth century, in consequence of the plague, and is held during the whole of Whitsun-week. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 12. 8½, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Whitchurch in the Cathedral of Wells: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £250; and the glebe consists of 44 acres, with a good residence. The church contains a monument to the Rev. Mr. Tuson, a former rector, and his wife, Lady Frances Tuson, one of the Somerset family. There are a place of worship for Wesleyans at Gurney Slade, and a national school.

BINFIELD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of EAST HAMPSTEAD, hundred of COOKHAM, county of BERKS, 3 miles (N. W.) from Bracknell; containing 1242 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3218a. 30p., of which 1660 acres are arable, 1275 meadow, and 282 woodland, and is situated in the midst of the tract called the Royal Hunt, in Windsor Forest. It is distinguished as the residence of Pope, who lived with his father in the village, where, at the age of sixteen, he composed some of his earliest poems; and in a retired part of the forest, consisting entirely of beech-trees, on the edge of a common, within half a mile of his father's house, is a large tree, on the trunk of which, about twelve feet from the ground, was inscribed by George, Lord Lyttelton, in capital letters, "HERE POPE SVNG,"—which inscription is annually renewed. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £800, and there are 20 acres of glebe. The church has portions in different styles; the north entrance is Norman; a few windows are of the early, but most of them, with the tower and south doorway, are of the decorated English style; one large window is of a later character. Mrs. Macaulay, the historian, is buried here. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school has an endowment of £37. 15. 6. per annum, arising from land. On the summit of a hill, near Binfield Place, are the remains of a very large encampment, defended by a double ditch; named "Cæsar's Camp," and supposed to have been occupied by Julius Cæsar in his invasion of Britain; and about half a mile to the south of this camp is a raised road, ninety feet wide, with a trench on each side pointing in a direction from east to west, which is called the "Devil's Highway."

BINGFIELD, a chapelry, in the parish of St. JOHN-LEE, union of HEXHAM, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (N. N. E.) from Hexham; containing 111 inhabitants. It occupies an eminence about five miles north-north-east from St. John-Lee, and contains some farmholds. The road from Corbridge to Cowden passes on the west. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £178. 4. 6., of which £150. 10. are payable to the Mercers' Company, London, and £27. 14. 6. to an impropiator. A school is endowed with £10 per annum, payable out of the estate of W. H. Clarke, Esq. Near the Eringburn, a little northward from the village, is a mineral spring, the water of which is so powerful that neither fish nor any kind of insect can live in it, and which was said by the celebrated Dr. Werge to be in no respect inferior to Gilsland spa.

BINGHAM (ALL SAINTS), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the N. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 10 miles (E.) from Nottingham, and 123 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing, with part of the township of Newton, 1998 inhabitants. This place, previously to the Conquest, was possessed by two Saxon chieftains, and appears to have been anciently more extensive than at present: it had a college, or guild, founded in honour of St. Mary. The parish, which comprises by computation 2985a. 1r. 37p., is bounded on the east by the river Smite, or Snite, and intersected by the road from Nottingham to Grantham; and the road from Nottingham to Newark passes within a mile of the town, the canal from Nottingham to Grantham within three, and the Trent within three and a half; the soil is various, but generally very good, and the surface level, except to the north and south, where it is more elevated. The town is pleasantly situated in the fertile vale of Belvoir, and consists chiefly of two parallel streets, one of which leads directly into a spacious market-place; some smaller streets have been formed within the last twenty years. The houses, though irregularly built, are neat, and several of them of handsome appearance: the town is well paved and amply supplied with water. The market is on Thursday, and fairs are held on Feb. 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th; the first Thursday in May, Whit-Thursday, May 31st, and Nov. 8th and 9th, for horses principally, and also cattle, sheep, hogs, &c.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £44. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1400, and there are about 34 acres of glebe, with a good residence. The church is an ancient and spacious cruciform structure, partaking of the early and decorated English styles, with a square embattled and highly enriched tower, crowned with the remains of statues, which have been substituted for pinnacles, and surmounted by a lofty spire, which, with the upper stage of the tower, is of later erection: within the church are some beautiful specimens of foliage and sculpture, of elegant design and elaborate execution. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. An endowment of £8 per annum, by Thomas Tealby, for a free school, has been augmented with a dividend of £10 per annum, payable on the sum of £150, raised by the performance of plays, and invested in the Nottingham and Grantham canal, by a few individuals of the town. The poor law union of Bingham comprises 40 parishes and places, of which 38 are in the county of Nottingham, and two in the county of Leicester, and contains a population of 16,196. The Roman Fosse-way, in its course through the parish, passes by a large mound, called Castle Hill, the site of an ancient fortress. Mr. Robert White the astronomer, and editor of the Ephemeris which bears his name, was a native of the parish, and is interred here; a mural tablet in the church is inscribed to his memory. Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury; Wren, Bishop of Ely; and Hanmer, Bishop of Bangor, were successively rectors of the parish, from which they were promoted to their respective sees, in the seventeenth century.

BINGLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish and market-town, in the union of KEIGHLEY, Upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK; containing 11,850 inhabitants, of whom 10,157 are in the market-town of Bingley (including Micklethwaite), 37 miles (W. S. W.) from York, and 202 (N. N. W.) from London. This place is one of the thirty-two lordships granted by the Conqueror to Erneis de Berun, from whose descendants it passed to the Paganells and the Gants, and afterwards to the Cantlupe family, from whom it was purchased by Robert Benson, Baron Bingley, and ambassador to the court of Vienna, in the reign of Anne. The manor passed by marriage with the heiress of Baron Bingley, to George Fox, Esq., who assumed the surname of Lane, and was created Baron Bingley in 1762; and on the death of the second baron in 1773, it was conveyed to the ancestor of George Lane Fox, Esq., the present lord. The town is situated on a gentle eminence, in a rich and fertile valley, bounded on the west by the river Aire, and on the east by the Leeds and Liverpool canal; and consists chiefly of one long street, on the road from Keighley to Bradford, in the manufactures of which latter place it largely participates: the houses are built of stone, with which the neighbourhood abounds; the streets are lighted with gas, from works erected in 1837, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water: the air is salubrious, and the environs, which are richly wooded, abound with pleasingly varied scenery. The worsted and cotton manufactures, for which there are several large establishments, are carried on, and the town, which has been gradually increasing for the last twenty years in population and extent, is advancing in prosperity and importance; the manufacture of paper is carried on, for which there are two mills at Morton, where are also a cotton-mill and four worsted-mills; and there is likewise a considerable trade in malt. The market, originally granted to the Gant family in the reign of John, is on Tuesday; and fairs for horses and horned-cattle are held on the 25th of January and of August, and on the two following days for horses. A court of requests is held at Keighley for the recovery of debts not exceeding £15, to which amount its jurisdiction was extended by act of parliament in 1839; and petty-sessions are held on the last Tuesday in every month.

The parish, including the townships of East and West Morton, comprises 13,000 acres, of which number nearly 10,000 are in Bingley with Micklethwaite: the soil is generally fertile, and the land in good cultivation; the surface is finely varied, and the scenery abounds with interesting features. A considerable portion of the township of Bingley belongs to the Ferrand family, whose ancestor came over to England with William the Conqueror, and whose descendants have ever since continued at this place. St. Ives, the seat of Mrs. Ferrand; Harden Grange, the seat of William Busfield Ferrand, Esq., M.P.; Myrtle Grove, the property of Mrs. Walker Ferrand; Ryshworth Hall, Cottingley House, and several other seats, are all good residences. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £233; impropriator, Rev. W. Penny. The church is a spacious and venerable structure, with a square embattled tower, in the later English style, and having suffered much dilapidation, was restored in the reign of Henry VIII.; it contains several monuments to the Ferrand and Busfield families. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Henry VIII., and endowed with land and tenements producing at present £260 per annum, subject to certain payments to the poor: the premises comprise a large schoolroom, and a house and garden for the master. Another school, in the village of Cullingworth in the parish, is partly supported by an endowment of £8 per annum; and Walker Ferrand, Esq., built, in 1828, a school and master's house for an infants' school, at Harden. There is also a national school, capable of admitting 800 scholars, and commenced in 1830, to which is attached a library. Mrs. Sarah Rhodes, in 1784, gave five cottages, which she endowed as almshouses for five aged widows, who receive £3 per annum each. Thomas Busfield, Esq., in 1767, bequeathed the interest on £800; and there are also several bequests for distribution in bread and clothes among the poor, and for other charitable uses. John Nicholson, the Airedale poet, was buried here in May, 1843.

BING-WESTON, a quarter, in the parish of WORTHEN, hundred of CHIRBURY, S. division of SALOP; containing 91 inhabitants.

BINHAM (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of NORTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. W.) from Wells; containing 502 inhabitants. This place was the site of a Benedictine priory, founded in the reign of Henry I., by Peter de Valoines, nephew of William the Conqueror, as a cell to the abbey of St. Alban's, which flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue was returned at £140. 5. 4. The parish comprises 2241a. 1r. 3p., of which 1825 acres are arable, and 386 pasture and meadow. In the village is the shaft of an ancient market-cross, and a fair, which is still held there on the 26th of July, and three following days, is chiefly for cattle, and for pleasure. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; patron and impropiator, T. T. Clarke, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £200, and the vicarial for one of £100, and the glebe comprises about an acre. The church is the nave of the conventual church of the priory, of which there are also some other remains, consisting of portions of the transepts, and is chiefly in the Norman style, with some later details. A national school was founded in 1815, and a school for girls is supported by Mr. Clarke. The poor have lands and a house called the Guildhall, producing £41. 5. per annum.

BINLEY, a tything, in the parish of BOURNE, union of WHITCHURCH, hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 138 inhabitants.

BINLEY (ST. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of FOLESHILL, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Coventry; containing, with the liberty of Earnsford, 233 inhabitants. This parish, consisting of 1469 acres, is situated on the road from Coventry to Lutterworth, and is intersected by the London and Birmingham railway, the portion of which passing through the parish is of the rateable annual value of £270. The living is a donative curacy; net income, £52; patron and impropiator, Earl Craven. The church was built by Lord Craven, and consecrated in 1772. The Rev. Thomas Wagstaffe, who wrote a defence of Charles I., was born here, and died at Rouen in 1770.

BINNINGTON, a township, in the parish of WILKERBY, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, 7 miles (W. by N.) from Hunmanby; containing 61 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Hunmanby to Sherburn, and comprises by computation 910 acres of land, the property of Sir Thomas Legard, Bart. The river Hartford flows at a short distance north of the village. The great tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents, under an inclosure act obtained in 1801, and the vicarial by a similar act passed in 1803.

BINSEY (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, and liberty of the city of OXFORD, locally in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (N. W.) from Oxford; containing 61 inhabitants. The soil is that of good meadow and grazing land, but the ground is in general low, and subject to inundation from the river Isis, on the banks of which the parish is mostly situated. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £90; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church is of great antiquity, having once belonged to the monastery of St. Friedeswide, at Osney.

BINSTEAD (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the ISLE OF WIGHT incorporation, liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1 mile (W.) from Ryde; containing 278 inhabitants. In the vicinity are the ancient quarries from which was taken part of the stone for the erection of Winchester cathedral. The soil is a rich marl, and the lands are in profitable cultivation. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £1. 7. 1.; net income, £52; patron, Bishop of Winchester. The church is said to have been built by one of the early bishops of Winchester. At Quarr are the remains of an abbey of Cistercian monks, which was founded in 1132, by Baldwin de Redveris, then lord of the island, and its revenue at the Dissolution was estimated at £184. 1. 10.

BINSTED (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of ALTON, Alton and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (E. by N.) from Alton; containing 1055 inhabitants. It is extremely fertile, and the surrounding country pleasantly varied; the lands are in good condition, and about 120 acres are planted with hops. It includes the forest of Alice Holt, comprising 1800 acres, which was inclosed by act of parliament in 1816. The living is a vicarage not in charge, annexed, with those of Holybourne and Kingsley, to the vicarage of Alton.

BINSTED (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WEST-HAMPNETT, hundred of AVISFORD, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Arundel; containing 111 inhabitants. It comprises 1086 acres, of which 424 are arable, 244 pasture, and 418 woodland, and is crossed by the road from Arundel to Bognor. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the great tithes, valued in the king's books at £5. 17. 8½., and in the patronage of the Dowager Countess of Newburgh: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £175. The church is a small plain building.

BINTON (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from Stratford; containing 269 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Avon, over which is a bridge continuing the road leading to Chipping-Campden: it comprises 1228 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 10.; net income, £140; patron, Marquess of Hertford. An allotment of land and a money payment were assigned in lieu of moduses and certain tithes for this parish and Old Stratford, in 1779.

BINTREE (ST. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of EYNSFORD, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. E. by S.) from Guist; containing 409 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the west by the river Wensum, is situated on the road from Norwich to Fakenham, and comprises 1443a. 3r. 11p., of which 1117 acres are arable, 247 pasture, and 26 plantations: some of it is good wheat land, and other parts good turnip and barley soil. The living is a rectory, with that of Themelthorpe annexed, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £462; patron, Lord Hastings. The church is a handsome structure, in the early and later English styles, with a square embattled tower, and a south transept, and contains a richly carved screen, and some other interesting details. The poor have twenty-five acres allotted on the inclosure of the parish in 1796, and now producing £50 per annum, and the half of £30, rent of land bequeathed by an unknown benefactor.

BIRBECK-FELLS, a township, partly in the parish of ORTON, EAST ward and union, and partly in the parish of CROSBY-RAVENSWORTH, WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Orton; containing 200 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £18. 9. 2. A free school at Greenholme, for the education of the children of Birbeck-Fells, Bretherdale, Routhwaite, and Low Scales, is endowed with land producing about £40 per annum, purchased with a bequest of £400 by George Gibson, in 1733.

BIRCH, a chapelry, in the parish of MIDDLETON, union of CHORLTON, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Middleton. This place is half-way between Rochdale and Manchester: the road from Manchester to Heywood runs through the village; and the Rochdale canal, and Manchester and Leeds railway, pass along the eastern side of the chapelry. The spinning of cotton, and the manufacture of gingham, are carried on to a limited extent. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Middleton, with a net income of £150; there is a parsonage-house. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was built by means of a parliamentary grant of £4000, and consecrated Dec. 11th, 1828. Attached is a district formed out of the parishes of Middleton and Bury. A national school is held in the Sunday schoolroom connected with the church.

BIRCH, a chapelry, in the parish and union of WARRINGTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Warrington. The living is a donative; net income, £160; patron, J. Dickinson, Esq.

BIRCH, GREAT and LITTLE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Colchester; containing 794 inhabitants. The parish is supposed to have derived its name from the Saxon, signifying a bridge, from a bridge over the brook, which is now called Hickford bridge. It comprises 3028 acres, by measurement; the soil is various, consisting of dry loam resting on clay marl of a whitish colour, and of heavier mould resting on brown clay, which produces abundant crops. Birch Castle was fortified against Henry III. by Sir Ralph Gernon, then lord of the manor, of which the ancient mansion-house has dwindled into a mere cottage: there are still remains of the castle. The living is a rectory, with that of Little Birch (which was formerly a parish valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.) united, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the gift of the Bishop of London and C. Round, Esq.: the tithes of Great Birch have been commuted for a rent-charge of £574, with a glebe of $57\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and those of Little Birch for one of £210, with a glebe of $14\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a small edifice, with a spire of shingles. When the church of Little Birch became a ruin, several of the monuments in it were removed to Earl's Colne.

BIRCH, LITTLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the Upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, union and county of HEREFORD, 6 miles (S.) from Hereford; comprising by admeasurement 935 acres, and containing 375 inhabitants. Free sandstone of good quality is raised in considerable quantities. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 12. 11., and in the gift of Guy's Hospital, London: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £160, and the glebe consists of 14 acres. The church has been just rebuilt on an enlarged plan, with stone supplied from quarries within the parish. A school, in connexion with the National Society, is supported by subscription.

BIRCH, MUCH (St. MARY), a parish, in the Upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, union and county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Hereford; containing 484 inhabitants. On the west the parish is bounded by the road from Hereford to Monmouth, and intersected by that between the former and Ross; it consists of 1170 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £91. The ancient place called Wormelow, from which the hundred takes its name, is within this parish.

BIRCHAM, GREAT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, 9 miles (N. N. E.) from Rougham; containing 511 inhabitants. It comprises 3606a. 2r. 3p., of which 2937 acres are arable, 436 woodland, and the rest sheep-walk and pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22, and in the patronage of A. Hamond, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £575, and there are 73 acres of glebe, with a handsome house. The church is in the early and later English styles, with Norman remains. Schools are supported.

BIRCHAM-NEWTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Burnham-Westgate; containing 107 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Bircham-Tofts annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 4.; patron, Marquess of Cholmondeley. The tithes of this parish have been commuted for a rent-charge of £218, and of Bircham-Tofts, for a like sum; and there are in Bircham-Newton 48, and in Bircham-Tofts 32 acres of glebe.

BIRCHAM-TOFTS (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Burnham-Westgate; containing 142 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Bircham-Newton, and valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.

BIRCHANGER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BISHOP-STORTFORD, hundred of UTTLESFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (N. E.) from Bishop-Stortford; containing 386 inhabitants. It was given by Richard II. to William of Wykeham, for the endowment of New College, Oxford, the Warden and Fellows of which are the present proprietors. The parish comprises 1051a. 23p., of which 730 acres are arable, 185 meadow, and 97 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 13. 4., and in the gift of the college: the inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £50, and the rectorial for one of £310, and there are 24 acres of glebe, with a handsome house. The church, pleasantly situated on the summit of a hill, near the London road, is a small ancient edifice, with a round tower, and contains a fine Norman arch. Richard de Newport founded here, in the reign of John, an hospital dedicated to St. Mary and St. Leonard, for a master and two chaplains, the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was £31. 13. 11.

BIRCHER, a township, in the parish of YARPOLE, union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Leominster; containing 257 inhabitants.

BIRCHES, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Northwich; containing 8 inhabitants. Mrs. Elizabeth Dobson, about 1695, assigned an estate here in trust for the education of two boys, one to be the son of a counsellor, and the other the son of a divine of the Church of England.

BIRCHINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, within the cinque-port liberty of DOVOR (of which it is a member, though locally in the hundred of RINGSLOW, or the ISLE of THANET), union of the ISLE of THANET, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Margate; containing, with Gorend, 874 inhabitants, and comprising by admeasurement 1283 acres of arable, and 290 acres of pasture land. It is said to have been anciently called Birchington in Gorend, from a place called Gorend on the sea-shore, where tradition reports the church to have stood, and to have been destroyed by the falling of the cliff. The village is on the road from Margate to Canterbury, and a pleasure fair is held in it on the Monday and Tuesday at Whitsuntide. At Quex Park, a fine old seat, is preserved a curious old gilt chair, which was used by William III. when he occupied Quex, whilst waiting for favourable winds to convey him to Holland, and was borrowed by the late Sir William Curtis for the use of George IV., when he embarked at Ramsgate for his Hanoverian dominions, in 1821. The living is united, with Acole, to the vicarage of Monkton. On the north side of the church is Quex chapel, belonging to the manor of Quex, where are interred several of the family of Crispe, to whom there are numerous and very interesting ancient monuments and brasses. A place of worship for dissenters was erected a few years since; and there is a school, founded under the will, dated Feb. 13th, 1707, of Mrs. Anna Gertrude Crispe, who bequeathed 47 acres of land in Birchington and Monkton for certain charitable purposes.

BIRCHOLT (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, franchise and barony of BIRCHOLT, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Ashford; containing 37 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 10. 10.; net income, £50; patron, Sir E. Knatchbull, Bart. The church is in ruins.

BIRCHOVER, a chapelry, in the parish of YOULGRAVE, union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 1 mile (N. by W.) from Winster; containing, with the hamlet of Gratton, 112 inhabitants.

BIRDALL, with RAISTHORPE, a township, in the parish of WHARRAM-PERCY, wapentake of BUCKROSE,

E. riding of YORK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from New Malton; containing 48 inhabitants. The township, which is situated in a valley of the wolds, is set out in farms, and comprises about 2130 acres, whereof about 400 are rabbit warren: the road from Malton to Wetwang passes on the east.

BIRDBROOK (ST. AUGUSTINE), a parish, in the union of RISBRIDGE, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 7 miles (N. W.) from Castle Hedingham; containing 557 inhabitants. This parish, which is separated from the county of Suffolk by the river Stour, comprises an area of about 2240 acres, and is beautifully situated on a hill descending to the north and south, and commanding a richly diversified prospect. The soil is a deep sandy loam, extremely favourable to the growth of forest timber, especially oak, of which there are many noble and stately trees. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of Clare Hall, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £600, and there are 99 acres of glebe. The church has many fine details in the early English style. Here is a national school. The Roman road from Colchester to Cambridge passed through the parish, in which several ancient coins have been found.

BIRDFORTH, a chapelry, in the parish of COXWOLD, union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Easingwold; containing 44 inhabitants. It comprises 595 acres, of which 259 are arable, and 334 meadow and pasture, mostly the property of Viscount Downe, who is lord of the manor. The village is situated on the road from Easingwold, and the Great North of England railway passes a short distance on the west. The antiquity of the place is evinced by its having given name to the wapentake. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Archbishop of York: the appropriate tithes, belonging to Trinity College, Cambridge, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £108. 15., and those of the incumbent for one of £64. 2. The chapel of ease was partly rebuilt in 1585.

BIRDHAM (ST. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of MANHOOD, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Chichester; containing 506 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1750 acres, and is intersected by the Portsmouth and Arun canal, which terminates at Chichester harbour, by which it is partly bounded on the north: the soil is a rich, strong, hazel mould, and good wheat land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 0. 10.; net income, £396; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Chichester: there are about 14 acres of glebe. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with a heavy square embattled tower. Here is a national school for the hundred of Manhood.

BIRDINBURY, or BIRBURY (ST. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, Southam division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Dunchurch; containing 201 inhabitants. It comprises 1033a. 1r. 19p., of which 621 acres are arable, 361 pasture, and 44 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10.; net income, £120; patron, Sir T. Biddulph, Bart. Allotments of land and money payments were assigned, in 1802, in lieu of tithes.

BIRDSALL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MALTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from New Malton; containing 267 inhabitants. This parish comprises nearly 4000 acres, and lies partly on the edge of the wolds, extending southwards; the surface is mountainous, and the scenery wild and romantic; the soil is various, on the higher lands light and thin, and on the lower grounds rich loam alternated with clay. Limestone and freestone of good quality are extensively quarried. The springs are numerous, rising from the sides of the hills. The village is widely scattered, occupying a semicircular range of picturesque acclivities at the western foot of the wolds. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £40; patron and impropiator, Hugh Maynell Ingram, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £580. 4., and who has a glebe of 543 acres. The church, an elegant structure in the early English style, with a lofty square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, was erected in 1824, by Lord Middleton, at an expense of £3000. A school is supported by subscription. Henry Burton, a puritan divine, was born in the parish.

BIRKBY, a township, in the parish of CROSS-CANNONBY, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Maryport; containing 89 inhabitants.

BIRKBY, a township, in the parish of MUNCASTER, union of BOOTLE, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Ravenglass; containing 119 inhabitants. Extensive ruins of a British or Danish city, called Barnscar, are visible on Birkby-Fell.

BIRKBY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of NORTH ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK; consisting of the townships of Birkby and Little Smeaton, and the chapelry of Hutton-Bonville; and containing 256 inhabitants, of whom 74 are in the township of Birkby, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from North Allerton. This parish comprises about 3000 acres of land, of which two-thirds are arable, and one-third pasture, with a little wood; the soil is a productive clay, and the surface, though not hilly, gently undulated: some parts are subject to inundation from the river Wiske. The Great Northern railway, passing to the east of Hutton-Bonville Hall, and slightly curving to the west of Birkby, crosses the Wiske. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ripon: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £205, and there are 4 acres of glebe, and an excellent parsonage-house, lately built. The church, erected in 1776, is a plain brick building. At Hutton-Bonville is a chapel dedicated to St. Lawrence.

BIRKDALE, a township, in the parish of NORTH MEOLS, union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Ormskirk; containing 557 inhabitants.

BIRKENHEAD, a parochial chapelry, in the union and Lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Great Neston; containing 8223 inhabitants. The Birkenhead and Chester railway takes a course of nearly fifteen miles, connecting this place with the city of Chester, and from this is a branch to the Woodside

Ferry, to which it is conveyed through a tunnel 573 yards in length. In 1833, an act was obtained for paving and improving the chapelry, and for regulating the police, and establishing a market: this was amended by an act passed in 1838, and in 1841 an act was procured for lighting the township with gas, and supplying the inhabitants with water. Here is a large manufactory for iron steam-boats. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £153; patron and impropiator, F. R. Price, Esq. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is a beautiful edifice, built in 1822, from a design by Rickman. An act was passed in 1841 for completing a new church. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Welsh Methodists, Independents, and Roman Catholics; and one in connexion with the Scottish Kirk has been recently erected. Schools have been established. A priory for sixteen Benedictine monks was founded here about 1150, in honour of St. Mary and St. James, by Hamon de Massey, third baron of Dunham-Massey, and according to Leland, was subordinate to the Abbey of St. Werburgh, at Chester; but from the power exercised by the monks, Bishop Tanner considers it to have been independent: the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £102. 16. 10.

BIRKENSHAW, with HUNSWORTH, an ecclesiastical district, in the township of GOMERSAL, parish of BIRSTAL, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Leeds; containing 3000 inhabitants, of whom 1803 are in the hamlet of Birkenshaw. This place, which is situated at the junction of the Leeds and Halifax, and Dewsbury and Bradford turnpike-roads, in the heart of a district abounding with coal, iron-ore, and building-stone, has been rapidly increasing in importance, and is now an extensive, populous, and thriving village. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the coal-mines, and in the extensive worsted factories of the Messrs. Ackroyd and others, in the combing of wool, and in the weaving of stuffs and woollen-cloths, the former for the Bradford, and the latter for the Leeds market. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, was erected in 1829, at an expense of £2929, granted by the Parliamentary Commissioners, on a site given by the late Emanuel Emmet, Esq.: it is a handsome structure, in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles and surmounted by a spire, and contains 702 sittings, of which 231 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Birstal, with a net income of £150, and a handsome residence built, in 1835, at an expense, including the purchase of nearly five acres of land, of £2000, of which £800 were advanced by the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, and the remainder raised by subscription, under the auspices of the Rev. Henry J. Smith, the present incumbent. A national school, in a style corresponding with the church, was erected, in 1838, at a cost of £500, of which £210 were granted by the National Society, £99 by the Commissioners of Education, and the remainder raised by subscription; it is supported by subscription and small weekly payments from the scholars.—See HUNSWORTH.

BIRKER, with AUSTHWAITE, a township, in the parish of MILLOM, union of BOOTLE, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Ravenglass; containing 105 inhabitants: It is within the limits of the chapelry of Eskdale, in the adjoining parish of St. Bees, and the inhabitants marry and bury there. The neighbourhood abounds with picturesque scenery, heightened and diversified by the lake Devock-water, and the waterfalls of Birker Force and Stanley Gill.

BIRKIN (St. Mary), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Birkin, West Haddlesey, Chapel Haddlesey, Temple-Hurst, and Hurst-Courtney; and containing 921 inhabitants, of whom 169 are in the township of Birkin, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Ferry-Bridge. The parish, which is intersected by the Selby canal, and bounded on the south by the river Aire, is 9 miles long, and comprises 5890 acres, of which about 3355 are arable, 2000 pasture, and 45 woodland; the soil varies in quality, part being light and adapted to the growth of barley and turnips, and part being of a stronger nature, and well suited for wheat and beans. The surface is varied, the scenery pleasingly diversified, and the air salubrious. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £36; net income, £1008; patron, Rev. Thomas Hill. The church, erected in the 12th century, is a very curious and perfect specimen of Norman architecture, and contains a fine chancel of that style, which is particularly worthy of notice: there is an inscription by Whitehead, the poet laureate, commemorating Elizabeth Wright, wife of a former rector: and the building also comprises a monument to the memory of the Rev. Robert Thornton, who, during the elevation of Cromwell, was ejected from the rectory, and after having been plundered, was tied to a horse's tail, and dragged to Cawood Castle: he was reinstated at the Restoration. A chapel of ease was erected, in 1836, by voluntary subscription, at Chapel Haddlesey, upon the site of one which, being very dilapidated and insufficient for the accommodation of the parishioners, was pulled down; and the Wesleyans have small places of worship at Chapel Haddlesey and Temple-Hurst. An ancient preceptory of the Knights Templars in the latter township has been converted into a farmhouse.

BIRKSCEUGH.—See BRISCO.

BIRLEY (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of WEOBLY, hundred of STRETFORD, county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Weobly; containing 172 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 934 acres, of which the surface is rather flat, and the soil principally clay, but in some places inclining to gravel. On the west it is bounded by the road from Hereford to Pembridge. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of King's Pion (which see), and valued in the king's books at £5. 9. 7. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £60. 13., and the vicarial for one of £134: there are 12 acres of glebe in this parish, and 2 in that of Burghill.

BIRLING (All Saints), a parish, in the union of MALLING, hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 2 miles (N.) from Town Malling; containing 511 inhabitants, and comprising 1883*a.* 2*r.* 35*p.* The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 9. 4½.; patron and impropiator, Earl of Abergavenny. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £118. 9. 11., and the vicarial for £170; and there are 8 acres of glebe. Foundations of buildings have been discovered in a field near the church.

BIRLING, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (S. E.): from Alnwick; containing 80 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Warkworth to Lesbury, and is the property of the Duke of Northumberland: the river Coquet flows on the south. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges, amounting to £127. 15. 2., of which £95. 8. 2., are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, and £32. 7. to the vicar of the parish.

BIRLINGHAM (St. James), a parish, in the union, and Upper division of the hundred, of PERSHORE, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Pershore; containing 390 inhabitants. The parish is surrounded on all sides, except the west and a portion of the north, by a bend of the navigable river Avon, and comprises 1274*a.* 2*r.* 22*p.*, of which 700 acres are pasture, 470 arable, and 13 woodland: the surface is moderately undulated, and the soil highly fertile. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 17. 11.; net income, £205; patron and incumbent, Rev. Robert Eyres Landor. A school is partly supported by the rector. Eight almshouses were erected in 1825, by T. Cheinell Porter, Esq.

BIRMINGHAM, a celebrated manufacturing town and a borough, locally in the Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 18 miles (N. W. by W.) from Coventry, 20 (N. W.) from Warwick, and 109 (N. W.) from London, on the road to Holyhead; containing in the parish 138,215, and with the parish of Edgbaston and the hamlets of Bordesley, Deritend, and Duddeston with Nechels (which, though in the parish of Aston, form parts of the town, and are included within the borough), 182,922 inhabitants. The name of this town has been traced by its local antiquary, the late Mr. Hamper, through no less than 140 variations, and its etymology is involved in great uncertainty: Dugdale, from its Saxon termination, deduces it from its first Saxon lord; but others assign to it an origin of much higher antiquity, inferring that, with more probability, its first Saxon proprietor took his name from that of the town, which they suppose to have been originally "Bromwyeh," from the quantity of broom formerly growing in the neighbourhood, from which circumstance also are derived the names of two villages in the immediate vicinity, called respectively Castle Bromwich and West Bromwich. In proof of its high antiquity, and also of its having been distinguished for the manufacture of arms and warlike instruments prior to the Roman invasion, may be adduced the great number of exhausted coal-mines on a common of large extent, called Wednesbury Old Field, within a short distance of the town, and the prodigious accumulation of scoria produced by the smelting of iron, at Aston furnace, on the border of the parish. Both of these it is concluded must have been the work of many centuries; as in the latter, though continually receiving additions, no perceptible increase has been observed within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. From its situation near the Ikeneld-street, the town is supposed to have been the Bremenium of the Romans. During the time of the Saxons, it appears to have been governed by two constables, and to have obtained the grant of a weekly market on Thursday, long before the period of the Norman Conquest. In the Conqueror's survey it is noticed under the name "Bermengeham;" and, from the reign of Henry I. till that of Henry VIII., the manor and lordship were held by a distinguished family, from whom, according to Camden, "the noble and warlike family of the Bremichams, Earls of Louth, in Ireland," who had been instrumental in assisting Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, in the conquest of that country, "had both their original and name." Of this family were William de Bermingham, who attended Edward I. into Gascony, where he was made prisoner at the siege of Bellegarde in 1297, and his descendant William, who in 1327 was summoned to parliament by the title of William, Lord Birmingham, in the 1st of Edward III. The lordship continued in the possession of that family till the 37th of Henry VIII., when by the artifices of John Dudley, afterwards Duke of Northumberland, who at that time held the castle of Dudley, and was ambitious of adding to it the manor of Birmingham, which he had no hope of purchasing, it was wrested from Edward de Birmingham, whom that unprincipled nobleman had, by a fictitious charge of felony, supported by perjured hirelings, reduced to the necessity of ransoming his life by the sacrifice of his estate. On the attainder and execution of the duke, in the reign of Mary, the manor escheated to the crown; and, in 1643, a descendant of the family, through the female line, named Humble Ward, was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Ward of Birmingham, which title was subsequently absorbed in the superior dignities of Viscount Dudley and Ward, and Earl of Dudley. Of the ancient manor-house, the only memorial is preserved in the name of the site, at present occupied by the Smithfield market, and which for many years has retained the appellation of "the Moat," from the intrenchment by which the mansion was surrounded; and there are, in St. Martin's church, the recumbent effigies of a crusader and an ecclesiastic, both members of the Birmingham family.

Few events of importance occur in the history of the place prior to the commencement of the civil war of the 17th century, when the inhabitants, with those of Coventry and Warwick, embraced the cause of the parliament, and, in 1642, after the king had passed through the town on his route from Shrewsbury, immediately before the battle of Edge-Hill, seized the royal carriages and plate, which they sent to Warwick Castle. In the following year, Prince Rupert, whom the king had despatched with a detachment of 2000 of the royal army, to open a communication between Oxford and York, was, on his arrival at Birmingham, intercepted in his progress by a company of foot belonging to the parliamentarians, who, reinforced by a troop of horse from Lichfield, and assisted by the inhabitants, having thrown up some works on the summit of Bordesley, since called Camp-hill, on the line of approach from the Oxford road, and having blocked up all the smaller avenues, fired upon the prince's army, and obstinately opposed its entrance into the town. A sharp conflict ensued, which was of longer duration than could have been expected from the great disparity of the numbers; the parliamentarians were driven from their station, and the prince, after much difficulty, obtained an entrance by another avenue. A second attempt to obstruct his progress was made by the inhabitants, who were animated in their resistance by a clergyman who acted as governor, and who, being taken prisoner during the action, and refusing to accept quarter, was, after the battle, put to death at the Red Lion inn; and the prince, exasperated by the determined resistance of the inhabitants and the death of the Earl of Denbigh, who had been shot by an officer in the service of the parliament, set fire to the town; which, however, after several houses had been burnt, was saved from further devastation by the payment of a heavy fine. In 1791 occurred the memorable riots, which originated in the meeting of about eighty persons on Thursday, the 14th of July, to celebrate the anniversary of the French Revolution by a dinner, at the Royal Hotel; and on the 15th of July, 1839, another riot took place, occasioned by the Chartists, who committed numerous and serious outrages.

The most prominent and interesting features in the history of Birmingham are, the extraordinary increase of the town, the progressive improvements of its manufactures, and the wide extension of its trade and commerce. For these advantages it is indebted to the rich mines of iron-stone and coal with which the northern and western districts of the neighbourhood abound, and to the numerous canals and railways by which it is connected with every part of the kingdom; carrying on through these channels not only an immense trade with every town of importance in the kingdom, but also exporting its manufactures and its merchandise to every quarter of the civilized world, and receiving, in return, the produce of every country. In the reign of Henry VIII., Leland describes Birmingham as inhabited "by smiths that use to make knives and all manner of cutting tooles, and lorimers that make bittes, and a great many nailours;" and, in the reign of Elizabeth, it is described by Camden as "swarming with inhabitants, and echoing with the noise of anvils; but the upper part rising with abundance of handsome buildings;" and his continuator, Bishop Gibson, in the reign of Anne, mentions "its artificers in iron and steel, whose performances in that way are greatly admired both at home and abroad." Prior to the restoration of Charles II., the town had for centuries consisted merely of one long street, extending from the hamlet of Deritend to the present Bull-street; and its population, till that period, probably did not amount to 5000. In 1711, its public edifices were only the parish church of St. Martin, the chapel of St. John in Deritend, the Old and New meeting-houses, and the free grammar school of King Edward VI. In 1731, it had received the addition of St. Philip's church and the Blue-coat charity school, and at that time its population had increased to 8254. In Westley's plan of Birmingham, which was published in that year, and which accurately delineates the state of the town at that period, not a house appears northward of St. Philip's church, with the single exception of an ancient mansion, called New Hall, of which the only memorial is preserved in the name of New Hall-street, now leading to its site. From 1731 to 1778, the chapels of St. Bartholomew and St. Mary were the sole additions to the public buildings of the town, which at the latter period contained 42,550 inhabitants. From 1778 to 1801, St. Paul's chapel, the general hospital, the dispensary, the Old and New Libraries, the barracks, and the theatre, were added to its public edifices; and, during the same interval, its population, including the hamlets, increased to 69,384. Since this period, so rapid has been the increase of the buildings in the town and suburbs, that upwards of 100,000 inhabitants have been added to its population.

The town is advantageously situated on an eminence at the north-western extremity of the county, bordering closely on the counties of Stafford and Worcester, from the former of which it is separated only by a small brook. On every side, except the north-west, it is approached by an ascent; and the streets, which are in general spacious, are well paved and flagged, lighted with gas, and, being generally on a declivity, always clean. The houses, most of which are modern and well-built, and of which several of more recent erection are spacious and handsome, are chiefly of brick; but, since the introduction of the Roman cement, many have been new-fronted, and nearly throughout the town and its environs (the latter of which are thickly studded with the pleasant villas and private houses of its merchants, manufacturers, and tradesmen), present specimens of elegance in almost every style of architecture. The inhabitants are amply supplied with water from pumps attached to their houses, and with soft water of excellent quality from two fine wells at Digbeth, in the lower part of the town. On entering from London, either through Coventry or through Oxford, the road, by a stone bridge over the river Rea at Deritend, leads up an ascent into an area called the Bull-ring, formerly used as the market-place, in the centre of which is a statue in bronze of Admiral Viscount Nelson, finely executed by Westmacott, at an expense of £3000, raised by subscription.

The Old Library, in Union-street, originally established in 1779, is a stone building, comprising a spacious depository for the books, of which there are more than 30,000 volumes: the New Library, instituted in 1796, and for which the present building in Temple-row West was erected about twenty years since, though upon a smaller scale than the old library, is similarly conducted. The News-room, on Bennet's-hill, erected in 1825, is a neat edifice: the interior comprises one large reading-room, opening through folding-doors, at one end, into two smaller apartments, and there is also a suite of rooms, in which copies of the public records and books of reference are deposited. The press of this town attained considerable eminence when Baskerville printed that series of works which in typographical beauty have never since been equalled. After his decease in 1775, his exquisite types could obtain no purchaser in Britain, and were therefore sold to a literary society at Paris, and subsequently taken to Kehl by Beaunarchais, to print his edition of the works of Voltaire. The Philosophical Society, in Cannon-street, was formed in 1800, and in 1810 the members extended their plan, and added to their rooms a commodious theatre for the delivery of lectures. A Mechanics' Institute was founded in 1825, and there are also several other literary and scientific institutions. The School of Medicine and Surgery, now styled "Queen's College, Birmingham," under a charter of incorporation granted by her Majesty in 1843, and conferring various other privileges, was established in 1828, by W. S. Cox, Esq., a resident surgeon, and has recently been enlarged by the fitting up of commodious premises in Paradise-street: courses of lectures are delivered weekly by the physicians and surgeons of the neighbourhood, on subjects connected with the design of the institution, and certificates of having attended them qualify students for passing their examination at the Royal College of Surgeons in London. The Botanical and Horticultural Society was instituted in 1828, when a spacious plot of ground, in a delightful situation at Edgbaston, granted on lease by Lord Calthorpe, was converted into gardens, in which have been erected a conservatory and other requisite buildings. The Society of Arts, in New-street, was formed in 1821; the building is a chaste and elegant specimen of the Corinthian order, comprising an exhibition-room, a circle of 52 feet in diameter, lighted from the roof, and several smaller apartments for casts from the antique sculptures, and other departments of the art, with a well-assorted library. The Institution for Promoting the Fine Arts was established in 1828, for the encouragement of artists resident within 30 miles of Birmingham: it is now incorporated with the Society of Arts, and a handsome building of the Grecian-Doric order, with fluted columns supporting a rich entablature and cornice, which had been erected for its use on the south side of St. Philip's churchyard, is now used for various literary and scientific purposes.

The Theatre, in New-street, is a spacious and well-arranged building, consisting of a pit, two tiers of boxes, and a gallery, together capable of accommodating 2500 persons: it was originally built in 1774; the interior was destroyed by fire in 1792, and again, with the exception of the present front, in January, 1820; but it was rebuilt during the same year, at an expense of £14,000, subscribed in shares. Assemblies are held periodically during the winter, at the Royal Hotel: the room, which is spacious and elegantly embellished, is also appropriated to the subscription concerts, which are supported by more than 300 members, and conducted on a scale combining the first-rate talent of the metropolis with the professional skill of the town. The triennial musical festivals, for which Birmingham has become so pre-eminently distinguished, originated in aid of the funds of the general hospital, for which purpose the committee, on its being opened in 1779, had recourse to a performance of sacred music under the direction of a London professor: the receipts are now very large. The Town-hall, intended for the transaction of public business and the holding of large meetings, and more especially with a view to the efficient performance of the music at the triennial festivals, was erected under the provisions of the Street Commissioners' act, obtained in 1828, and was opened, in 1834, at an expense of £18,000, defrayed by a rate on the inhabitants. It is a stately and magnificent structure of colossal dimensions, substantially built of brick and cased with Anglesey marble, presented to the town by Sir R. Bulkeley, Bart., proprietor of the Penmon quarries: the design was modelled by Mr. Harris from the temple of Jupiter Stator at Rome, and the edifice was built by Messrs. Hanson and Welsh, architects, of Liverpool. The interior of the hall is 140 feet in length, 65 feet in breadth, and 65 feet in height from the floor to the ceiling; and the result of the performances proves it to be the finest room in Britain for musical effect. The organ was built by Hill, of the late firm of Elliot and Hill, of London, at an expense of £6000, raised by subscription, and in its dimensions is unequalled even by those of Haarlem and Rotterdam.

It is not easy to trace with accuracy the origin of the numerous branches of TRADE and MANUFACTURE, which, in addition to those described by Leland, have been subsequently introduced into the town, and which, from their taste and variety, as well as for the high degree of perfection to which they have attained, procured for the place, from Mr. Burke, the designation of the "Toyshop of Europe." The toy trade appears to have been adopted in the reign of Charles II., the brass-foundry in that of William III., and the buckle trade about the same period, the last of which, after exercising the ingenuity of the manufacturer in every variety of form, pattern, and material, declined about the year 1812, and is now nearly extinct. The leather trade, which was carried on from a very remote period, has also experienced a very great diminution. It is uncertain at what time the button trade was first introduced, but it has continued to flourish from a distant period, and, though very much lessened, is still a source of employment to thousands. The manufacture of fire-arms was commenced towards the close of the seventeenth century, and during the last war the government contracts for muskets alone averaged 30,000 per month. In 1813, the gun-makers of the town obtained an act of parliament for the erection of a proof-house, in which, under a heavy penalty, all barrels of fire-arms are subjected to a very severe test; and, though the manufacture of fire-arms has necessarily been greatly diminished since the peace, it is still carried on to a very great extent, and, since the erection of the proof-house, the manufacture of fowling-pieces and pistols has greatly increased. Among the almost innumerable branches of trade are, light and heavy steel goods (here called toys), brass and iron foundry, saddlery, military accoutrements, fire-arms, swords and cutlery of various kinds, jewellery; gold, silver, plated, and japanned goods; buttons, medals; gilt, silver, ivory, bone and other toys; glass, wood turnery, metal-rolling, tools and implements of all kinds, mills, machinery of all sorts, and steam-engines on every known principle. Casting, modelling, die-sinking, engraving, and other processes connected with the various manufactures, have likewise been brought to the greatest perfection; also the cutting of glass, of which there are many brilliant specimens in the various show-rooms of the town.

With the manufactures is intimately connected the celebrated establishment at Soho, about a mile to the north of the town, and within the parish of Handsworth, in which, under the superintendence of the late Mr. Boulton, the Birmingham manufactures were in a very eminent degree brought to their present state, and in which, aided by the genius of his colleague, Mr. Watt, the best principles were adopted in the construction of machinery, and the power of steam effectively applied to every mechanical purpose. In 1778, the proprietors erected a coining-mill of very ingenious construction, by which, with the assistance only of one person to supply it with the material, and another to receive it when finished, the whole process was performed from the rolled metal: from this mint issued a great portion of the copper coinage of George III., all the silver bank tokens of 1804, and numerous medals and large quantities of foreign coin. In this establishment also was adopted the first application of gas as a substitute for oil and tallow, by Mr. Murdock, who, after a due course of experiments at Redruth, in Cornwall, lighted the shops of this factory, and, in 1802, displayed the success of his researches in a splendid public illumination of the Soho, in celebration of the peace with France. Collis and Co.'s manufactory, in Church-street, has a splendid suite of show-rooms attached to it, replete with costly and elaborate specimens of exquisite workmanship in gold, silver, plated-ware, or-molu, cut-glass, medals, bronzes, and the crystallized bases of metals and semi-metals: among the more massive productions is a noble statue in bronze of George IV., and in a room of suitable dimensions, built for the purpose, is a metallic vase of vast dimensions, a fac-simile in size, form, and embellishment, of the celebrated Grecian vase of Lysippus, in the gardens of Warwick Castle. The pin factories are very interesting, and give employment to vast numbers of children; and the manufactory for japanned-ware and papier maché is considered the most beautiful object for tasteful inspection in the town. There are several extensive brass and iron foundries, rolling and slitting mills, of great power, and three large manufactories of metallic hot-houses and conservatories, in one of which a hot-house and conservatory was made for the Duke of Northumberland, at an expense of £50,000. The manufacture of glass has been greatly increased within the last thirty years, during which period five or six glass-houses have been erected, also numerous mills for cutting and polishing it, which latter process has been brought to a very high degree of perfection. Companies have been established for supplying materials for the different works, among which are the Birmingham Copper Company, the Birmingham Mining Company, the Brass Company, the Brades' Iron and Steel Company, and various others; and there are likewise chemical laboratories on a large scale, for the production of articles necessary in the different processes of manufacture; a distillery; and several public ale and porter breweries, of which the Wharstone, Deritend, and New breweries, are the chief.

The trade of the town is greatly promoted by numerous Canals, of which Birmingham may be regarded as the common centre; namely, the Birmingham, constructed in 1768, for the supply of which a reservoir of 19 acres was excavated to the depth of 20 feet, near the town; the Birmingham and Fazeley, constructed in 1783, the Worcester and Birmingham, in 1791, the Warwick and Birmingham, in 1793, and the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction, in 1826. And the situation of the town, on the great road from London to Liverpool, renders it also the grand centre of Railway communication. The London and Birmingham railway was opened throughout, Sept. 17th, 1838: the station, which is 250 feet above the level of the London terminus, is at the north-eastern extremity of the town, adjoining the station of the Grand Junction railway, and occupies an area of about ten acres. The Grand Junction line commences at Curzon-street, and is carried over Lawley-street by a viaduct 1000 feet in length, supported on 28 segmental arches of 30 feet span ; it joins the Liverpool and Manchester railway at Newton ; the principal depôt is at Duddeston, about half a mile from the Curzon-street terminus. The Birmingham and Derby railway, opened Aug. 5th, 1839, has two termini uniting with the London and Birmingham line at its southern extremity, one at Hampton-in-Arden, the other at Birmingham ; and there is also a railway from Birmingham to Gloucester. The principal Market is on Thursday, for corn, horses, cattle, sheep and pigs ; there are also markets on Monday and Saturday, for provisions, and on Tuesday for hay and straw ; and two fairs, for three days each, are annually held, one commencing on the Thursday in Whitsun-week, and the other on the last Thursday in September, which is also a great fair for onions. The market was for many years held in the open air, in the wide area fronting St. Martin's church, till the year 1834, when the present market-place was erected by act of parliament, at an expense of £20,000, on a more commodious and enlarged site, obtained by taking down the houses on one side of the area : it is a handsome building, fronted with Bath stone, and forms a conspicuous object on ascending the hill from Digbeth. The market for cattle and horses, and also that for hay and straw, are held in Smithfield, a spacious area, formerly the site of the ancient manor-house of the Lords de Bermingham, which has been conveniently arranged for the purpose.

The town, which was formerly governed by a high and a deputy constable, has been incorporated by CHARTER under the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76. The borough comprises the parishes of Birmingham and Edgbaston, and the hamlets of Deritend and Bordesley, and Duddeston cum Nechels ; and is divided into 13 wards, viz., Lady-wood, containing 8787 inhabitants ; All Saints, 13,719 ; Hampton, 11,037 ; St. George's, 19,648 ; St. Mary's, 14,685 ; St. Paul's, 8973 ; Market-hall, 13,014 ; St. Peter's, 16,773 ; St. Martin's, 13,325 ; St. Thomas's, 18,254 ; Edgbaston, 6609, Deritend and Bordesley, 18,019 ; and Duddeston cum Nechel s20,079 ; each of which wards returns three members to the town council, with the exception of Duddeston cum Nechels, Deritend and Bordesley, and St. Peter's, each of which sends six councillors : the total number of councillors is forty-eight, and there are sixteen aldermen, out of whom, or the councillors, a mayor is chosen. The manorial officers consist of a high bailiff (who is also clerk of the market), a low bailiff, two constables for Birmingham, a constable for Deritend, a head-borough, two ale-conners, two flesh-conners, two affeirsers, and two leather-sealers, who are chosen annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor, which is held at Michaelmas. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, Birmingham was constituted a parliamentary borough, with the privilege of sending two members ; the right of election is vested in the £10 householders, and the mayor is returning officer. A court of requests, originally established by an act of the 25th of George II., for the recovery of debts under £2, and of which the powers were, by an act of the 47th of George III., extended to debts not exceeding £5, is held every week by commissioners, whose jurisdiction extends to the limits of the parish. The public office, in Moor-street, is a commodious building, with a handsome stone front, and comprises a well-arranged court-room, in which the magistrates hold their sittings, with other apartments for the street commissioners and other officers for the internal regulation of the town : behind is a prison for the confinement of offenders previously to their committal to the county gaol at Warwick. The superintendence of the police is entrusted to the council ; the paving and lighting of the streets, and the general improvement of the town, are under the direction of 100 commissioners ; and the management of the poor is vested in overseers and guardians.

Prior to the year 1715, Birmingham comprised only one parish, and for all civil purposes it is still so considered ; but in its ECCLESIASTICAL arrangements it at present comprises the five parishes of St. Martin, St. Philip, St. George, St. Thomas, and All Saints. The living of ST. MARTIN'S is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 3. 6½., and in the gift of Trustees ; net income, £1048. The parochial church is an ancient structure, in the decorated English style, with a square tower having pinnacles at the angles, and surmounted by a lofty and finely-proportioned spire, with the exception of which the whole building, originally of stone, was cased with red brick in 1690 ; the interior contains several monumental effigies, of some of which the details are finely executed. St. Mary's chapel, in the parish of St. Martin, erected by subscription in 1774, on a site given by Miss Weaman, is an octagonal brick building, with a small steeple of stone : the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of Trustees, with a net income of £350. St. Paul's chapel, in the same parish, built by subscription in 1779, on a site given by C. Colmore, Esq., is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style, with a steeple, which was added to it in 1820, and is much admired for the beauty and lightness of its character ; the interior is elegantly arranged, and the altar-piece is ornamented with a painting, in glass, of the conversion of St. Paul. The living is a perpetual curacy ; net income, £170 ; patron, E. Latimer, Esq. St. Bartholomew's, which is a chapel of ease, built in the year 1749, is a plain brick edifice, with a cupola, and has been recently enlarged ; the interior is a good specimen of the Tuscan order, and the altar-piece is richly carved. The living of ST. PHILIP'S is a rectory not in charge, endowed with the prebend of Sawley, including the dignities of canon residentiary and treasurer in the Cathedral of Lichfield ; patron, Bishop of Worcester. The church, erected in 1725, unfortunately of a perishable kind of stone, is a handsome Grecian building, combining the Corinthian and Doric orders, with a tower supporting a dome surmounted by a cupola ; the churchyard, which is very spacious, is surrounded with elegant buildings of modern date. Christ-church, in the parish of St. Philip, erected by subscription, at a cost of about £26,000, and usually called the "free church," was consecrated July 6, 1813, and is a neat structure of stone, with a portico of the Tuscan order, and a spire : the living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with the prebend of Tachbrook in the Cathedral of Lichfield ; net income, £370 ; patron, Bishop of Worcester. St. Peter's, in Dale End, a chapel of ease to

Corporation Seal.

St. Philip's, erected by grant of the Parliamentary Commissioners, at a cost, including the site, of about £19,000, and consecrated Aug. 10, 1827, is a plain building of stone, with a handsome portico of the Grecian-Doric order, and a small lantern tower surmounted by a dome and cross; it was destroyed by fire in 1830, but has been restored. The living of St. GEORGE'S is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of Trustees; net income, £550. The church, erected in 1822, by grant of the Commissioners and subscription of the inhabitants, at an expense of £12,735, is a fine specimen of the early and decorated English styles, with a square embattled tower. The living of St. THOMAS' is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of Trustees; net income, £150. The church, erected in 1829, by subscription, aided by the Commissioners, is a chaste and elegant structure of the Grecian Ionic order, with a tower and cupola surmounted by a double cross, and having the tower connected, in the lower stages, with the sides of the building by elegant Ionic quadrants; the interior is neatly arranged, with galleries supported on plain Doric columns. The expense of its erection was £14,222. The living of ALL SAINTS' is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of Trustees: the church, built in 1833, at a cost of £3817, by subscription, aided by the Commissioners, is a neat brick edifice of later English architecture, with facings of stone and decorated with pinnacles. Bishop Ryder's church, built in commemoration of the late prelate of that name, was consecrated Dec. 18th, 1838; it contains 1574 sittings, of which 813 are free, and the expense of erection was £4300. The want of adequate accommodation for the increasing population, lately induced an appeal to the wealthier inhabitants for the erection of ten additional churches within the borough, for which purpose a meeting was held in the town-hall, at which the Bishop of Worcester presided, when it was resolved to open a subscription, and within three months the sum of £20,000 was subscribed. Four of the churches have been opened, of which the first, dedicated to St. Matthew, is in the parish of Aston; the second, dedicated to St. Mark, cost £4405, including an endowment of £1000, and was consecrated July 29, 1841; the third, dedicated to St. Luke, and situated on the Bristol road, was consecrated Sept. 28, 1842, and cost about £3700; and the fourth, dedicated to St. Stephen, is in the parish of St. George, and was completed in the spring of 1844. Of these churches, that of St. Mark is a neat building with lancet windows, containing 1000 sittings, and erected from a design by Messrs. Scott and Moffatt; school-rooms have been built, in connexion with it, at an expense of £1250. A site has been chosen for a public cemetery, at Key Hill, on the north side of the town. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Swedenborgians, and Unitarians; a Scottish church, and two Roman Catholic chapels: of these, Zion chapel, the Baptist and the Carr's Lane meeting-houses, Ebenezer chapel, and one or two of the Methodist meeting-houses, are spacious and handsome structures.

The FREE GRAMMAR SCHOOL, in New-street, was founded in 1552, by Edward VI., who endowed it by charter with the revenues of the dissolved guild of the Holy Cross, which occupied the site of the present buildings; and vested the management in twenty inhabitants of the manor. The annual value of the property was then £21, but the whole of the estates being in Birmingham, the increase of houses has led to a vast increase in the income, which is now about £7000 per annum, and in a few years will be doubled. The buildings having become dilapidated, and the enhanced resources demanding enlarged usefulness, an act was passed in 1831 authorising the governors to take them down, and erect new premises, and, after fully providing for the greater efficiency of classical learning, to establish an additional school "for modern languages, and the arts and sciences," and elementary schools for the poorer children of the town of both sexes. This act was amended by another, obtained in 1837, when more extensive powers were given; and an edifice has been completed, which, for magnificence and extent, is almost unequalled, and may fitly be named a college. It is a beautiful structure, in the later English style, erected from a design and under the superintendence of Mr. Barry, and presents one of the finest specimens of modern collegiate architecture in the kingdom. The extremities from north to south consist of the houses of the head and second masters: the intermediate space is occupied with the schoolrooms, library, corridors, &c. The entrance, from New-street, leading into a corridor, has the library on the left hand, in which has been erected a chimney-piece, an interesting relic of the former school, of marble, finely sculptured, and surmounted by an exquisite bust of Edward VI.: the corresponding room, on the right, is appropriated to lectures. A noble stone staircase, under a lofty pointed arch, leads into a corridor of great beauty, with stained windows, and forming a communication between the two schoolrooms. The grammar school on the south is a spacious apartment of striking appearance, eighty-six feet in length, and of proportionate width and height; the wainscot fittings are of massive oak, and the lofty roof, of stained wood, much conduces to its effect. The room for the commercial school, on the north, is of similar length and height, but narrower, and is embellished with the arms of Edward VI. and William IV., carved in stone. The establishment consists of a head master, whose salary is about £1000 per annum, independent of the privilege of taking eighteen boarders; a second master with a salary of £400, and the power of taking twelve boarders; three classical assistants, a mathematical master, a chief and two assistant masters of English literature, and masters in modern languages, drawing, writing, &c. There are ten exhibitions of £50 per annum, tenable for seven years at either University, and for which the sons of inhabitants of the town and manor have a preference; the other benefits of the school are open to boys of Birmingham and the vicinity, and to the boarders of the head and second masters. The number of boys exceeds 450. The governors have also erected five elementary schools, for the instruction of the poorer classes, in different parts of the town, where about 750 children are educated, under the superintendence of the head master, the Rev. J. P. Lee, M.A.

The Blue-coat school was founded in 1722, upon land belonging to the rectory of St. Philip's, and conveyed, by the bishop and the trustees for erecting that church, for the purpose of maintaining children of poor members of the Church of England, and instructing them in her principles: by the accumulation of benefactions it is now possessed of property to the amount of £1000 per annum: the buildings, which were enlarged in 1794, and are well arranged, have an extensive stone front in St. Philip's churchyard. The Asylum for deaf and dumb children was founded in 1812, and a commodious building in the antique style was erected on a site of ground in Calthorpe-street, Edgbaston, granted on liberal terms by Lord Calthorpe. There are also several national, Lancasterian, infants', and other schools, supported by subscription. The Magdalen Asylum, of which the bishop of the diocese is patron, is a noble institution, the chapel attached to which was opened April 28, 1839, having cost about £1400, raised by subscription. The General Hospital, first established in 1779, has since been much enlarged, and the buildings, consisting of a centre and two wings, handsomely erected of brick, comprise 19 wards, capable of admitting 200 patients. The foundation stone of the Queen's Hospital was laid on the 18th of June, 1840, at Edgbaston, in union with the Royal School of Medicine and Surgery; it occupies an elevated site to the west of the town, and consists of a centre and two wings, called respectively the Victoria and Adelaide wards, the whole containing 150 beds. The Dispensary, in Union-street, was established by subscription in 1794, and affords medical relief to about 4000 patients annually; the building consists of a centre and two wings of stone, with four lofty pilasters supporting a triangular pediment, in the tympanum of which is a basso-relievo of the "Good Samaritan." The self-supporting dispensary, on the plan of Mr. Smith, of Southam, is maintained by small annual subscriptions of the poor, aided by those of its honorary members; the infirmary for the cure of bodily deformity, established under the patronage of the Earl of Dartmouth, in 1817, and the infirmary for diseases of the eye and ear, established by Mr. Hodgson, surgeon, in 1823, are liberally supported; and there is also an asylum for infant poor, forming an excellent school of industry, in which 300 children are maintained, clothed, and employed in plating straw and heading pins, and other kinds of work suited to their age. There are several charitable endowments, which lapse of time has greatly enhanced in value, and of which the chief is Lench's trust, bequeathed in the reign of Henry VIII., by the trustees of which many almshouses for aged females have been erected.

About a mile from the town is a chalybeate spring, which, though known to possess highly medicinal properties, is not much noticed; and three miles to the west, and within a few hundred yards of the Ikeneld-street, are the remains of a large quadrangular encampment, surrounded by a triple fosse, which, from the extent of the area of more than thirty acres, is supposed to be of Danish origin: pieces of armour, broken swords, and battle-axes, have been ploughed up in the vicinity. Some inconsiderable vestiges of an ancient priory are still visible in the cellars of some houses in the square which now occupy its site; and great numbers of human bones, and skulls with teeth having the enamel perfect, have been found in the immediate neighbourhood, parts of which still bear the names of the Upper and Lower Priory. At the western extremity of the town was an hospital, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was £8. 5. 3.

BIRSTAL, a chapelry, in the parish of BELGRAVE, union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Leicester; containing 438 inhabitants. This place is bounded on the east by the river Soar, and comprises 1128 acres of arable and pasture land, of which the soil is generally light, and the substrata are sand, marl, and blue clay. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of hosiery, connected with the trade of Leicester. At the time of the inclosure of waste lands, 165 acres were allotted to the impropriate rectory in lieu of tithes, from which, with the exception of about 100 acres, the whole of the chapelry is exempt. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, was severely damaged by lightning in 1823, which injured the steeple and part of the nave; and by consent of the ordinary and the archdeacon the steeple was not restored, on condition of enlarging the north side of the chapel, which was done, and the whole of the nave rebuilt, at an expense of £600.

BIRSTAL (St. Peter), a parish, partly in the union of BRADFORD, and partly in that of DEWSBURY, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. W.) from Leeds, on the road to Huddersfield; containing 29,723 inhabitants. This parish comprises by computation about 13,000 acres, and includes the chapelries of Cleckheaton, Drighlington, Liversedge, and Tong, and the townships of Gomersall, Heckmond-wike, Hunsworth, and Wike; the soil is various, but generally fertile; and the lands in the agricultural districts are in a good state of cultivation, producing fine crops of grain. The surface is beautifully diversified with hills and valleys, watered by numerous rivulets, and the scenery is in many parts picturesque; the substratum abounds with excellent coal and freestone, and at Hunsworth with iron-ore. The village of Birstal is situated in the township of Gomersall, at the base and on the acclivity of an eminence, commanding a fine view of the adjacent district. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the woollen and worsted manufactures, which are carried on extensively in the various townships, and in the making of cards for machinery; the chief articles are woollen-cloths, blankets, and worsted stuffs. A savings' bank has been for some years in active operation. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £23. 19. 2.; net income, £289, with a good house; patron, the Bishop of Ripon; impropriators, the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower, and contains numerous monuments. There are seven churches or chapels connected with the mother church, all of which are described under their respective townships; and there are places of worship for Wesleyans, Independents, Moravians, and Methodists of the New Connexion. A free school, now merged in the national school, was endowed by the Rev. William Armitstead, in 1556, with a rent-charge of £5, for which, with a bequest of £100 from Mrs. Murgatroyd, the master instructs several children gratuitously. The school is a spacious and handsome building, erected in 1819, at an expense of £1200, principally defrayed by William Charlesworth, Esq., of Brier Hall, a native. There are several bequests for distribution among the poor. Dr. Priestley, equally distinguished for his discoveries in chemistry and his controversial writings, was born at Fieldhead, in the parish, in 1733.

BIRSTWITH, a township, in the parish of HAMPSHWAITE, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Harrogate; containing 676 inhabitants. The township comprises about 1670 acres, of which one-third part is arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture; the surface is undulated, and the scenery beautifully picturesque; coal of inferior quality, and excellent freestone are found. The river Nidd bounds the township on the north-east. The population are chiefly employed in weaving linen, and there is a cotton-mill on the Nidd. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans. John Richmond, in 1711, gave a rent-charge of £14 for the instruction of boys belonging to the townships of Birstwith and Felliscliff.

BIRTHORPE, a chapelry, in the parish of SEMPERINGHAM, union of BOURNE, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Folkingham; containing 52 inhabitants. Allotments of land were assigned in lieu of tithes in 1768.

BIRTLE, with BAMFORD, a township, in the parish of MIDDLETON, union of BURY, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Bury; containing 1753 inhabitants. The manufacture of woollen and cotton goods, and the printing of calico, are carried on.

BIRTLES, a township, in the parish of PRESTBURY, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (N. W.) from Macclesfield; containing 60 inhabitants. Its general surface is undulated, rising in some parts into eminences richly clothed with wood. There are various tumuli in the neighbourhood; and fragments of urns, which formerly contained burnt bones, have been discovered.

BIRTLEY, a township, in the parish and union of CHESTER-LE-STREET, Middle division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 3 miles (N.) from Chester-le-Street; containing 1759 inhabitants. In Bishop Hatfield's time this place belonged to a family of its own name, together with the manor of Tribley, which afterwards became the estate of the Lambtons, and Birtley subsequently formed part of the forfeitures of the Earl of Westmorland, on the attainder of that nobleman. The township comprises 1344 acres, of which two-thirds are arable land; the surface is undulated, the soil chiefly clay, and the views, which are very extensive, embrace Lumley and Lambton castles, and Ravensworth vale: coal is abundant throughout the township; and freestone is quarried for building purposes, and for grindstones. Salt-works were in operation here at a very early period: Sir William Lambton, in his petition to parliament, particularly enumerates, among other losses inflicted by the Scottish army, the total destruction of his "salt-works" at Birtley; and in the latter part of the last century a strong brine-spring was discovered, which now produces about 1200 tons of salt per annum: the brine is conveyed from the spot whence it issues to the bottom of a coal-pit, from which it is raised in pumps by the colliery steam-engine. Large iron-works were established in 1829, in which pig and bar iron, castings, and engines are made, employing nearly 200 hands. There are several railways for conveying the coal; and at Ouston colliery is a railway passing to the Tyne, distant six miles: the road from Durham to Newcastle intersects the township. A full church service is performed in a licensed chapel every alternate Sunday. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a Roman Catholic chapel, with a priest's house, and schoolroom; and two national schools for boys and girls have been established at different periods.

BIRTLEY, a parochial chapelry, in the union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Bellingham; containing, with the township of Broomhope with Buteland, 472 inhabitants. It is situated on the east of the North Tyne: the land in the northern part is mountainous and sterile, but near the bank of the river it is of better quality. Coal and limestone are found in the vicinity. The place was separated from the parish of Chollerton, and formed into a parochial chapelry, in 1765. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £84; patron, Duke of Northumberland. The chapel is a small ancient edifice. A school is conducted on the national plan.

BIRTS-MORTON (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of UPTON-UPON-SEVERN, Lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Upton and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Ledbury; containing 313 inhabitants. It comprises about 1200 acres; the surface is varied, and the scenery richly diversified. The manor-house is an ancient edifice, surrounded by a moat. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and incumbent, Rev. S. Thackwell: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £320. 10. 6., and there are 27 acres of glebe. A charity school was endowed with six acres of land, now let for £14 per annum, by the Rev. Samuel Juice, in 1703, for the instruction of boys.

BISBROOKE, or PISBROOKE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of WRANDIKE, county of RUTLAND, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E.) from Uppingham; containing 211 inhabitants. It comprises about 2000 acres of land, of which the soil is invariably red, light, and very fertile, and the situation rather hilly; a considerable quantity of vegetables and fruit of excellent quality is grown. The manor is one of the most ancient possessions of the Duke of Rutland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 0. 4.; net income, £252; patron and proprietor, Duke of Rutland. His Grace holds an allotment of land in lieu of the rectorial tithes; and there are about 100 acres of glebe, chiefly at Bisbrooke, but partly at Uppingham.

BISCATHORPE (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, E. division of the wapentake of WRAGGIE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Wragby; containing 63 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 11. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £180.

BISCOTT, a hamlet, in the parish of LUTON, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Luton; containing, with Limbury, 316 inhabitants.

BISHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of COOKHAM, hundred of BEYNHURST, county of BERKS, 4½ miles (N. W.) from Maidenhead; containing 659 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2341a. 3r. 35p., of which 1662 acres are arable, 231 meadow and pasture, and 385 woodland and coppice; the soil is gravelly, with a small portion of chalk, and the surface in general hilly. The place is situated on the southern side of the river Thames, the banks of which are adorned with interesting scenery and many pleasing seats. The rolling of copper into sheets, and the making of copperbolts for the navy, and of pans and other vessels in copper, are carried on to a considerable extent. Temple mills, esteemed among the most complete and powerful of the kind in the kingdom, received their name from having been in the possession of the Knights Templars, who established a preceptory here on receiving a grant of the manor from Robert de Ferrariis, in the reign of Stephen. This institution, on the dissolution of the society, was succeeded by an Augustine priory, founded in 1338, by William de Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., amounted to £327. 4. 6. It was surrendered in 1536, was re-founded by the king, for a mitred abbot and thirteen Benedictine monks, and was finally dissolved on the 10th of June, 1538; the abbey was frequently visited by Henry VIII., and also by Elizabeth, who resided here some time, a large state apartment being still called the Queen's council-chamber: a very small portion only of the conventual buildings can be traced in the mansion which now occupies its site. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 1.; net income, £156; patron and impropiator, George Henry Vansittart, Esq. The church contains some fine and costly monuments of the Hoby family, who resided in the abbey from the time of Elizabeth till about the year 1780: one of them, in beautiful preservation, was brought from Paris in the sixteenth century, where Sir Thomas Hoby died ambassador to that court. A national school was established in 1821.

BISHAMPTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of PERSHORE, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Pershore; containing 410 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1827 acres, and is situated near the Avon: stone is quarried for the repair of roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 9½.; patron, Bishop of Worcester; impropiator, Rev. H. Southall. The glebe consists of 80 acres of land, given in lieu of tithes, and valued at £100 per annum, with a glebe-house in good repair. The church, which is partly in the pointed style, was erected in the sixteenth century. A school is partly supported by the Earl of Harrowby.

BISHOP-AUCKLAND.—See AUCKLAND, BISHOP. And all places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

BISHOP'S-BOURNE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRIDGE, hundred of KINGHAMFORD, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Canterbury; containing 334 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with Barham annexed, valued in the king's books at £39. 19. 2.; net income, £1240; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £500; and the glebe, which consists of 1a. 20p. with premises, is valued at £60 per annum. A school is supported by subscription, and there is an extensive lending library, under the controul of the curate. Richard Hooker, author of the "Ecclesiastical Polity," was once incumbent.

BISHOP'S-CASTLE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), an incorporated market-town, and a parish, having separate jurisdiction, in the union of CLUN, locally in the hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 19 miles (N. W. by N.) from Ludlow, 20¼ (S. W. by S.) from Shrewsbury, and 157 (N. W. by W.) from London; containing 1781 inhabitants, of whom 1510 are within the borough. This place derives its name from a castle, belonging to the bishops of Hereford, that stood here, but of which the site alone, now a bowling-green, attached to the Castle inn, and some small portions of the inclosing walls, can be traced. A subterraneous passage is said to have led from this castle to another at some distance, the arched entrance to which is shown in the garden of an adjoining house; but it is scarcely distinguishable from the heaps of stones found in various parts of the hill on which the castle stood. The town is partly situated on the summit, but chiefly on the steep declivity, of a hill: the houses in general are meanly built of unhewn stone, with thatched roofs; though, in detached situations, there are several good edifices of modern erection. In the session of 1837-8 an act was obtained for inclosing lands in the manor. The market is on Friday, and is well supplied with grain, which is sold by sample: the market-house, built within the last twenty years, by the Earl of Powis, is a handsome structure of stone, supported on piazzas: the area is used as a corn-market, and the upper part as a schoolroom. The fairs are on Feb. 13th, for cattle and sheep; on the Friday preceding Good Friday, which is a very large fair for horned-cattle; on the first Friday after May-day, a pleasure and statute fair; July 5th, formerly a great wool fair; Sept. 9th, and Nov. 13th, for horned-cattle, sheep, and horses. The GOVERNMENT, by charter granted in the 15th year of the reign of Elizabeth, and confirmed and extended by James I., is vested in a bailiff, recorder, and fifteen capital burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, chamberlain, two sergeants-at-mace, and subordinate officers: the bailiff, late bailiff, and recorder, are justices of the peace. The elective franchise was conferred in the 26th of Elizabeth, from which time, until its disfranchisement in the 2nd of William IV., the borough returned two members to parliament. The corporation hold a court of session quarterly for the borough, on the next Wednesday after the general quarter-sessions for the county, at which the bailiff, the late bailiff or justice, and the recorder, preside; and a court of record is held every alternate Saturday, for the recovery of debts under £20, under the presidency of the bailiff and recorder. The town-hall is a plain brick edifice on pillars and arches, built by the subscription of the burgesses, in 1750, with a prison on the basement story for criminals, and above it one for debtors. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 12. 1.; net income, £350; patron and impropiator, Earl of Powis. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £125, and those of the incumbent for one of £230, with a glebe of 12 acres. The church is a fine old structure, principally in the Norman style, with a square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles: it was burnt in the parliamentary war, by Cromwell, and has been rebuilt without a due regard to the original architecture. There are places of worship for Independents and Primitive Methodists; and at Plowden is a Roman Catholic chapel. The free school was founded in 1785, by Mrs. Mary Morris, in memory of her first husband, Mr. John Wright, of Wimbledon, in Surrey, merchant, a native of Bishop's-Castle, and endowed with £1000 in the three per cents., since increased to £1598. Jeremy Stephens, author of various doctrinal works, and the learned coadjutor of Sir Henry Spelman in the compilation of the "English Councils," was a native of the place.

BISHOP'S-DALE, a township, in the parish of AYSGARTH, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 12 miles (S. W. by W.) from Middleham; containing 107 inhabitants. This place comprises about 5000 acres of land, mostly high moors and fells, adjoining the mountainous part of the West riding; the neighbourhood contains several waterfalls, and abounds with picturesque scenery: small quantities of lead-ore are found. The tithes have been commuted for £76. 15., payable to Trinity College, Cambridge.

BISHOP'S-FEE, a liberty, in the parish of ST. MARGARET, union and borough of LEICESTER, though locally in the hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER. The magistrates for the borough and county exercise concurrent jurisdiction throughout the liberty, the inhabitants of which pay church and poor rates to the parish of St. Margaret, but are assessed for the king's taxes with the hundred of Gartree, the petty-sessions for which are occasionally held here.

BISHOPSIDE, HIGH and LOW, a township, in the chapelry of PATELEY-BRIDGE, parish and liberty of RIPON, union of PATELEY-BRIDGE, W. riding of YORK, 10½ miles (W. S. W.) from Ripon; containing 1937 inhabitants. The township includes the market-town of Pateley-Bridge, and the hamlets of Fell-Beck, Raikes, Smelt-house, Wath, Whitehouses, and Wilsill; and comprises about 6000 acres of land, on the northern acclivities of Nidderdale, but a great portion is high uncultivated moor, abounding in grouse and other game. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £55, payable to the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. At Raikes is a school, endowed under the will of Miss Alice Sheppard, in 1806, with £1000 navy five per cents., for clothing and educating twenty-two boys and four girls; and for a similar purpose Dr. William Craven left £800 of the same stock, in 1812. John Lupton, in 1720, bequeathed a house and 12 acres of land, latterly let for £36 a year, for four widows; and there are a few smaller charities.

BISHOPSTON, a chapelry, in the parish of OLD STRATFORD, Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 2¼ miles (N. N. W.) from Stratford-upon-Avon; containing 51 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £25; patron, Vicar of Stratford. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, is in ruins.

BISHOPSTON (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WILTON, hundred of DOWNTON, though locally in the hundred of CHALK, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 3½ miles (S. by W.) from Wilton; containing 569 inhabitants, and comprising by estimation 4265 acres. The living consists of a vicarage and a sinecure rectory united, the former valued in the king's books at £12. 1. 3., and the latter at £19. 14. 2.; patron, Earl of Pembroke. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £960, and there are 30½ acres of glebe. The church is a handsome cruciform edifice, in the decorated English style; and in it are preserved two stone coffins, said to have contained the relics of two bishops, from which circumstance the parish is traditionally reported to have derived its name.

BISHOPSTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of RAMSBURY, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS, 6½ miles (E.) from Swindon; containing 704 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 4000 acres, and is situated near the Wilts and Berks canal, and the Great Western railway. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Prebendary of Bishopston in the Cathedral of Salisbury: about 150 acres of land, valued at £200 per annum, were allotted at the time of the inclosure in lieu of tithes, and there is a vicarage-house. The Primitive Methodists have a place of worship; and a parochial school is supported by bequests, amounting to £40 per annum.

BISHOPSTONE, a hamlet, in the parish of STONE, union and hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 274 inhabitants.

BISHOPSTONE (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of WEOBLEY, hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Hereford; containing 304 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 672 acres, of which 307 are arable, 322 meadow, and 38 woodland; the surface is hilly, and on Bishopstone hill is a quarry of good freestone. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Yazor annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 7. 6.; net income, £429; patron, Sir R. Price, Bart.: the glebe comprises 60 acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the early English style, containing some monuments to the Berrington family, and has been recently repaired and decorated.

BISHOPSTONE, county of MONMOUTH. — See BISHTON.

BISHOPSTONE, a tything, in the parish of MONTACUTE, union of YEOVIL, hundred of TINTINHULL, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 257 inhabitants.

BISHOPSTONE, a parish, in the union of NEWHAVEN, hundred of BISHOPSTONE, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, 1½ mile (N. W. by N.) from Seaford; containing 288 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1810a. 10p., of which 1040 acres are arable, and 770 down and pasture land; it is bounded on the west by the river Ouse, and on the south by the English Channel, which within the last twenty years has made considerable encroachment on the land. The road from Newhaven to Seaford passes through it. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 4.; patron, the Bishop; impropiators, the Dean and Chapter of Chichester; net income, £88. The church is an ancient structure in the early Norman style, with a tower. The Rev. James Hurdis, D.D., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford, and author of the "Village Curate," and other interesting poems, was born in the hamlet of Norton, in the parish, in 1763, and buried in the church. On the Downs are several barrows.

BISHOPSTROW (St. ADELME), a parish, in the union and hundred of WARMINSTER, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Warminster; containing 296 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Wily, and bounded on the north by the Downs, and comprises 1030 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10., and in the gift of Sir J. Dugdale Astley, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £225, and there are about 11 acres of glebe. A schoolroom was built in 1837 by William Temple, Esq. In the parish is an estate called the "Berries," supposed to have been a Roman station, where, in 1791, two earthen vessels were found, containing several thousand small brass coins of the Lower Empire; and there is also a meadow, called "Pitmead," where, in 1786, a discovery was made of the remains of some extensive Roman villas, and of several tessellated pavements within them.

BISHOP'S-WOOD, a liberty, in the township and parish of BREWOOD, union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD.

BISHOPTHORPE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of YORK, AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S. by W.) from York; containing 404 inhabitants. This place was called originally St. Andrew's Thorpe, from the dedication of its church, which formerly belonged to the priory of St. Andrew's, at York, and obtained its present appellation in the reign of Henry III., when Walter de Grey, Archbishop of York, purchased the manor, and erected a house here, which, since the destruction of Cawood Castle in the parliamentary war, has been the residence of his successors in the see. The palace is now a large and magnificent building, having been improved by several subsequent possessors, and especially by Archbishop Drummond, by whom it was greatly enlarged in 1766. Archbishop Walter de Grey also built here a chapel, in the early English style, in which he founded a chantry for the souls of King John and himself, and of all faithful deceased; and this is now the private chapel of the Archbishop, and the most ancient part of the palace: the windows were filled with modern stained glass, the marble floor was laid, and a wooden ceiling in square compartments erected by some of the later archbishops; but in 1841, the edifice was entirely repaired, the ancient and curious oak pulpit restored to its original colour by removing the white paint, the old, high, and coloured pews were replaced by oak sittings, and the whole interior is now in a very perfect state. The parish comprises by computation 760 acres, of which 464 are arable, and 164 pasture. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4; net income, £134; patron, the Archbishop; impropiators, Sir Francis Lawley, and the Representatives of the late A. Barlow, Esq.; the vicarage-house was considerably enlarged in 1825. The church was rebuilt in 1768, by Archbishop Drummond, and ornamented by him with a handsome window, removed from Cawood Castle; but the edifice having required very extensive repairs, it was restored and embellished in 1842, solely by the present archbishop, at an expense of about £1500. A national school was erected in 1815. The notorious Guy Fawkes is said to have been a native of this place, and it is certain that he was a schoolfellow of Thomas Morton, Bishop of Durham, at the free grammar school at York.

BISHOPTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of SEDGEFIELD, S. W. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM; containing, with the townships of Newbiggin and Little Stainton, 473 inhabitants, of whom 362 are in Bishopton township, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Stockton-on-Tees. The parish comprises 4016*a. 3r. 10p.*, of which 2102 acres are in the township, and of these latter 1273 are arable, 790 pasture, 12 woodland, and 20 waste: the soil is various; gravel of good quality is obtained in abundance for the highways. The Clarence railway, and the Stockton and Darlington railway, run in a direction nearly parallel on each side of the village, which is pleasantly situated on an eminence, and consists of two open streets of good houses, and which is about a mile and a half from the former, and 4 miles from the latter, where there are stations. A festival in honour of the patron saint is held on St. Peter's-day. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Master and Brethren of Sherburn Hospital, who are the impropiators: the tithes of the parish, belonging to the vicar, the master of the hospital, and the lessee of the corn tithes, have been commuted for £639. 1.; and there is a glebe of 67 acres. The church was partly rebuilt in 1790. A school, erected in 1816, and containing about 100 children, is supported by subscription and by an annual donation of £5 from Lord Crewe's trustees. In a field at the eastern extremity of the village is a large mound, with vestiges of an intrenchment, which is supposed to have been part of the fortifications that guarded the mansion of the faithful Roger de Conyers, from whom William de St. Barbara, elect Bishop of Durham, received powerful assistance in his struggle against Comyn, the usurper of the see, about the middle of the twelfth century, and at this secure retreat received the homage of those of his vassals who returned to their duty.

BISHOPTON, a township, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ripon; containing 108 inhabitants. It is situated on the north bank of the Skell, forming a western suburb of Ripon, and comprises 118 acres of land. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £79. 8. 7., of which £58. 18. 7. are payable to the impropiators, and £20. 10. to the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. There is a school on the national plan.

BISHPORT, a tything, in the parish and union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 270 inhabitants.

BISHTON, a hamlet, in the parish of TIDENHAM, hundred of WESTBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 425 inhabitants.

BISHTON (St. CADWALLADER), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT, CHRISTCHURCH division, hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, 6 miles (S. E.) from Newport; containing 187 inhabitants. It comprises about 1200 acres; the surface, though level, is elevated, and commands a fine view of the Severn and the country on the opposite banks. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Llandaff: the church is in the early English style. There are some remains of an ancient castle.

BISHTON, a township, in the parish of COLWICH, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, union, and N. division of the county, of STAFFORD; containing 173 inhabitants.

BISLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Stroud, and 11 (S. E.) from Gloucester; containing 5339 inhabitants. The parish, according to survey in 1841, comprises 7912 acres, of which 864 are common. The town, to which the privilege of a market was granted by James I., is situated partly on the acclivity of a hill, and partly in the vale beneath it, which is watered by a small stream; the streets are irregularly formed, and contain some houses of respectable appearance. In Lypiatt Park, amidst beautiful scenery, is situated the manor-house of Bisley and Stroud, noted as the place where Guy Fawkes and the other conspirators met and consulted, prior to carrying their evil designs into effect: the apartment which they used is still shown. The inhabitants of the parish are chiefly employed in the manufacture of broad cloth, which is carried on to a considerable extent; silk is also manufactured, and stone is quarried for building, and for pavements. The Thames and Severn canal passes through the parish, and, near the extremity of it, enters a tunnel, nearly two miles and a half in length, under Sapperton Hill. The Cheltenham and Great Western Union railway also intersects the parish, and, in the same manner, enters a tunnel at Sapperton Hill, within a quarter of a mile of the canal tunnel. The market has been discontinued; but fairs are held on May 4th and Nov. 12th, chiefly for sheep.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the great tithes, belonging to T. M. Goodlake, Esq., have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1204, and those of the incumbent for one of £748. 15., with a glebe of 17 acres, and a vicarage-house. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, partly in the decorated, and partly in the later English style, with a tower, surmounted by a spire 130 feet high, which forms a conspicuous landmark: in the churchyard is an octagonal cross. At Chalford is a district church, and a chapel of ease has lately been built at Oakridge, containing 380 sittings. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans. The free school is supported by a portion of the produce of lands left for the repair of the church, the payment of the clerk, and the salary of a schoolmaster; with it has been incorporated a Blue-coat school, for clothing and instructing ten boys, endowed in 1820, under the will of Mr. John Taylor; and the endowment consists of about 33 acres of land, yielding a rental of £55. 10. The common is reported to have been given to the poor by Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, in the reign of Edward III.; it then comprised 1200 acres, but a considerable part of it has been inclosed. Colonel Ollney recently bequeathed £300, the interest to be distributed in coal and blankets at Christmas. At Lilly-house, a hamlet south of the town, a vaulted chamber was discovered, with several adjoining apartments, having tessellated pavements, and niches in the walls. Some other relics of antiquity, supposed to be Roman, were also found at Custom-Scrubs, another adjacent hamlet, in 1802; and in Oct. 1841, near Lillygate, was discovered an extensive range of Roman chambers, whose communications with each other were distinctly marked, and of which a part exhibited the supports and bases of tessellated floors, mounded on one side by a wall of great thickness, but the extent of the whole has not yet been ascertained: many fragments of glazed pottery, antique glass, implements, stags' bones, sacrificial knives, &c., were found here, as were also 1223 coins of various emperors, some in a state of cohesion.

BISLEY (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of CHERTSEY, First division of the hundred of GODLEY, W. division of SURREY, 4 miles (S. E.) from Bagshot; containing 321 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 700 acres; the soil is rather light, but yields good corn and every species of agricultural produce; the surface is moderately undulated. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 16. 8.; net income, £188; patron, John Thornton, Esq.: 28 acres of land in this parish, and 9 in that of Purbright, belong to the rectory. The church, part of which is built with timber and brick, covered with plaster, is said to be six centuries old; near it is a chalybeate spring, called St. John the Baptist's well. A parochial school is supported by voluntary contributions.

BISPHAM, a parish, in the union of the FYLDE, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; comprising the townships of Bispham with Norbreck, and Layton with Warbrick; and containing 2339 inhabitants, of whom 371 are in the township of Bispham with Norbreck, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Poulton. The parish includes the chapelry and bathing-place of Blackpool, and a part of the new watering-place of South Shore. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £275; patron, Sir Peter Hesketh Fleetwood, Bart.; impropiators, the Incumbent, B. Crosse, Esq., and Messrs. Bence and Bacon. Richard Higginson founded a school in 1659, which he endowed with a rent-charge of £30; the income, by subsequent benefactors, has been augmented to £70.

BISPHAM, a chapelry, in the parish of CROSTON, union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Ormskirk; containing 306 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Trustees of the founders of the chapel, which is dedicated to St. John. The tithes have been commuted for two rent-charges of £147. 10. and £20, the former payable to the rector of Chorley, and the latter to the rector and vicar of Croston. A free grammar school, founded by Richard Durning, in 1692, is endowed with an estate producing about £200 per annum.

BISTERN, with BARTLEY, a tything, in the parish of ELING, hundred of REDBRIDGE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 91 inhabitants.

BISTERN-CLOSES, a district, in the parish of RINGWOOD, N. division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, New Forest (E.) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S.) from Ringwood; containing, with the tything of Bistern with Crow, 562 inhabitants. The place is situated on the road from Ringwood to Christchurch, and on the river Avon, which abounds with excellent trout, grayling, and other fish. The old chapel, formerly attached to the house, was taken down many years since, and a church has been erected at an expense of £1000, on a site given by J. Miles, Esq.: the living is a curacy, in the patronage of the vicar of Ringwood. A school is attached. There are several barrows, and some remains of a Roman encampment.

BITCHFIELD (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Corby, and 8 (S. E. by S.) from Grantham; comprising about 1360 acres, and containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 11. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £134; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Lincoln: there are about 5 acres of glebe. The church was consecrated and endowed by Hugh de Wells, who presided over the diocese of Lincoln from the year 1209 to 1234. A school is partly supported by the Trustee of Sir Thomas Clarges, Bart. There are some remains of a Roman encampment.

BITCHFIELD, a township, in the parish of STAMFORDHAM, union of CASTLE ward, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 13 miles (N. W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 36 inhabitants. This place was a possession of the Fenwick family, and afterwards of the Delavals and the Claverings, and is now the property of Sir Charles M. L. Monck, Bart., of Belsay Hall. The township comprises 717a. 9p. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £18. 14. 4., of which £18. 4. 3. are payable to the vicar, and 10s. 1d. to the Bishop of Durham. The remains of an old castle, formerly belonging to the Fenwicks, are now used as a farmhouse.

BITTADON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of BRAUNTON, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Barnstaple; containing 78 inhabitants. It comprises about 1000 acres, chiefly pasture, and is situated on the road from Barnstaple to Ilfracombe; the soil is light, and the principal part of the land being high and exposed, it is much used for summer pasture. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of W. A. Yeo, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £73, and there are 23 acres of glebe. The church is very small, with a low turret.

BITTERING, LITTLE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of LAUNDITCH, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. W.) from East Dereham; containing 18 inhabitants. It comprises 398a. 2r., of which 289 acres are arable, 96 pasture, and 17 plantation and heath. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 13. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Henry Dover, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £70, and there are nearly 45 acres of glebe. The church is in the early English style; the font is Norman.

BITTERLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, partly in the hundred of MUNSLOW, but chiefly in the hundred of OVERS, S. division of SALOP, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles

(E. N. E.) from Ludlow; containing, with the townships of Bitterley, Cleeton, Henley, Hill-upon-Cot, Middleton, and Snitton, 1098 inhabitants, of whom 204 are in Bitterley township. The parish comprises 6587a. 3r., and is situated on the road from Ludlow to Birmingham: there are quarries of stone for rough building, and extensive coal-mines; and iron-stone is found. The living is a rectory, with the chapelry of Middleton, valued in the king's books at £18. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Walcot: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £740, and there are 57 acres of glebe, with a residence. The parochial church is an ancient edifice. A church, dedicated to St. Paul has recently been erected, with a house for the incumbent, and to which a district called Knowbury has been allotted. There is a place of worship for dissenters. John Newborough, in 1712, gave £400, with which land was purchased, now producing £36 per annum, towards the support of a free grammar school; and two parochial schools have lately been built.

BITTERN, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish and union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N. E.) from Southampton; containing 881 inhabitants. This place is identified by most antiquaries with the Roman station Claudentum, and various relics of Roman times have been found on the spot. A church was erected, in 1838, at an expense of £2000, raised by subscription, aided by a grant of £300 from the Incorporated Society; it is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, situated on an eminence. A schoolroom has been also built.

BITTESBY, a liberty, in the parish of CLAYBROOKE, union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Lutterworth; containing 28 inhabitants.

BITTESWELL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 1 mile (N. by W.) from Lutterworth; containing 495 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the road from Hinckley to Lutterworth, and near the Midland-Counties' railway, comprises by measurement 1729 acres, of which the soil is strong, the surface flat, and the land chiefly pasture. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 3. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £428, arising from 306 acres of land apportioned in lieu of tithes; patrons, alternately, the Haberdashers' Company, and the Governors of Christ's Hospital, London, to whom also the impropriation belongs: the glebe consists of 21 acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated English style. A school for girls is supported by subscription. The Roman Watling-street passes along the verge of the parish, and there is a mineral spring within its limits.

BITTISCOMBE, a hamlet, in the parish of UPTON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET. Here was anciently a chapel, which has been demolished.

BITTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of KEYNSHAM, Upper division of the hundred of LANGLEY and SWINEHEAD, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing, with the chapelries of Hanham and Oldland, 9338 inhabitants, of whom 2413 are in the hamlet of Bitton, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Bristol. This parish is bounded on the south by the river Avon, and comprises by admeasurement 7602 acres; the surface is varied, and the substratum abounds with coal, which is worked to a considerable extent; large quantities of iron-ore are found, and copper is rolled at Swineford; the manufacture of hats, pins, and paper, is also carried on. A railway runs through the hamlet for the conveyance of coal to the Avon; the Via Julia also passes through it. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 15.; net income, £200; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Bitton in the Cathedral of Salisbury: the glebe consists of 7 acres, with a residence. The church is a large and handsome edifice, partly Norman and partly in the later English style, with a finely ornamented tower. An additional church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was built in 1821 on Kingswood Hill, in the hamlet of Oldland, towards the expense of which the Parliamentary Commissioners granted £2293, and in 1822 an ecclesiastical district was appropriated to it: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Prebendary; net income, £150. A church was erected at Hanham, in 1841, by subscription; it is a handsome structure in the early English style. There are also chapels of ease at Hanham and Oldland. There are places of worship for Independents, Moravians, and Wesleyans; a national school has been erected at Bitton, which is partly supported by subscription, and there is also a school at Oldland. At Field Grove is a mineral spring.

BIX-BRAND (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of HENLEY-UPON-THAMES, hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Henley; containing 427 inhabitants. This parish, with that of Bix-Gibwen, united, and now usually called Bix, comprises about 3000 acres, of which 2000 are chiefly arable, 750 woodland, chiefly beech, and 250 waste land. The soil is principally chalk, with gravel and clay in some places; the surface is hilly, and the valleys run into the Chiltern range of hills. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 15.; net income, £487; patron, Earl of Macclesfield: the glebe consists of about 50 acres, with a house.

BIX-GIBWEN (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of HENLEY-UPON-THAMES, hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Henley. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Bix-Brand: the church is in ruins.

BIXLEY (St. WANDEGISILUS), a parish, in the union and hundred of HENSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Norwich; comprising 640 acres of arable and pasture, and containing 110 inhabitants. The road from Norwich to Bury passes through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Earl-Framingham, united, valued in the king's books at £5; net income, £608; patron, the Rev. C. D. Brereton. The church is an ancient edifice, built by William de Dunwich, in 1272, and was formerly the resort of numerous pilgrims to the shrine of its tutelar saint.

BIXTON, or BICKERSTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Wymondham. The living is a rectory, united with the vicarage of Kimberley, to the rectory of Barnham-Broom, and valued in the king's books at £2. 6. 8.: the church is in ruins.

BLABY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (S. W.) from Leicester; containing, with the chapelry of Countessthorpe, 1896 inhabitants. It is intersected by the Union canal, and comprises 1250 acres, exclusively of the chapelry, which consists of 1200 acres; the soil is various, and the surface generally level. The worsted manufacture is carried on to a considerable extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £350. On the inclosure of waste in 1776, an allotment of 400 acres was assigned in lieu of tithes. There is a chapel of ease at Countessthorpe; and there are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. The poor law union of Blaby comprises 22 parishes and places, and contains a population of 13,699.

BLACKAUTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Dartmouth; containing, with the chapelry of Street, 1449 inhabitants, of whom 420 are in the village of Blackauton. It comprises by computation 6000 acres; the soil is in general good, the surface hilly, and the land well supplied with water. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 8. 9.; net income, £122; patron, Sir J. H. Seale, Bart.; impropiator, A. Welland, Esq.: the glebe consists of 9 acres, with a residence. The church contains a Norman font, and a wooden screen richly carved. An additional church has been built at Street, containing 400 sittings, of which 200 are free, the Incorporated Society having granted £250 towards the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BLACKBOROUGH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Cullompton; containing 112 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of the Wyndham family; net income, £140. The old church having become dilapidated, a new one of elegant design was erected at the expense of the late Earl of Egremont, of agate, of which an almost inexhaustible quarry has been discovered in the Black Down hills, a portion of which range is included within the limits of the parish. The parochial school was built at the cost of Richard Marker, Esq. Whetstones for sharpening scythes, and the Sun Dew (Drosera rotundifolia), a plant confined to particular localities, are found in great abundance.

BLACKBROOK, or BLAKEBROOK, a hamlet, in the union, and in that part of the parish of KIDDERMINSTER which is called the Foreign, Lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Kidderminster and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (W.) from Kidderminster. Several new houses have been erected in this agreeable part of the environs of Kidderminster.

BLACKBURN (St. MARY), a parish, and the head of a union, in the Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; comprising the market-town and newly-enfranchised borough of Blackburn, the chapelries of Balderston, Billington-Lango, Over Darwen, Salesbury, Samlesbury, and Tockholes, and the townships of Clayton-le-Dale, Cuerdale, Lower Darwen, Dinkley, Eccleshill, Great and Little Harwood, Livesey, Mellor, Osbaldeston, Pleasington, Ramsgrave, Rishton, Walton-le-Dale, Wilpshire, and Witton; and containing 71,711 inhabitants, of whom 36,629 are in the town, 31 miles (S. E. by S.) from Lancaster, and 210 (N. N. W.) from London. This place takes its name from a small rivulet flowing near the town, which, from the turbid state of the water, was anciently called Blakeburn, or the yellow bourne. A castle is said to have been built here, probably by the Romans, which, after their departure from the island, was occupied successively by the Britons and the Saxons; but there are no vestiges of it, nor can even its site be distinctly ascertained. Blackburn was formerly the capital of a district, called Blackburnshire, which for many ages was a dreary and uncultivated waste. In the reign of Elizabeth, it was distinguished as a good market-town, and, in the middle of the following century, was celebrated for its supplies of corn, cattle, and provisions. The town is pleasantly situated at the distance of about half a mile from the river Derwent, in a valley sheltered by a ridge of hills, extending from the north-east to the north-west, and consists of several streets, irregularly formed, but containing some well-built, and many respectable houses: it is only indifferently paved, is lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. There are assembly-rooms, a subscription library, a scientific institution, and a theatre, which last was erected in 1818. The manufacture of Blackburn checks, and subsequently that of Blackburn greys, a mixture of linen and cotton, which formerly flourished here to a considerable extent, has been superseded by the manufacture of calico, muslin, and cotton goods: nearly 50,000 pieces of the last are, on an average, made weekly, in which about 10,000 persons are employed; and the value of these goods, exclusively of dyeing and printing, is estimated at more than £2,000,000 sterling per annum. There are large factories for the spinning of cotton; and throughout the entire parish are several printing, dyeing, bleaching, and other establishments connected with the cotton manufacture.

Some of the earliest and most important improvements in the spinning and manufacture of cotton originated with James Hargreave, a carpenter in this town, who was the inventor and patentee of the spinning-jenny, which has since been so generally adopted. The introduction of machinery excited a powerful sensation among the workmen of the neighbourhood, and created such tumultuous proceedings on the part of the populace, who destroyed several of the factories in which it was used, that the inventor was driven from the town; and many individuals, who had invested large capitals in the establishment of cotton-factories, were so intimidated, that they embraced the earliest opportunity of withdrawing their investments, and of removing to places where they might employ them with greater security. There are at present about 100,000 spindles in operation in the town and neighbourhood, which produce about 35,000lbs. of yarn weekly. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes the town, and affords communication with the Mersey, the Dee, the Ouse, the Trent, the Humber, the Severn, and the Thames, forming a most extensive line of inland navigation. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday: the fairs are held on Easter-Monday (which continues during the whole week), May 12th, and the two following days, and October 17th; a cattle fair is also held every second Wednesday throughout the year. An act was passed in 1841, for improving the streets and public places, and for the erection of a town-hall and market-places: the fish market is held in Fleming's-square. One side of this square is occupied by a spacious cloth-hall, built for the exhibition and sale of Yorkshire woollen-cloths, a great quantity of which is brought hither; but it is now seldom used for that purpose, the stalls for the sale of these cloths being erected in the streets. Blackburn is within the jurisdiction of the magistrates acting for the hundred to which it gives name, and which is co-extensive with the ancient Blackburnshire; and two high constables are appointed, one for the upper, and one for the lower, division, for which latter, together with Whalley, a court of petty-session is held here: its local concerns are under the superintendence of commissioners. An act was passed in 1841 for the more easy recovery of small debts within the town and other parts of the county; and in the same year another was obtained, vesting in the overseers of the poor the town moor for sale or other disposal. By the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the place has been constituted a borough, with the privilege of sending two members to parliament, to be elected by the £10 householders of the township, including about 4160 acres: the returning officer is appointed annually by the sheriff.

This extensive parish, which is fourteen miles in length, and ten in breadth, was formerly part of Whalley, on being separated from which it was, on account of its sterility, endowed with a fourth part of the tithes of that parish, in addition to its own. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 8.; net income, £893; patron and appropriator, Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, formerly the conventual church of the monastery of Whalley, was rebuilt in the reign of Edward III., and again in that of Henry VIII.; but in 1819 it was taken down, with the exception of the tower and the Dunken chapel, and a new building was completed in 1826, on the site of the old grammar school, at an expense of upwards of £30,000, raised by a rate: the Dunken chapel was used for the performance of parochial duties during the interval, but has been since taken down, so that the tower is the only part of the old church now remaining. The present spacious and elegant edifice is in the later English style, with a lofty square tower, highly enriched, and crowned with a pierced parapet and crocketed pinnacles; the roof of the nave was burned down in January, 1831. The district church of St. Paul remained unconsecrated from the time of its erection until a few years since, when it was united to the Establishment: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Blackburn, with a net income of £143. The district churches of St. John and St. Peter are both neat modern edifices: the livings are perpetual curacies; net income of St. John's, £150, and of St. Peter's, £153; they are in the patronage of the Vicar, in whom is also vested the presentation of the several perpetual curacies in the parish, with the exception of that of Salesbury. The chapel at Tockholes has been rebuilt, and was consecrated in 1834. At Lower Darwen, Over Darwen, and Mellor, district churches have been erected, partly by grants from the Parliamentary Commissioners; they are all in the later English style, with towers, and were begun in 1827, and completed in 1829. The church at Lower Darwen cost £5491; that at Over Darwen, £6573; and that at Mellor, which has a spire, £5275. District churches have also been lately built at Feniscowles and Bamber-Bridge, to the incumbents of which the Ecclesiastical Commissioners have granted augmentations of £70, and £75 per annum, respectively: that at Feniscowles is dedicated to Emanuel, and that at Bamber-Bridge to St. Saviour. At Witton is also a district church; and the first stone of another church, dedicated to the Trinity, was laid in May, 1843. There is, in the town, a place of worship each for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Warrenites, also a Scottish kirk and a Roman Catholic chapel; and in the parish are various other meeting-houses for different denominations. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Elizabeth, who placed it under the superintendence of fifty governors resident in the town, who are a corporate body, and appoint a master: it is endowed with land in the neighbourhood, producing £120 per annum; the premises are handsomely built of stone, and there are 30 boys on the foundation. The Rev. Robert Bolton, an eminent divine, and one of the compilers of the Liturgy, was a native of the town, and received the rudiments of his education in this school. In 1764, Mr. John Leyland bequeathed £250 for the instruction of girls, which sum has been augmented by subsequent benefactions, and at present 90 girls are taught and clothed. Several national schools have been erected; a dispensary was established in the year 1823; and there are a ladies' society for the relief of poor women during child-birth at their own houses, a strangers' friend society, and several other charitable institutions. The union of Blackburn comprises the entire parish, with the exception of the townships of Cuerdale and Samlesbury, which are in the union of Preston, together with four townships of the parish of Whalley; and contains a population of 75,091.

BLACK-BURTON.—See BURTON, BLACK.

BLACK-CARTS, forming with RYEHILL an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of HEXHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, and containing 17 inhabitants.

BLACK-CHAPEL, a chapelry, in the parish of GREAT WALTHAM, union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 9 miles (N. by W.) from Chelmsford. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of certain Trustees; net income, £20.

BLACKDEN, a township, in the parish of SANDBACH, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Knutsford; containing 266 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £70, and the vicarial for one of £52. 18. 6.

BLACKFORD, a chapelry, in the parish of WEDMORE, union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BEMPSTONE, E. division of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Axbridge. This place comprises by measurement 1600 acres; and stone of good quality for building is quarried. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Wedmore, with a net income of £105: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £150, and the impropriate glebe comprises 20 acres. The chapel is of modern erection towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society gave £200. The manor was given as part of the endowment of Bruton Hospital, by Hugh Saxey, Esq., the founder; and two boys are annually sent from this place to be educated at that institution. Here is a mineral spring.

BLACKFORD (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division, though locally in the hundred of HORETHORNE, E. division, of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Wincanton; containing 178 inhabitants. It is situated in a fertile vale on the road from London to Exeter, and comprises by measurement 566 acres of profitable land; the scenery is generally pleasing: there are quarries of stone for building and other purposes. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$; and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late J. H. Hunt, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £160, and there are nearly 25 acres of glebe, with a residence. The church is in the early English style, with a Norman arch over the entrance. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

BLACKFORDBY, a chapelry, in the parishes of ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH and SEAL, union of ASHBY, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Ashby; containing 478 inhabitants. The Ashby canal crosses the wolds south of this place. The chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by subscription.

BLACKHEATH, a village, in the parishes of GREENWICH, LEWISHAM, and LEE, hundred of BLACKHEATH, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 5 miles (S. E.) from London, on the road to Dover. This place, which takes its name either from the colour of the soil, or from the bleakness of its situation, was, prior to the erection of the numerous villas with which it now abounds, the scene of many important political transactions. In 1011, the Danes, having landed at Greenwich, encamped on the heath, and, among other barbarities, put to death Alphege, Archbishop of Canterbury, who had refused to sanction their extortions, and who was afterwards canonized. In the reign of Richard II., the insurgents under Wat Tyler, amounting to 100,000 men, took up their station here, whence they marched to London. In 1400, Henry IV. held an interview at the place with the Emperor of Constantinople, who came to solicit aid against Bajazet, Emperor of the Turks; and in 1415, the lord mayor and aldermen of London, in their robes of state, attended by 400 of the principal citizens, clothed in scarlet, came hither in procession to meet Henry V., on his triumphant return after the battle of Agincourt. In 1451, Henry VI. met many of the followers of Jack Cade, who submitted to his authority, and on their knees implored and obtained his pardon; and here, the following year, that monarch assembled his forces to oppose Richard, Duke of York, who aspired to the throne. In 1497, the Cornish rebels, headed by Lord Audley, who had advanced into Kent, encamped near Eltham, and awaited the approach of Henry VII., on whose arrival a battle ensued, on the 22nd of July, in which the insurgents were defeated, and their leader, together with two of his associates, taken and executed. In 1519, Campejo, the pope's legate, was received here in great state by the Duke of Norfolk, with a numerous retinue of bishops, knights, and gentlemen, who conducted him to a magnificent tent of cloth of gold, whence, after having arrayed himself in his cardinal's robes, he proceeded to London; and, at this place, in 1540, Henry VIII. appointed an interview with Ann of Cleves, previously to their marriage, which was celebrated with great pomp in the chapel at Greenwich.

Blackheath is pleasantly situated on elevated ground, commanding diversified and extensive views of the surrounding country, which is richly cultivated, and abounds with fine scenery, in which Greenwich hospital and park, and the river Thames, are prominent objects. There are many elegant villas, among which the Paragon, a handsome range of building, is eminently conspicuous: on the west, and within the park, is the residence of the Princess Sophia of Gloucester, formerly occupied by the Duchess of Brunswick. Wricklemarsh House, once the noblest ornament of the heath, erected early in the last century, by Sir Gregory Page, was razed to the ground in 1787, by the different purchasers to whom it had been sold in lots by public auction; its site now called Blackheath Park, is occupied by handsome villas. There are two episcopal chapels on that part of the heath in the parish of Lewisham, which are noticed in the article on that place. Another at Kidbrook, an extra-parochial district, on the north side of the heath, was built by Dr. Greenlaw; and on the declivity of the hill, opposite Kent-place, is the church of the Holy Trinity, in the early English style, with two towers, surmounted by spires, at its east end. St. Peter's church, in Blackheath Park, is an elegant structure of stone, of decorated and later English architecture, with a slender pinnacle tower, above which rises a beautiful spire; it forms a conspicuous and interesting object in the surrounding landscape, and was erected in 1829, by John Cator, Esq., at an expense of £15,000.

The free grammar school, for 31 boys of Lewisham and the adjoining parishes, and for the sons of all the clergy in the hundred of Blackheath, was founded by the Rev. Abraham Colfe, vicar of Lewisham, who erected the premises in 1652, and at his death, in 1656, bequeathed the greater part of his estate in land, and £1100 in money, in trust to the Leather-sellers' Company, for its endowment, and for other charitable uses: the income is £342. Blackheath proprietary school, in connexion with King's College, London, is a neat building, situated on the rise of the hill near Blackheath Park; and in Lec Park is a handsome building, after the model of the Propylæum at Athens, erected as a proprietary school for classical and general literature. Morden College, a noble institution for the support of decayed merchants in the decline of life, was founded by Sir John Morden, Bart., an opulent Turkey merchant, in 1695, who endowed it with the manor of Old Court: the establishment consists of 40 brethren, (each of whom receives £60 per annum, with attendance,) a chaplain, and a treasurer; and the management is vested in seven trustees, who must be either Turkey merchants, or directors of the East India Company. The premises, which occupy a spacious quadrangle, are handsomely built of brick, with quoins and cornices of stone, and are surrounded with a piazza: over the entrance are statues of the founder and his lady, whose portraits are in the hall; and in the chapel are the arms of Sir John, who was interred there in 1708. The Watling-street, or Roman road from London to Dovor, which passed over the heath, may still be traced: in 1710, several Roman urns were dug up, two of which were of fine red clay, one of a spherical, and the other of a cylindrical, form; and in 1803, several urns were discovered in the gardens of the Earl of Dartmouth, about a foot below the surface of the ground, which were presented by his lordship to the British Museum.

BLACKLAND (St. PETER), a parish, in the union, parliamentary borough, and hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Calne; containing 81 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 10. 10.; net income, £160; patron and incumbent, Rev. James Mayo. Allotments of land were assigned in 1813 in lieu of certain tithes.

BLACKLEY, a chapelry, in the parish and union of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Manchester; containing 3202 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in weaving, printing, bleaching, and dyeing cotton. The parish is situated on the road from Halifax to York, and near the Leeds and Manchester railway, which passes within a mile of the village. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £167, and in the gift of the Dean and Canons of the Collegiate Church of Manchester, to whom an allotment has been made of 4s. per acre on the land in the chapelry, in lieu of tithes: a parsonage-house has recently been erected. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was, previously to the Reformation, a domestic chapel belonging to Blackley Hall, and after a period of disuse, was purchased by the inhabitants, in 1610. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Socinians. A school has an endowment of £5 per annum; and in 1838, Miss Alsop, of Titchford Hall, founded another, and endowed it with £60 per annum.

BLACKMANSTONE, a parish, in the union and liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, though locally in the hundred of WORTH, lathc of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 3 miles (N. by E.) from New Romney; containing 10 inhabitants. It comprises 276 acres of pasture, and 12 of arable land, the latter being the glebe. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £4; net income, £36; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is in ruins.

BLACKMORE (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of ONGAR, hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Ingatestone; containing 709 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 2400 acres, of which about 100 are woodland, 800 pasture, and the rest arable; and derives its name from the dark colour of the soil, which is generally a rich wet loam and moderately fertile. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £83; patrons and impropriators, Representatives of the late C. A. Crickett, Esq. The church was the conventual church of a priory of Black canons, founded here by Adam and Jordan de Samford, and which was dissolved in the 17th of Henry VIII., when the revenue, amounting to £85. 9. 7., was applied by Cardinal Wolsey towards the endowment of his two colleges at Oxford and Ipswich, and on his attainder, in 1529, was appropriated to the crown. A school is partly supported by subscription. Blackmore was the frequent residence of Henry VIII., whose natural son, Henry Fitzroy, Duke of Somerset, was born here.

BLACKMORE, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of MELKSHAM, Melksham and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 279 inhabitants.

BLACKPOOL, a chapelry and bathing-place, in the township of LAYTON and WARBRICK, parish of BISHAM, union of the FYLDE, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Poulton, and 25 (S. W. by W.) from Lancaster; containing 1304 inhabitants. This place, which acquired its name from a boggy pool at the southern end of the village, was, until within the last 90 years, an inconsiderable hamlet; but, owing to its eligibility for bathing, it is now frequented every summer by numerous visitors, for whose accommodation hotels and lodging-houses have been erected. The beach slopes gently from the site of the houses; the sands are smooth and firm; and the air is highly salubrious. The parade forms an agreeable promenade, from which there is an extensive view of the fells in Westmorland and Cumberland, and the mountains in North Wales. A news-room and library have been established, a theatre erected, and assemblies are occasionally held at the different hotels. The sea appears to have encroached considerably on the shore; a large stone, called Penny-stone, lying on the sands about half a mile from the shore, is stated by tradition to mark the site on which a public-house formerly stood. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of certain Trustees; net income, £130. The chapel was built in 1821, at an expense of £1150. A free school, established in 1817, is conducted on Dr. Bell's plan.

BLACKROD, a chapelry, in the parish of BOLTON, union of WIGAN, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Chorley; containing 2615 inhabitants. This is the site of a Roman station, named Coccium by Antonine, and Rigodunum by Ptolemy, which was situated on the Watling-street. The spinning of cotton, and the printing of calico, are carried on; and the trade is facilitated by a branch of the Lancaster canal, which crosses the chapelry. A fair for toys and pedlery is held on the first Thursday after July 12th. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron, Vicar of Great Bolton. A rent-charge of £98 has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes payable to the Bishop of Chester. The chapel is dedicated to St. Catharine. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free grammar school, under the superintendence of trustees, is endowed with about £140 per annum, being the produce of various benefactions. John Holmes, in the year 1568, founded an exhibition at Pembroke College, Cambridge, for a scholar on this foundation; the fund having accumulated, three exhibitioners are now appointed, receiving respectively £60, £70, and £80 per annum, for four years.

BLACKTHORN, a chapelry, in the parish of AMBROSDEN, union of BICESTER, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Bicester; containing 380 inhabitants. The chapel is in ruins. The Roman Akeman-street enters the county here, and proceeds over Blackthorn Hill, in its course through the parish. The custom of running at the quintal, or quin-tain, the origin and practice of which are attributed to the Romans, was anciently observed on the occasion of a wedding in the chapelry.

BLACKTOFT, a parish, in the union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Blacktoft and Scalby, in which latter is included the extra-parochial place of Cheap-sides; and containing 552 inhabitants, of whom 333 are in the township of Blacktoft, 8 miles (E. S. E.) from Howden. The parish consists by computation of 2241 acres; the surface is level; the soil, which has been latterly much improved by warping, is now well drained; and the views are very fine, and include the adjacent hills of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. The village is situated on the northern bank of the Ouse, one mile above its confluence with the Trent, and occasionally many vessels ride opposite to it, its roads affording the best anchorage between Hull and Selby; and the steam-packets from those places pass daily. The river is very broad in this part, and leaves at low water an extensive bed of sand, which is used for the ballasting of small craft. The Hull and Selby railway crosses the parish near Scalby, about three miles distant. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Durham, who are the appropriators, and has a net income of £198, by augmentation from the patrons, with a new and convenient parsonage-house. The church is a neat substantial edifice, built in 1841, chiefly by subscription of the landowners, the Incorporated Society granting £150, for which 132 additional sittings, all free, were obtained.

BLACK TORRINGTON.—See TORRINGTON, BLACK.

BLACKWALL, a hamlet, in the parish of STEPNEY, borough of TOWER HAMLETS, union of POPLAR, Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Cornhill, London. This place, which is situated near the influx of the river Lea into the Thames, consists chiefly of a few irregularly-formed streets, which are paved and lighted with gas: the houses, many of which are of wood, and of mean appearance, are inhabited chiefly by shipwrights, and persons employed in the docks; they are supplied with water by the East London Company. It has long been noted for a very large private yard for ship-building, and a wet dock, once belonging to Mr. Perry; the former of which was purchased by Sir Robert Wigram, Bart., and is still applied to the same use; and the latter by the East India Dock Company, for the formation of their docks, which were commenced in 1804, and completed in 1806. These docks, situated at the eastern extremity of the hamlet, and surrounded by a lofty wall, consist of an outer and an inner dock, communicating by locks and flood-gates; the entrance from the river is by a basin, nearly three acres in extent, from which vessels sail directly into the docks. The inner, or import dock, which is 1410 feet in length, 560 in breadth, and of an average depth of 30 feet, occupies an area of eighteen acres, and, on the arrival of the fleets, affords accommodation for sixteen ships of the larger, and a proportionate number of the smaller, class to unload their cargoes: the outer, or export dock, is 760 feet long, and 463 wide, and of the same depth as the inner dock. At Blackwall reach, adjoining the hamlet, are the West India docks, similarly constructed, but upon a more extensive scale. These consist of two spacious docks parallel with each other, and of equal dimensions, being nearly half a mile in length, excavated in a direction crossing the isthmus of the Isle of Dogs, and having an entrance basin of large extent at each extremity, by which vessels sailing in either direction may avoid the circuitous bend of the river. In 1836, an act was obtained for making a railway from Fenchurch-street, London, to Blackwall, with branches to the East and West India Docks; and this work, which was begun with a capital of £600,000, afterwards augmented to £800,000, was opened to the public 4th July, 1840: it is worked by a pair of marine condensing engines placed at each end of the line. The station is on a very extensive scale, and the offices fronting the Brunswick wharf have a very imposing effect from the river.

BLACKWATER, a large village, in the parish of YATELY, hundred of CRONDALL, Odiham and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 15 miles (E. N. E.) from Basingstoke. It occupies a low situation on the great western road, at the point of junction of the three counties of Southampton, Surrey, and Berks, on the western bank of the river Blackwater, which is here crossed by a bridge: on the northern side of the road is a range of handsome buildings, appropriated as residences for the masters of the adjoining college of Sandhurst. A fair for cattle and sheep is held on Sept. 8th. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists.

BLACKWELL, or BLACKHALL, HIGH, a township, in the parish of St. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Carlisle; containing 315 inhabitants. The manor was given by Margaret de Wigton, heiress of Sir John de Wigton, to Sir Robert Parvinge, serjeant-at-law, and afterwards lord high chancellor, in the reign of Edward III., for successfully conducting her cause against Sir Robert de Bridekirk, who had impugned her title to the barony of Wigton. Thomas Lowrey, Esq., in 1779, bequeathed £200, directing that one-half of the interest should be given to a master for teaching children, seven of whom are taught under the endowment, and the remainder is given to poor widows; another, a "school of industry," containing 45 girls, is supported by subscription. In 1798, Grace Graham gave £100 to a school at Durdar, in the township.

BLACKWELL, or BLACKHALL, LOW, a township, in the parish of St. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, union of CARLISLE, E. division of the county of CUMBERLAND, 2 miles (S.) from the city of Carlisle; containing 181 inhabitants.

BLACKWELL, a township, in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Tideswell; containing 68 inhabitants.

BLACKWELL (St. WERBURGH), a parish, in the union of MANSFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Alfreton; containing 477 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1675 acres, and abounds in coal, which is close to the surface; two mines are at present worked, affording employment to a part of the population, and about 50 persons are engaged in the stocking manufacture. Stone is quarried for road-making. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 4. 2.; patron and impropiator, Duke of Devonshire, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £170, and the vicarial for one of £101: the glebe consists of an acre and a half. The church was rebuilt in 1824; its site is a bed of coal, which, a short distance from it, has a peculiar appearance, jutting out four or five yards above the turnpike-road: the churchyard contains one of the oldest yew-trees in England. There is a place of worship for dissenters.

BLACKWELL, a township, in the parish and union of DARLINGTON, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. W. by S.) from Darlington; containing 299 inhabitants. A stone bridge of three arches has been erected over the river Tees, which is navigable here; and a railway from Croft bridge to Darlington passes in the vicinity. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. At the Grange, in the township, then the property and residence of George Allan, Esq., was formerly an extensive collection of books, manuscripts, paintings, natural and artificial curiosities, and British birds stuffed, formed at a considerable expense by that gentleman, who had also a press, with which he printed several works, some of them very scarce: this ingenious topographer, antiquary, and virtuoso, the early part of whose life was spent in the profession of the law, died of paralysis, May 18th, 1800; and his museum of birds, &c., was purchased, several years after his decease, by the Natural History Society of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

BLACKWELL, a hamlet, in the parish of TREDINGTON, union of TEWKESBURY, Upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Blockley and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Shipton-upon-Stour; containing 204 inhabitants.

BLACKWOOD, with CROBOROUGH, a township, in the parish of HORTON, union of LEEK, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (W.) from Leek; containing 526 inhabitants.

BLACON, with CRAB-WALL, a township, in the parish of HOLY TRINITY, CHESTER, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Chester; containing 61 inhabitants. The Ellesmere canal passes in the vicinity.

BLADON (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (S.) from Woodstock; containing, with the hamlet of Hensington, 687 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the chapelry of New Woodstock annexed, valued in the king's books at £16. 0. 5.; net income, £329; patron, Duke of Marlborough. The church was built, at the expense of the late duke, in 1804, when the former, a fine ancient edifice, was taken down. A fortification, supposed to be of Saxon origin, is said to have existed here; and some records of a battle fought at this place are extant, of which the particulars are not detailed.

BLAENAU.—See ABERYSTWITH.

BLAENAVON, a parochial chapelry, chiefly in the parish of LLANOVER, division and hundred of ABERGAVENNY, county of MONMOUTH, 5 miles (S. W.) from Abergavenny. The village, which has of late assumed the appearance of a thriving town, is situated in a mountainous district, near the source of the Avon Lloyd, whence it derives its name; many of the houses are excavated in the solid rock. The neighbourhood abounds with iron-ore, coal, and limestone; and iron-works on an extensive scale, belonging to the Blaenavon Company, were completed in 1789, since which they have been progressively increasing: the greater portion of the pig-iron is conveyed by means of a canal and a tram-road to Newport, whence it is exported; and another portion, together with iron, coal, and limestone, is sent to Llanfoist, for supplying Abergavenny, Hereford, &c., on the same conveyance, round the Blorange mountain and down its declivities, by means of an inclined plane. A customary market is held on Saturday. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £114; patrons, the Blaenavon Company. There are two places of worship for Baptists; and for Presbyterians, and Calvinistic, Primitive, and Wesleyan, Methodists, one each. Near the iron-works stands a spacious free school, on the national plan, endowed, in 1816, by Mrs. Sarah Hopkins.

BLAGDON, a tything, in the parish of CRANBORNE, union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of MONCKTON-UP-WIMBORNE, WIMBORNE division of DORSET; containing 36 inhabitants.

BLAGDON, a township, in the parish of STANNINGTON, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Morpeth. This place, which lies on the south side of the Blyth, was formerly called Blakedene, and was part of the ancient barony of Morpeth: the family of Plessey had some interest in the soil in the 13th century, the Hiltons and Widdringtons were also among the proprietors of land here, and the family of Fenwick flourished on the spot for three centuries, the 15th, 16th, and 17th; it is now the property of Sir M. White Ridley, Bart., who resides at Blagdon Hall. The present mansion owes its origin to M. White, Esq., who died in 1749, since which time valuable additions and improvements have been made; it is a very extensive pile, and the main front, facing the south, has a sumptuous suite of rooms on the ground-floor, consisting of a saloon, dining and drawing-rooms, and library, in all 135 feet long. The Blakedene, bordered by forest-trees, runs behind the house, on the north.

BLAGDON, a tything, in the parish of PITMINSTER, union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Taunton. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BLAGDON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Axbridge; containing 1178 inhabitants. This is said to have been anciently a royal residence; and some ruins at Reg-hill-bury are traditionally asserted to be the remains of the palace. The parish comprises an area of about 4000 acres, in good cultivation, and the scenery is pleasingly diversified. The substrata are chiefly limestone, which is burnt for manure, and sandstone of good quality for building; lapis calaminaris is also found. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £29. 13. 9.; net income, £430; patron, James George, Esq. The church, with the exception of the tower, which is of elegant design, has been rebuilt within the last few years, by subscription, aided by a grant of £500 from the Incorporated Society. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Thomas Baynard, in 1687, gave land, now producing an income of £17. 10., for the instruction of children. A school for girls, on the national plan, is supported by subscription. John Leman gave land for apprenticing children, which now yields £13 per annum, and there are other bequests for the benefit of the poor. Dr. John Langhorne, the poet and miscellaneous writer, and for some time rector of the parish, is interred in the churchyard; a son of Isaac Casaubon was also rector, and the celebrated Toplady was for two years curate.

BLAGRAVE, with HADLEY, a tything, in the parish and hundred of LAMBOURN, union of HUNGERFORD, county of BERKS; containing 446 inhabitants, of whom 204 are in Blagrave. The place comprises 3065*a*. 20*r*. 14*p*.

BLAISDON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union and hundred of WESTBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 9 miles (W.) from Gloucester; containing 264 inhabitants. The village was considerably reduced by fire, in 1699, which event is recorded on a tablet in the church, stating that the damage was estimated at £4210. 18. 9. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Anna Gordon.

BLAKEMERE (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union of WEBLEY, hundred of WEBTREE, county of HEREFORD, 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Hereford; containing 183 inhabitants. On the south-west the parish, consisting of 898 acres, is bounded by very elevated ground. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Preston-upon-Wye, and valued in the king's books at £3.

BLAKENEY, a chapelry, in the parish of AWRE, union of WESTBURY, hundred of BLEDISLOE, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 15 miles (S. W. by W.) from Gloucester. The village is pleasantly situated near the river Severn, which is here navigable. Fairs are held on the 12th of May and of November. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £232; patrons, the Haberdashers' Company, London. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

BLAKENEY (St. Nicholas, St. Mary, and St. Thomas the Apostle), a small sea-port, post-town, and parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 26 miles (N. N. W.) from Norwich, and 134 (N. E.) from London; containing 1021 inhabitants. This place was called Snitterley, in the time of Henry III., who granted it a market: it assumed its present name in the reign of Edward III., in the 31st of which a statute was passed for the regulation of the fish trade, which was then carried on to a large extent, and attracted a great number of German merchants, several of whom fixed their residence in the town. It is chiefly noted for its excellent harbour, which is well situated for sheltering vessels, and has been improved under an act obtained in 1817: the trade consists principally in coal, timber, and deals, hemp, iron, tar, tallow, oil-cakes, &c., of which the importation is considerable; the exports are chiefly corn and flour. There is an ancient guildhall in the town, relative to which some old deeds are yet extant. The parish comprises 1061*a*. 10*p*.; the soil is chiefly of a sandy nature, but beds of chalk are found in various parts, and between the towns of Blakeney and Clay runs the river

Glaven, which, emptying itself into the sea, assists in forming the harbour. The LIVING is a rectory, united to those of Little Langham, Glandford, and Cockthorpe, and valued in the king's books at £26. 13. 4.; patron, Lord Calthorpe. The tithes for Blakeney have been commuted for a rent-charge of £170, and an allotment of land was assigned in lieu of tithes in 1820; the glebe consists of 16 acres, and a good house. The church, which stands on an elevation a little to the south of the town, is a handsome and spacious structure, partly in the early, and partly in the later, English style, with a lofty embattled tower which serves as a land-mark to mariners. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school, conducted on the national system, is chiefly supported by Lord Calthorpe. There are some slight remains, consisting principally of several fine arches, of an ancient monastery for Carmelites, or White Friars, of which Sir William de Roos, Knt., and the Lady Maud his wife, were among the chief founders; it was established in 1295, and was dedicated "to the honour of God, and the Virgin Mary." In this monastery John de Baconthorpe, a learned divine and acute metaphysician, became a friar, and ultimately provincial of the English Carmelites; he was born here, and died in London, in 1346.

BLAKENHALL, a township, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Nantwich; containing 257 inhabitants. A school is supported by Sir John Delves Broughton's charity.

BLAKENHAM, GREAT, or SUPER AQUAS (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Ipswich; containing 180 inhabitants. Walter Gifford, Earl of Buckingham, appropriated the manor, in the time of William II., to the abbey of Bec, in Normandy, the society of which established a cell here, which being suppressed with other alien priories, the manor was given by Henry VI. to Eton College. The Stow-Market and Ipswich canal passes along the south-eastern side of the parish, which comprises 869*a.* 1*r.* 8*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the College: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £195, and there are upwards of eight acres of glebe.

BLAKENHAM, LITTLE, or SUPER MONTEM (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. W.) from Ipswich; containing 119 inhabitants, and comprising 1046*a.* 1*r.* 9*p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 4.; patron, Postle Jackson, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £244, and the glebe consists of 33 acres.

BLAKESLEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of TOWCESTER, hundred of GREENS-NORTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Towcester; containing 830 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3834*a.* 1*r.* 3*p.*, of which 2175*a.* 1*r.* 3*p.* are in the portion exclusively of the hamlet of Woodend; the soil varies from poor cold clay to warm red gravel and loam; the surface is gently undulated, and since the inclosure, about eighty years ago, nearly two-thirds of the land have been laid out in pasture. A branch of the Tow, which rises at Preston, runs through the parish for about two miles. Quarries of red sandstone are worked for building, and limestone for mending roads. A statute fair is held on the first Friday after the 22nd of September. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 17.; net income, £176; patron, P. W. Wright, Esq. In 1760, land was assigned in lieu of tithes, and by the late act a rent-charge of £43. 7. is paid to the impropiator, and one of £41. 6. to the vicar; there are ten acres of glebe. A free school was founded by William Foxley, in 1669, and endowed with property now producing about £85 per annum; and a Sunday school is endowed with a bequest of £200 by Sir John Knightley, Bart. There are also other charities. Blakesley Hall was anciently a religious house, occupied by a fraternity of the order of St. John of Jerusalem; and among a number of productive farms, is one of 200 acres, once the property of Dryden, the celebrated poet.
